*Jurisdiction of Court—Appellate Court assuming jurisdiction—Second appeal—Revision—Execution of decree—Orders passed, whether appealable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2) (b), scope of.*

If an Appellate Court having no jurisdiction to hear an appeal assumes jurisdiction and passes an order, a second appeal would lie, and in any case the High Court would have power to revise that order. [p. 1, col. 2.]

An order passed in execution is not appealable merely because it fulfils the conditions laid down in s. 47, C. P. C. In order to be appealable, it must fall within the definition of decree in s. 2 (2), C. P. C. [ibid.]

The expression "any order of dismissal for default" in sub-cl. (b) of s. 2 (2), C. P. C., is not confined to suits only, but it also covers an order of an Execution Court dismissing the objections of an objector judgment-debtor for default. [p. 2, col. 1.]

Execution second appeal against a decree of the Fourth Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 4th May 1925.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. S K. Dar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of certain execution proceedings. A decree, which was more than three years old, was put in execution and notice was served on the judgment-debtor to show cause why it should not be executed. He filed written objections admitting certain payments made out of Court and yet pleading that the application was barred by time. On the date fixed for the hearing of objections, he did not appear. The Court passed the following order:—

"Objector absent. Objection dismissed for default."

From this order the judgment-debtor appealed to the lower Appellate Court, which came to the conclusion that, even though the judgment-debtor was absent, the Court ought to have considered the plea of limitation on its merits and should have disposed of it. Instead of deciding the point of limitation itself as it was urged by the judgment-debtor, the lower Appellate Court thought that an opportunity should be given to the decree-holder to show cause, if he can, that his application was within time. The case was accordingly remanded for disposal according to law.

The decree-holder urges that no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court, which, therefore, had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the first Court. A preliminary objection is raised that, if no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court, no appeal lies to this Court. This objection, in my opinion, has no force. The lower Appellate Court has assumed jurisdiction and passed an order on appeal. A second appeal would, therefore, lie. In any case, if no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court, it has acted on an assumed jurisdiction, and I would have power in revision to revise that order.

The substantial point in the case is whether an appeal lay from the order passed by the Execution Court. An order passed in execution cannot be appealable merely because it fulfils the conditions laid down in s. 47. In order to be appealable, it must fall within the definition of decree in s. 2, sub-cl. (2). If this were not the correct interpretation of the section, the result would be that every order passed in the Execution Department, for instance a refusal to adjourn the case, would become automatically appealable, which of course is not the law. In order to be appealable the order must amount to a formal expression of adjudication, which conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all controversial matters in suits (and includes the determination of any question within s. 47, but does not include any order of dismissal for default).

If objections are filed and there is adjudication inter parties with regard to the points of controversy, an appeal would lie; but s. 2, sub-cl. (2) (b), expressly exempts an order of dismissal for default. Such orders are not decrees, nor have they been made appealable orders. It follows, therefore, that no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court.

It has been contended before me that the expression "order of dismissal for default" refers to dismissal of suits for default. I am not prepared to put such a narrow meaning to this expression. The order of the Execution Court was certainly an order dismissing the objection for default. It, therefore, cannot be called a decree so as to be appealable. In this view of the matter, no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court, and that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. I accordingly set aside the order passed by the lower Appellate Court and restore the original order passed by the first Court. It is unnecessary for me to state what remedy the judgment-debtor now has against the order of dismissal for default.

The question of the want of jurisdiction was, however, not raised before the lower Appellate Court. It is raised for the first time in this Court. I, therefore, direct that the parties should bear their own costs of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

The limitation for a suit for non-delivery of goods of various shipments, starts from the last day of the arrival of the last shipment and no cause of action accrues to the plaintiff until then. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that this second appeal was time-barred as though it was filed within time it was not accompanied by an attested copy of the first Court's judgment though there was an unattested copy of that judgment filed with the appeal. It is clear, however, that an attested copy was applied for but was not supplied, the report being that the record could not be traced. In my opinion there has been a sufficient compliance with the law in these circumstances. It is true that up to date no attested copy has been placed on this record but the appellant is ready to do so. I see no reason to call upon him to put such an attested copy upon the record and overrule the objection.

The suit was one for non-delivery of five bales of white mulls which the defendants had contracted to sell to the plaintiffs on the 17th November, 1916. The suit was instituted on the 30th July 1920. The contract was for five bales of white mulls, December shipment three lots, 60 days grace, payment to be against Railway receipts and invoices. Various defences were raised and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the due date of the first instalment, i. e., the December shipment, expired about the 30th June, 1917, and that the suit as regards that instalment was accordingly time-barred. He held, however, that the suit for the other two instalments was within time and he accepted the appeal and granted the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 356-4-0 with proportionate costs in both Courts. Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed while the defendants have filed cross-objections.

The principal point argued before me was the question of limitation. It was contended that the lower Appellate Court erred in dividing the contract into several parts for purposes of limitation and that the whole contract should have been treated as an indivisible one and not an instalment contract. It is unnecessary to labour this point for it is covered by authority. Two Division Benches of this Court have held that a contract such as the present one was not an instalment contract, that the defendants could have delivered goods under it up to the last day of arrival of the last shipment and that the plaintiffs could not sue for damages for breach of contract until that date had expired. These rulings are Phul Chand-Fateh Chand v. Chhote Lal-Amba Perhsad (1) and Civil Appeal No. 1000 of 1925. All the points taken in this appeal and in the cross-objections are covered by these two authorities. I, therefore, hold that the whole claim was within time.

The District Judge found that the due date for the last instalment was the 30th August 1917. It was contended, however, that here again he erred as there is good evidence which he did not consider that March shipments were arriving in September, 1917. It is clear that the defendants could have shipped the goods up to March 1917 at least and as such shipments were still arriving at Karachi in September 1917 no breach of contract took place till then. After the goods arrive it takes about a week to clear them and then the documents have to be posted to Delhi through some Bank for acceptance. This would certainly take us to the 26th September, 1917 and there is evidence that on that date the rate was Rs. 6-10-0. The contract rate plus forwarding charges comes to Rs. 5-6-0. The difference is Rs. 1-4-0. This has to be multiplied by Rs. 750 so that the plaintiffs' suit should have been decreed for Rs. 937-8-0 whereas the learned District Judge only allowed Rs. 356-4-0.

I accordingly accept this appeal by raising the amount decreed by the learned District Judge from Rs. 356-4-0 to Rs 937-8-0, i. e., by raising it by the sum of Rs. 581-4-0. The appellant will have his costs on the latter sum in this Court and on the sum of Rs. 937-8-0 in the two lower Courts. The cross-objections are dismissed but without costs.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for recovery of nine plots of land from the defendants-respondents. The land in suit was originally the holding of one Ahmad Khan, brother-in-law of the plaintiff. He transferred the holding by a deed of gift to the plaintiff on the 17th May 1919. The plaintiff's case is that he also got a new lease from the co-sharers in the year following, namely, on the 5th August 1920. Ahmad Khan died in November 1921. The following month it appears that a lease was given to the defendants-respondents who have obtained possession of the holding. The plaintiff sues alternatively on the basis of the deed of gift and of the lease. The first Court held that the lease granted to the plaintiff on the 5th August 1920 was invalid, as it was granted during the continuance of Ahmad Khan's lease. The lower Appellate Court upheld this finding and also found that the two lambardars along with some only of the co-sharers were not entitled to execute a lease.

The plaintiff's Counsel has argued that s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act will apply to give the plaintiff title as a tenant on the death of Ahmad Khan. It is unnecessary to invoke s. 43. The deed of gift by Ahmad Khan coupled with the lease by the zemindar to the plaintiff is sufficient evidence that Ahmad Khan had given up the tenancy before the lease was given to the plaintiff. The fact that Ahmad Khan was alive is no bar to the validity of this lease. The second point taken is one of greater difficulty, but I hold that the lower Appellate Court's decision was wrong. A lambardar may, by established usage, or with the consent of the whole body of co-sharers, have the power to grant leases. The practice is so convenient and, in these Provinces, so prevalent, that it may be presumed to exist unless the contrary is proved. Here it was not disproved. If one or both the lambardars were entitled to give a lease, the fact of other co-sharers also signing would not invalidate the lease. Nor could it be treated as evidence subversive of the practice. On this view, both the leases were valid and the plaintiff's lease was the earlier.

The question of what order should now be given is, however, not free from difficulty. The plaintiff first brought a suit in the Revenue Court under s. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act on the allegation that he was given possession by the landlords after the execution of the lease in his favour, and had been ejected by the landlords and the present defendants-respondents. The first Court held that the suit failed as the plaintiff never having been in possession could not have been ejected. In appeal the Commissioner upheld the dismissal of the suit on two grounds, (a) that the landlord was not entitled to give the lease as Ahmad Khan's tenancy was still subsisting at the time and (b) that it was not proved that the lambardar signed the lease. In this appeal, I have dissented from both these findings. With the former I disagree on the merits, and with the latter because the lower Appellate Court in this suit found as a fact that the lambardars did sign the plaintiff's lease, and this decision has not been impugned by the respondents. Now in the present suit the first Court under the issue "Is the plaintiff a tenant of the plots in suit" has decided that the plaintiff's lease was ineffectual to give him any rights, and it is this finding which I have now reversed in this second appeal. The issue was, however, wrongly framed. It is clear that if the plaintiff never got possession, the validity of the lease would not make him a tenant. A tenant is a person liable to pay rent, and the plaintiff would not be liable to pay rent until put in possession. I should have held if it were necessary that the plaintiff, subsequent to the lease, held possession through Ahmad Khan, but, having regard to the pleadings in this case, I cannot hold this, because the point does not arise. The plaintiff has elected to fight the case on the hypothesis that he did not get possession, and the defendants have agreed that he did not get possession. Indeed, if he had got possession, the suit could not be brought in the Civil Court as the jurisdiction of the Civil Court would be barred by s. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act. As brought, it is clear that the claim is not barred by s. 108 (10). Nor again can there be any question of the Revenue Court's decision operating as res judicata in respect of the present suit, because assuming that the plaintiff never got possession, and, therefore, is not a tenant, the present suit could not have been decided by the Revenue Court, and so the matter involved in the present suit was not one which the Revenue Court was competent to try. The first Court in this case dismissed the suit on the preliminary finding that the lease set up by the plaintiff gave him no right. That finding has now been reversed. The remaining three issues framed by the first Court, which it did not decide are:—

1. Is the suit barred by the principles of res judicata?
2. Is the claim barred by s. 108 (10) of the Oudh Rent Act, and
3. To what relief and damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

The first two of these issues I have already decided in the above remarks. As to the last, the claim is one based on contract, but it will only lie against the landlords for failing to deliver possession after executing a lease. There was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. There was no trespass by the defendants, as the plaintiff never got possession. As to the claim for possession, the lease gave the plaintiff a right to occupy the holding and that right can be enforced not merely against the landlords but also against the defendants as persons who hold from them. The landlords should have been joined as defendants, but this will not prevent a decree against the defendants for possession only. As the landlords have not been parties to the suit, the execution of a decree will not operate to give the plaintiff any better position against them than if the plaintiff had obtained possession from the defendants by consent or force. Accordingly, I direct that the appeal be allowed with half his costs to the plaintiff in all the Courts, since the plaintiff's valuation of the holding is Rs. 250, and his valuation of damages is Rs. 250. The plaintiff will get a decree for the ejectment of the defendants from the holding in suit.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the lands in suit appertained to a niskar which they possessed in the village Banki. The facts of the case shortly stated are these: The plaintiffs apparently had a niskar in the village Banki comprising 41 and odd bighas of land covered by a sanad in the name of their ancestor Sahib Ram. The lands in suit really form the site of what is called a garkhai. The plaintiffs further stated that in the year 1903 the villagers of Banki and of other neighbouring villages complained against obstruction put by the plaintiffs on the water of that garkhai and the Criminal Court took proceedings under s. 133, Cr. P. C. which resulted in an order against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then brought a suit in the year 1904 for a declaration that the property was their niskar and that the defendants had no right of easement as claimed by them and as had been established in the proceedings under s. 133, Cr P. C. The plaintiffs in that suit impleaded some of the representative tenants of the villages of which villagers claimed the right of easement in question. The proprietors of the village Banki who are the defendants in the present suit were not parties in that suit. Nor did they form members of the class which claimed the right of easement in the proceedings under s. 133, Cr. P. C. Now that suit was finally dismissed by the Appellate Court on the 21st May, 1906, by which the plaintiffs' claim to stop the villagers from claiming the easement which they had established in the criminal proceedings under s. 133 was disallowed. Therefore, the result of that suit was that the villagers of Banki and the neighbouring villages were declared entitled to exercise the right of easement which they claimed when they asked for the removal of the obstruction put up by the plaintiffs. In the year 1919, the Record of Rights was published in which the lands together with the garkhai was recorded as appertaining to the mal lands of the village Banki. The plaintiffs brought the present suit basing their cause of action from the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights.

In the present case which is against the proprietors of the village Banki, the plaintiffs ask for a declaration of their niskar right and also for confirmation of their possession in that right.

The defendants, the proprietors of Banki, claimed the lands, as recorded, as appertaining to their mehal Banki and also pleaded res judicata and limitation.

The Court of first instance found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and made a decree in their favour. On appeal, however, by the defendants the lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs have established that the lands in dispute were the niskar lands of the plaintiffs appertaining to the niskar of 41 and odd bighas of land which they claimed under the sanad to which I have already referred. The lower Appellate Court affirmed the decree of the first Court with regard to plot No. 2 but dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as regards plot No. 1 on two grounds, namely, that of res judicata and that of limitation.

The learned Advocate, who appears in support of this appeal by the plaintiffs contends that the decision of the previous suit instituted in 1904 which terminated by the judgment of the Appellate Court dated the 21st May 1905 does not form a bar of res judicata.

The next ground that he takes is that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the suit was barred by limitation is erroneous.

I think these contentions are well-founded. Now, as to the question of res judicata it appears to us that the judgment in the suit of 1904 is no bar to the present claim of the plaintiff for these reasons—that suit was instituted by the plaintiffs primarily for a declaration that the defendant in that suit had not the right of easement claimed upon the property then in question. The parties to that suit were the villagers who claimed the right of easement upon this property. The landlords of the village Banki, were not parties. Nor did they in any sense claim the right which the defendants in that suit claimed. In fact the defendants in that suit alleged that the right of easement which they claimed was based upon a grant made by the proprietors of the village Banki. Therefore, it appears from the circumstances that the title which the defendants in that suit set up was not any title in themselves but title in the zemindars of the village Banki, who were no parties to that suit. Really that suit was dismissed on the ground that it was established to the satisfaction of the Court that the villagers were entitled to the right of easement claimed by them. From the facts, which I have already stated, it is quite clear that there was no determination of any question of title to this property as between the plaintiffs and the other claiming the proprietary right in the village Banki in their zemindari right. The decision in that suit, therefore, cannot operate as res judicata on the question as to whether the property appertains to the plaintiffs or to the proprietors of the village Banki.

As to the second question it appears to us that the property in question is a piece of land covered with water. The user which the defendants in that suit set up was the occasional user of the water in the exercise of their right of easement. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs also possessed the land as did the other members of the public. But the other members of the public exercised only the right of easement and nothing more. The proprietor of a piece of land over which the members of the public exercise a right of easement does not lose his right to the land as proprietor of the land on account of the occasional user for the purpose of exercising the right of easement. Considering the nature of the property and the nature of the user possible of such property we think the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge do not amount to any finding that the plaintiffs who are the owners of the property were excluded from the user of the land in their proprietary right. In a case like this the possession of the parties would really be determined by the question of title. As I have already stated the land in suit is covered with water. That being so we think the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is not sufficient for the purpose of holding that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. For these reasons we think the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge ought to be set aside and the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance ought to be restored with costs of this appeal and of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

If the parties to a suit relating to a landed property agree not to produce any evidence and to be bound by the decision of the Court arrived at after an inspection of the locality, such decision is binding on the parties and is not appealable.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 5th October 1925.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In the course of a pending suit brought by the plaintiffs for a permanent injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the construction of a certain wall by the plaintiffs and for damages, the Pleaders for the parties accompanied by their clients, stated that the sole question in dispute was whether the wall in question belonged to the plaintiffs or the defendants, and that the Court might inspect the locality and the parties shall be bound by the decision at which the Court would arrive on such an inspection. They also stated that they did not want to produce any evidence, oral or documentary, and that the plaintiffs were giving up their claim for damages. The Court fixed a date for the inspection of the locality and in the light of the khasra and the copy of the khasra abadi map on the record, and the measurements made on the spot, it came to the conclusion that both the parties were in possession of an area in excess of that given in the khasra of the village, that they had encroached upon the land belonging to the Government and that the disputed wall was within the boundary of the house of the plaintiffs. Having recorded that finding it decreed the claim of the plaintiffs and granted an injunction in the terms prayed for. One of the defendants subsequently tried to resile from that agreement and filed an appeal from that decision to the lower Appellate Court, which was dismissed. As observed in Sita Ram v. Peare (1) in similar circumstances, it was not open to either party to resile from the agreement and that the decision of the Presiding Judge arrived at after an inspection of the locality was binding and no longer open to appeal. In Ram Sunder Misra v. Jai Kiran Singh (2) where the defendant had made an offer to the plaintiffs that if a certain witness in the case would eat kachcha food served by the plaintiff, the suit should be decreed, it was held that the offer was perfectly lawful. In Cihnna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naiken (3) a reference of a pending suit to the arbitration of a Presiding Judge along with others as arbitrators was held to be a proceeding extra cursum curiæ and a decree passed in accordance with their decision was treated as a consent decree, not subject to the provisions of the Second Schedule of the C. P. C., and was, therefore, final. As the parties had stated that there would be no further evidence adduced and agreed to abide by the decision of the Court after the inspection of the locality, that decision must be regarded as final. The appeal is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs seek to recover the land in dispute from the defendant Maula Bakhsh on the strength of a deed executed by certain persons in favour of a mosque, and the question debated before us is whether the document required compulsory registration. Now, the document purports to be a deed of gift and the executants describe themselves as donors. The property transferred is described as arazi mahuba and the document itself is called hibanama. In view of the clear and unequivocal terms of the deed we have no hesitation in holding that it is a transfer of immoveable property made without consideration. It is beyond dispute that under cl. (a) of s. 17 (1) of the Indian Registration Act every instrument of gift of immoveable property requires compulsory registration irrespective of the value of the property conveyed by the instrument.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs, however, invites our attention to the definition of the word "gift," as contained in s. 122 of the Transfer of Property Act; and contends that a transfer cannot be called a gift unless it is made by one person to another person, and that the mosque cannot be deemed to be a person within the meaning of the section. The answer to this contention is furnished by the judgment of the Division Bench in Jindu Ram v. Hussain Baksh (1) where Mr. Justice Shah Din after reciting the relevant passages from Abdur Rahman's Muhammadan Jurisprudence and Tyabji's Muhammadan Law, expressed the opinion that mosque is recognised by the Muhammadan jurists as a juristic person, and that a valid gift can be made in favour of a mosque.

In view of the exposition of the law contained in Jinda Ram v. Hussain Bakhsh (1) we must hold that the document is a deed of gift, and that it cannot be received in evidence for want of registration. Nor can the terms of the instrument be proved by oral evidence. We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., it is the duty of the Court to settle the proclamation of sale and it cannot delegate that power to Commissioner appointed by it.

A sale held without the proclamation therefor having been settled by the Court is invalid.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, South Malabar, dated the 4th April 1921, 28th November 1923, in M. P. No. 51 of 1921, in M. P. No. 92 of 1921, and M. P. No. 221 of 1923, in O. S. No. 4 of 1917 respectively.

Mr. K. Kutti Krishna Menon, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. V. Krishna Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first point raised in this appeal is that the proclamation of sale was not settled by the Court but that the Commissioner appointed by the Court after the preliminary decree prepared the proclamation of sale and sold the property. It is for the Court to settle the proclamation of sale and it could not delegate that power to the Commissioner appointed by it. Order XXI, r. 66 directs that when any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court and then such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and shall state the time and place of sale and specify as fairly and accurately as possible the property to be sold and a number of things. It is also contended that the appellant was not allowed to bid at the auction. The learned Judge relying upon the report of the Receiver has dismissed the appellant's application to set aside the sale. Even if the appellants was aware of the contents of the proclamation prepared by the Receiver that would not relieve the Court of its duty of settling the proclamation. As the records stand at present we are unable to say whether the allegation of the appellant is true or false. If the proclamation was not settled by the Court, the sale would be invalid. As the learned District Judge has not taken evidence in support of the allegations in the petition and as the auction-purchasers are not represented here, we think the proper course would be to set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to restore the application of the appellant to file and dispose of it after taking such evidence as may be adduced by him and other parties to the suit. Costs of this appeal will abide the result and be provided for in the order that will be passed by the District Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 11, O. XXXVII, rr. 2 (2), 4—Summary suit—Defendant not obtaining leave to defend—Right to ask for instalments—Instalments, procedure for grant of.

In a summary suit under the provisions of O. XXXVII, C. P. C., unless a defendant has obtained leave to defend, he cannot be allowed to appear on the hearing and make an application for stay of execution or for payment of the decree by instalments. Such a defendant may either apply for instalments under O. XX, r. 11 (2) which relief can be granted only with the consent of the decree-holder or under O. XXXVII, r. 4 ask the Court to grant him any of the reliefs mentioned therein.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. Coltman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff filed a summary suit against the defendant to recover a sum of Rs. 25,000 with interest thereon on a hundi dated December 19, 1924. The defendant did not obtain leave from the Judge, as provided in O. XXXVII, r. 3, to appear and to defend the suit. Accordingly under sub-r. (2) of r. 2, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint should be deemed to be admitted and the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree. Order XXXVII, contemplates, then, that the Court shall pass a decree in a summary suit where the defendant has obtained no leave to appear and defend. But in this case it seems that the defendant's attorney was allowed to appear to make an application for the stay of execution of the decree up to the following Diwali, or in the alternative for payment of the decree by instalments. An objection was raised at the time on behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant could not be heard as no leave had been obtained. The Judge, however, was of opinion that although the defendant could not be heard on the merits of the case, he might be heard on the question whether the decree should be made payable by instalments. Accordingly, after hearing the parties, the Judge made an order that the decretal amount should be payable by monthly instalments.

The plaintiff has appealed, although it is admitted that the decretal amount has already been paid. At any rate, he will have the satisfaction of getting a decision on an interesting question of procedure. Under O. XX, r. 11, sub-r. (1):

"Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may for any sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments, with or without interest, notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable."

That sub-r. (1) clearly contemplates that the application for instalments should be part of the hearing and an order made simultaneously with the decree. Ordinarily speaking then, a person who cannot appear at the hearing cannot be allowed to appear in order to apply for payment of the decretal amount by instalments.

Under sub-r. (2) of r. 11 of O. XX:—

"After the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit."

No order can be made under sub-r. (2) except with the consent of the decree-holder, and that is a very important provision in his favour. It may be, as the Judge remarks, that in an ordinary case where the defendant appears, the Court first decrees payment for a certain sum in favour of the plaintiff, and then hears the defendant with regard to the question of instalments. But it still remains one proceeding. The hearing is not finished until a complete decree is passed directing, as the case may be, that the decretal amount should be payable at once or by instalments. The important point to notice is that the defendant in a summary suit cannot be allowed to appear while the hearing is proceeding, and in this case, in my opinion, the Judge was wrong in allowing the defendant's attorney to appear before a decree had been passed in accordance with the plaint. Thereafter he could have applied under sub-r. (2), when the decree-holder would have an opportunity of either consenting to the application or withholding his consent.

There is another way open to the defendant who has not obtained leave to appear and defend in a summary suit. He may, under O. XXXVII, r. 4, ask the Court to grant him any of the reliefs mentioned therein.

The appeal will be allowed. The appellant is entitled to his costs of the appeal.

Bengal Troops Transport and Traveller's Assistance Regulation (XI of 1806), s. 3 (1) paras. 3, 4—Impressing cart against owner's will—Native officer, power of.

In case of carts let on hire, the native and Police Officer referred to in paras. 3 and 4 of s. 3, cl. (1) of the Bengal Troops Transport and Traveller's Assistance Regulation can legally impress them against the consent of their owner.

Mr. S. Saran, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. L. N. Sinha, Government Pleader, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, A. C. J.—The native officer is directed by para. 3 of s. 3 of the Regulation to provide the troops with whatever bearers, boatmen, carts and bullocks may be necessary to prosecute their route. The next paragraph empowers him in case of difficulty to seek the assistance of the nearest Police Officer who is to afford his aid in providing the number of persons and of carts and bullocks required. The section does not in terms empower the native officer or the Police to impress any carts or bullocks against the will of their owner but it is obvious that this is intended. It is not necessary here to consider whether private carts can be seized but as regards carts ordinarily let out on hire it is impossible to conceive that when a regiment is on the line of march the refusal of the owner would be sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the officer concerned. That could not have been intended by s. 3 having regard to the object for which it was enacted. This is made clearer by comparison with s. 8 which relates to the supply of carts, etc., to military officers not commanding or proceeding with a corps or detachment and to other persons passing through the country. The third paragraph of this section by implication empowers the Police Officer to impress carts kept for hire and to compel bearers and boatmen who are accustomed to act as such to undertake such involuntary service. From this it would appear that in the case of regiments on the march it is certainly open to the native officer or the Police Officer to impress carts or bullocks which are ordinarily let out for hire.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the Regulation could not have intended to empower the native officer to use means which were contrary to law and thereby encroach upon the liberty of the subject. But the answer to this is that when a Statute confers a power it implies that the donee of that power shall be competent to do all that is needful for its exercise subject to the limitation that he cannot go beyond what is reasonable. If, in order to carry out the law, he does something which the Courts consider in the circumstances unreasonable, he will be guilty of a tort.

The answer, therefore, to the question put by the learned Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, is in the affirmative.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree that in case of carts let on hire, the native and Police Officer referred to in paras. 3 and 4 of s. 3, cl. (1) of the Regulation can legally impress them against the consent of their owner.

Hindu Law—Guardianship—Minor wife, custody of.

Under Hindu Law husband is the natural guardian of the minor wife and is entitled to her custody unless good cause be shown to the contrary. The fact that a girl is not mature would be a ground for the Court refusing to give the custody of his wife to a husband unless her parents were dead and the Court could be convinced that no attempt to enter into conjugal relations would be made before maturity. [p. 12, col. 1.]

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jayakar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The petitioner was married to the minor in May 1922. The minor was born on December 29, 1910, and was, therefore, 11½ years old at the time of her marriage. It may be taken as admitted that in February and March 1923, the husband and wife lived together as such. Thereafter disputes arose between the minor's father and her husband's father, with the result that in March 1923, the minor having gone to her father's house, he refused to allow her to go back to her husband. After a long correspondence the husband filed this petition on October 16, 1924, praying that he might be declared to be the guardian of the person and property of his minor wife. It came on for hearing before the Chamber Judge in November 1924. He questioned the minor in his Chambers when she told him that she was afraid to live with her husband in her present state of health that her husband and his father had treated her cruelly when she lived with them, that her husband had threatened to treat her cruelly when she returned to his house and generally she asked that some time might be allowed to her. The Judge was of opinion that the girl was in good health and well-developed for her age, but although he thought that her answers to his questions were influenced by her father, he adjourned the matter for three months. A short time before the three months' expiry, an application was made to the Judge to allow the minor to be taken out of Bombay on account of her health which was successful and this matter was not heard again until the closing days of the Easter term in 1925. By the Judge's direction the minor was examined on April 10 by Dr. Miss Jhirad and her certificate appears on page 1, Part III of the printed book.

I may say at once that it is clear from the evidence that the stories put forward by the minor's father that she was in a poor state of health were absolutely false and that his main idea was to prevent the matter coming to a hearing. Miss Jhirad's certificate was proof that the girl had arrived at the age of puberty, and the Judge himself was constrained to express his opinion that the minor and her father had told an untruth when they said that the minor had not menstruated. But the Judge felt that in these days he would not be justified in ordering a fully developed girl who was able to understand her own interest to go and live with her husband so as to enable him to exercise his marital rights against the wishes of the girl. He did not decide the question of Hindu Law whether the husband was entitled to the custody of his wife; he merely said that under Hindu Law the husband either was or was not entitled to such custody, and dismissed the petition on what he called a technical ground, by which I presume he meant his own disinclination to order a minor to go and live with her husband against her wishes. Still, after referring to the action of the minor's father in asking for an order of the Court to remove the minor out of Bombay as having been entirely mala fide, with which conclusion I entirely agree, he finished the judgment by saying:—"In the view I take of the law I am constrained to dismiss the petition." The matter has now come before us in appeal, seven months after the Judge dismissed the petition, though, as a matter of fact, the reasons therefor as contained in the judgment were not published till June. The girl will be fifteen in another month, and when the respondent's Counsel found that we were in favour of allowing the appeal, he suggested that we should order the minor to be examined again. We saw no necessity for adopting that suggestion. If the minor has not yet attained the age of puberty, that would easily have been proved by the evidence of those who could have kept her under observation since last April, but no application was made to us to admit further evidence.

It is admitted that in law the husband is the natural guardian of his minor wife; while the opponent is clearly bent on preventing him having the custody of his wife by every possible means.

There can be no reason whatever for rejecting the petition, for the law is that the husband is entitled to the custody of his wife unless good cause be shown to the contrary. The fact that a girl is not mature would be a ground for the Court refusing to give the custody of his wife to a husband unless her parents were dead and the Court could be convinced that no attempt to enter into conjugal relations would be made before maturity, and generally speaking it is in accordance with Hindu custom that a girl after marriage lives with her parents until she attains to puberty.

Again, if there was any evidence that would satisfy us that the petitioner would ill-treat his wife, we would reject the petition, but all that his Counsel could suggest was that it was wrong for the petitioner to obtain the custody of his wife, when he intended that she should live with him as his wife.

From the evidence on the record we consider that in the ordinary course of nature, if she does so live with him no ill-effects would be apprehended. But while allowing the appeal and appointing the petitioner guardian of the person and property of his wife, we must impress upon him that his wife is now a ward of the Court, and under our protection, so that he take heed that he gives no opportunity to his father-in-law or any one else to make allegations against him to ill-treating his wife. We express our disapprobation of the opponent's conduct by making him pay the petitioner's costs throughout. His obstinacy and mendacity are responsible for the inordinate length of the record in what should have been a very simple case.

Coyajee, J.—The facts of this case are fully set out in the judgment of the learned Trial Judge. The minor Bai Nirmalagavri was born on December, 29, 1910, and is nearly 15 years old now. The petitioner Navanitlal was married to her in May 1922. The girl admittedly lived in the petitioner's house in February and March 1923. Thereafter disputes arose between the girl's father Purshottam Hurii and the petitioner's father in reference to certain business matters. The result was that the girl having gone to her father's house in or about March 1923, he refused to send her back to the petitioner.

After a careful examination of the facts disclosed in the case the learned Judge recorded his conclusions in these terms:—

"The minor's father tried to make out that the girl had been treated badly and cruelly, that the petitioner kept bad company, had tried to assault the father and the brother of the minor and had created a row, and that he had threatened to marry again, although he knew very well that the girl was in a delicate state, had not attained puberty and was not fit to perform marital rights. The petitioner has denied all the allegations. I believe the denial of the petitioner and I wholly disbelieve all the statements of the father. I have not the slightest doubt in my mind on the facts as disclosed in the affidavits and on the answers given by the father to me, that the father, is actuated by malice against petitioner's father and that he is culpably indifferent to the interest of his minor daughter. He does not care what may happen to her in future. His sole object is to wreak his vengeance on the petitioner for the differences in business matters between the petitioner's father and himself."

These conclusions are amply warranted by the record of this case. The learned Judge, however, was of the opinion that in these days the Court would not be justified in ordering a fully developed girl who is able to understand her own interest, to go and live with her husband so as to enable the husband to exercise his marital rights against the wishes of the girl. He does point out that the consequences to the girl are very serious. He says:—

"She cannot get a divorce or dissolution of marriage. The husband is free to marry as many other wives as he chooses. In this case the petitioner has very good ground for marrying another wife, if he could get one. He has been, in my opinion, very badly treated by his father-in-law and his wife. The wife under the influence of her father refused to go and live with him as she ought to do. The wife cannot blame the petitioner if he goes and marries another wife and discards her for ever."

Then he says:—

"In the view I take of the law, I am constrained to dismiss the petition."

I regret, in the circumstances of this case, I cannot agree to that order. On the evidence adduced in this case and on the findings of the learned Judge, there are no special circumstances such as would absolve the wife from the obligation of living with her husband, and her father from the duty of surrendering her to her husband. By the Hindu Law, the father is the natural guardian of his children; he is entitled to the custody of their person, and is bound to protect their interests until they attain majority. This, however, is subject to the rule that after marriage, the custody of an infant wife belongs to her husband and not to her father.

"As a rule, in the Hindu Law, the state of women is one of perpetual tutelage. 'Their fathers,' says Manu, 'protect them in childhood; their husbands protect them in youth; their sons protect them in age: a woman is never fit for independence". Youth in this text is explained by Kulluka to mean coverture. The same rule is laid down by other sages, and adopted by authoritative commentators, such as Vijnaneswara and Sulpani. Accordingly, after marriage, a woman, whether a major or a minor, comes under the protection and guardianship of her husband." (Dr. Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhana, 4th Edition, page 116). In Kateeram Dokanee v. Gendhenee (1) Markby, J., observed (page 178):—

"The marriage of an infant being under the Hindu Law a legal and complete marriage, the husband, in my opinion, has the same right as in other cases to demand that his wife shall reside in the same house as himself. I do not think that any Court can deprive the husband of this right except upon some tangible and definite grounds, which show that, under the special circumstances of the case, the wife is absolved from this duty, and her parents or guardians from the duty of surrendering her to her husband; and we cannot, in my opinion, say, without contravening the Hindu Law, that the infancy of the wife constitutes such a ground, though it might, I think, be right in the case of a very young girl to require the husband to show that she would be placed by him under the immediate care of some female member of his family."

This view was accepted in Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (2). The Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, protects the rights of husbands who, by the personal law to which the minor is subject, are entitled to guardianship (s. 19).

In the circumstances of this case it seems to me that it is both in accordance with law and for the welfare of the minor that we should make the order which is proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (with him Mr. S. N. Rai), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—In my opinion the matters in dispute in this case are concluded by the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. The suit was brought by the reversioners of Ramautar Singh against the mortgagees under a mortgage granted by his widow Dhanwanti Kuer after his death to secure payment of a sum of Rs. 400. The mortgage hypothecated certain property which formed part of the estate of her husband. That was in the year 1905. A suit was brought during the widow's lifetime by the mortgagees on the mortgage. They succeeded in that suit and put up the property for sale in execution of the decree and themselves purchased it. The widow died in 1920 and the present suit was brought by the reversioners claiming to recover the property.

The question for determination in the suit is whether the mortgagees were entitled to a charge upon the whole estate or only upon the life-interest of the widow and that again depends upon whether the sum borrowed was borrowed by the widow for purposes of legal necessity. The allegation of the defendants is that of the Rs. 400, Rs. 226 had been borrowed in order to pay for Dhanwanti's husband's saradh. Rs. 174, the balance, was for the cost of litigation and maintenance. The evidence shows that although the income of the estate was about Rs. 2,000, still after her husband's death Dhanwanti Kuer, the widow, was unable to get the estate into her possession. Therefore, it seems highly probable that she was in a position in which it might be necessary to borrow the money for her expenses.

Both the Trial Court and the Subordinate Judge on appeal found that the money was borrowed by Dhanwanti Kuer for purposes of legal necessity and that she was in need of money at the time. That decision, however, has been challenged on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge admitted in evidence a statement of Dhanwanti Kuer, who, as I have intimated, was dead at the time when the present suit was brought, made in a previous suit in the year 1908 in which she stated that she took a loan from Faujdar Singh and Sheoraj Singh to defray the expenses of the funeral rites of her husband. The learned Judge accepted that statement as admissible under s. 32, cl. (3), of the Indian Evidence Act. It has been contended that the only part of that admission which is an admission contrary to her pecuniary interest is the fact that she took the loan and not the remaining part that she took the loan for a particular purpose. I am not able to agree to this proposition. I think the whole statement must be taken in order to ascertain exactly what the nature of this loan was. There might be a difference in her pecuniary liability, certainly in the liability of the estate she at that time represented, if the loan was borrowed for necessary expenses or if the loan was borrowed for purposes which were not to be regarded as necessary expenses, and I do not see very well how you can split up the admission into two parts. The whole thing works together and each part is necessary to explain the other. This I think is the view which has been taken in dealing with cases of this sort ever since the old case of Higham v. Ridgway (1) which was decided in the year 1823. The learned Judge accepted that statement which was not necessarily conclusive and not necessarily binding upon the reversioners but which I think he was entitled to accept as a corroboration of the defendants' story that in fact the money had been borrowed by Dhanwanti Kuer for purposes of legal necessity. and the further statement of one of the defendants himself that he had made enquiries at the date when the money was borrowed and he found that it was required by Dhanwanti Kuer in order to pay for her husband's saradh. The learned Judge said.

"Having regard to the statement of Musammat Dhanwanti Kuer above alluded to, I see no reason to doubt the evidence of those witnesses that Rs. 200 was borrowed by Dhanwanti for her husband's saradh. It is clear from her deposition also that litigation commenced soon after her husband's death."

That is really the only criticism which has been made of this judgment and it does not seem to me that the criticism is a sound one. The matter is concluded by the findings of fact and I do not think that the learned Judge took into consideration any evidence which he was not legally entitled to consider. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Contempt of Court—Chamber matters, publication of—Bombay High Court, practice of—Matters relating to wards and lunatics—Publication.

The practice of the Bombay High Court has been that in all Chamber matters no report of the proceedings or of the judgments delivered are allowed to be published by the Press without the leave of the Court. [p. 19, col. 2.]

In regard to matters relating to wards and lunatics and matters in which the publication of certain facts would cause injury to the individuals this rule of practice is absolute and its breach constitutes contempt of Court. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Taraporewala, J.—(April 17, 1925).—The first question that arises on this notice of motion is whether the respondents were not entitled to publish a report of the said proceedings. If they were, and if the report was unfair and one-sided and caused any party prejudice, it would not be a matter for the Court to deal with as contempt of Court but it would then be a matter for the party aggrieved by the wrong reporting to take such action as he might be advised for the wrong or injury done to him. If, however, the respondents were not entitled to publish the proceedings at all, it did not matter whether it was a faithful report or a misleading report of the proceeding. They would be guilty of contempt of Court in publishing the said proceedings at all. There is no doubt that if the report besides being of matter forbidden was also a report which misrepresented the proceedings, the contempt would be more serious.

Mr. Jayakar, who appeared for the 1st and 2nd respondents, contended, on the authority of Scott v. Scott (1), that all proceedings in Court and even in Chambers were public and that any member of the public was entitled to publish the proceedings during their pendency, excepting where the matter had been heard in camera under an express order of the Court validly made on certain well-recognized principles; and that even where an order was rightly passed for hearing a matter in camera, the said order had effect only during the pendency of the proceedings; and that, immediately the proceedings terminated, any member of the public was free to publish the proceedings and the result thereof; and that to restrain the perpetual publication of the proceedings to the public, a special order of the Court, expressly forbidding such publication in perpetuity, was required; and that the jurisdiction of the Court to pass such an order was limited to a very few cases as laid down in Scott v. Scott (1). I do not think it would serve any good purpose for me to discuss the principles which are laid down by the House of Lords in Scott v. Scott (1), as justifying the Court in passing an order (1) to hear the matter in camera, and (2) that the matter heard in camera shall not be published in perpetuity.

I have only to consider how far and in what manner the ratio of the judgments applies to the facts of the present notice of motion. It is quite clear from the judgments that, leaving aside the question of matters heard in Chamber at large, each and every one of the Lords holds that there are two exceptions to the general rule that all cases and matters heard in Court are open to the public. The two exceptions referred to are cases relating to wards and to lunatics. Lord Halsbury says that they are not really exceptions, because in the very nature of the matter they do not form part of the public administration of justice.

Mr. Jayakar, however, contended that even matters relating to wards and lunatics cannot be said to have been heard in camera unless an order to that effect was made, and that, if the Court further intended to forbid publication of the proceedings in such a matter in perpetuity, an express order to that effect was necessary, and that the only difference between the cases of wards and lunatics and the other cases was, that in these two matters the said orders could be made by the Judge more freely and that in other matters the order could only be made in exceptional cases on certain well-recognised principles. I do not agree with Mr. Jayakar. In my opinion, these two matters are treated as something quite apart from all other matters which are heard in a Court of Law on the ground that they are by their very nature private. Therefore, no order for hearing them in camera or a further order forbidding publication of the proceedings therein in perpetuity is necessary. If any person wishes to publish the said proceedings, he has to obtain the leave of the Court before doing so and in exceptional cases the Court may grant such leave. If any such matter is in fact heard in public, it might be open to argument that the Judge hearing the same and the parties thereto by allowing it to be heard in public all tacitly agreed that the matter was not to be treated as private, and in such a case, of course, there could be no prohibition of the publication of the matter, because from its very hearing, privacy or secrecy was not observed. But where a matter relating to a ward or a lunatic is heard in fact in camera, no person can be heard to say that, as no express order for hearing it in camera or forbidding the publication of the proceedings in perpetuity is made, he is entitled to publish the proceedings, either during the pendency thereof or after its termination.

Mr. Jayakar further contended that even if the matter relating to wards was treated in the manner I have indicated, this was not strictly a matter relating to a ward because the minor whose custody was asked for by the petition was not then a ward of the Court. At first I was impressed by that view, but on going through the judgments in Scott v. Scott (1) carefully, and more particularly the portion relating to cases of wards and lunatics, there is no doubt in my mind that the various Lords meant, by the use of the words "matters relating to wards of Court or wards," matters in which the interests of a minor whether a ward of the Court or not were sought to be protected by an order of the Court. The matters relating to wards and lunatics are treated as private matters not because they relate to persons who have been declared wards of the Court or to persons who have been adjudicated lunatics by the Court, but because the matters relating to these two classes of cases are in their very nature domestic matters; they relate to the domestic affairs of the family, and whether the petition is rejected or an order is made making a minor a ward of the Court and appointing a guardian or declaring a natural guardian of the minor, the Court in exercising its jurisdiction therein hears a matter which is of a purely domestic nature, and therefore, necessarily not concerning the public.

I hold that this proceeding comes within one of the exceptions laid down by the House of Lords in Scott v. Scott (1). I need not, therefore, go into the further question whether a Chamber matter which does not relate to one of these exceptions is private and not open to publication either during the pendency of the matter or after its termination. When the question arises, it may be decided, although I must state here that it has been the impression of the Bar and also of litigant public in Bombay up to now that all Chamber matters are private and not open to publication without the special leave of the Chamber Judge. In my own experience as Chamber Judge, such leave was asked for by the reporters of the newspapers in two Chamber matters, one relating to a charity, and another relating to the disputes between a Goswami Maharaj and the widow of a Goswami Maharaj. In the first case I gave leave for publication of the matter as it affected the public. In the second matter, I declined to do so, as it was a dispute between two private parties and the Chamber matter before me had got nothing to do with the public.

Although Chamber matters are heard by the Chamber Judge sitting in the Court room, and when one contested Chamber matter is being argued, there is no prohibition to members of the public to be in Court and hear it, it has been always understood in this Court at least that the matter is heard in private, and that for the sake of convenience the Judge sits in the Court room and hears the matter and does not prohibit the other parties, who are interested in other Chamber matters on Board that day, from being present in Court.

Mr. Jayakar has drawn my attention to the remarks of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in his judgment as a member of the Appeal Court in Scott v. Scott (2), as to publication of Chamber matters. The learned Lord Justice observes (page 271*): "Many thousands of summonses in actions are heard in Chambers in the course of each year, and during all my experience at the Bar and on the Bench I have never heard it suggested that there is the slightest obligation of secrecy as to what passes in Chambers. Everything which there transpires is and always has been spoken of with precisely the same freedom as that which passes in Court." I am not prepared to discuss the question or to give my opinion on this point as it is not necessary for me to do so in this matter. The remarks of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton may be perfectly true so far as the English Courts are concerned, but, as I have stated before, they are not true in fact as regards this Court, and so far as the experience of Counsel, who have been much longer than myself at the Bar, goes, it has never been contended in this Court that Chamber matters could be published without the leave of the Court. On the contrary, as I have stated, the impression that has always been acted upon in this Court is that Chamber matters are absolutely private whatever may be their nature and that they cannot be published at any time without the leave of the Court. At the same time I must point out that, in my opinion, the said principle cannot be rightly applied to originating summonses which are really in the nature of suits and are heard in Chamber with a view to minimise the costs.

On my above view of the matter, I must hold that the respondents have committed a contempt of Court in publishing the said article purporting to be a report of the proceedings in a matter relating to a ward and heard by me in camera.

* * * * * *

Now the 1st respondent is the Editor of The Sanj Vartaman and in his affidavit he has tried to defend his action by saying that he received the article in question from the 2nd respondent, believed that the same was correct and published it bona fide. He does not say that any reporter on the staff of his paper was anxious to get the result and to have it published. No affidavit is made by Bania supporting the statement of Purshottam Harji. If that statement was true, I am sure Purshottam Harji, who has got so many affidavits made in these proceedings as well as in the petition under the Guardians and Wards Act, would surely have got Bania to make an affidavit supporting him. Purshottam Harji has got two affidavits made by two persons of his community to the effect that the petitioner told them, after the order was passed by the Court, that the Court had dissolved the marriage and that he was free to marry again, and that they expressed surprise as to how the marriage of a Bania could be dissolved by the Court. Both these affidavits, to my mind, contain nothing but a tissue of falsehoods. No man in his senses would say that a marriage of a Bania was dissolved by a Court of Law, and if the petitioner said that, he would know very well that no one would believe him. What can be the object of the petitioner in making such a false statement? On the other hand, he could very well say to the members of his community, because I openly said so in Court, that my sympathies were entirely with him; and that, in my opinion, his whole conduct and attitude in the matter were completely honest and bona fide. He had, therefore, no occasion to make out a false case before the members of his caste. Purshottam Harji has got these affidavits made with a view to support his action in publishing the report of the proceedings as something which the community wanted to know with a view to refute the false statements which were being made as to the result of the proceedings by the petitioner. These statements, to my mind, are made merely with a view to find out some excuse for the publication of the article which Purshottam Harji must have known would be contempt of Court.

The contempt of Court becomes the more serious in view of my holding that Purshottam Harji was present in Court, and knew very well that I had refused leave to publish the proceedings and that, notwithstanding that order, he defiantly published a report of the proceedings.

Coming to the article, it purports not only to be a report of the proceedings, but a comment on them. The report is grossly misleading. A person who did not know anything of the proceedings, on reading the report, would come to the conclusion that the petitioner, the husband, was entirely in the wrong, had tried forcibly to take custody of the wife, who had not attained puberty and was not in good health, and that an eminent lady Doctor had certified to that effect, and notwithstanding that certificate the Court went out of its way and appointed another lady Doctor, thus criticizing the action of the Court, and implying that the Court did it with a view to assist the husband notwithstanding his wrongful attitude, that the report of the lady Doctor appointed by the Court also did not enable the Court to make an order favourable to the husband, and that thereupon the petition was dismissed. A more misleading report of the proceedings could not have been written and published.

Mr. Jayakar tried to argue that no evidence was referred to in the report but merely the result was published. The examination by the lady Doctor appointed by the Court, which is referred to, is certainly not a part of the result. The result was merely the dismissal of the petition. The certificate of the other lady Doctor referred to was not part of the result. But Mr. Jayakar argued that certificate of the other lady Doctor referred to was not the certificate on which Purshottam Harji relied for opposing the petition. As I pointed out to Mr. Jayakar, it was merely a quibble. No doubt, two or three certificates of the lady Doctor were produced before the Court. The object of Purshottam Harji, in referring to the certificate of the lady Doctor, appears quite clearly from the article. It was with a view to show that in face of the said certificate the petition ought to have been summarily rejected. The wording of the reference to the certificate, according to Mr. Jayakar, showed that it was a certificate which was produced before me for an order directing Purshottam Harji to take the minor out of Bombay for the sake of her health. No doubt, that certificate referred to the minor requiring one year's rest out of Bombay. Even if it was used for the purpose of taking the minor out of Bombay, it was used in these proceedings, because on the adjournment of the matter I expressly ordered that the minor was not to be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Court and the certificate put in to enable the father to take the minor out of Court was thus part of the proceedings. The object for which the certificate was referred to is, however, clear as stated by me before. Further, it was not as if Purshottam Harji did not know the opinion of the Court on the facts. I told him clearly in my final examination of him, and I also stated expressly to both Counsel and Solicitor, in the presence of Purshottam Harji, that I did not believe a single word of his statement as to the bad health of the minor and consequent unfitness to live with the husband, that I held that he was acting maliciously and vindictively without slightest regard to the interest of the minor, and that he was responsible for the unhappiness which the minor might suffer as a consequence of the minor not going to her husband. Notwithstanding that he purported to give in that article a report of the proceedings showing that his action was absolutely above reproach in the matter and the husband's action was quite wrongful, and, therefore, the Court dismissed the husband's petition.

Then there appeared comments on the proceedings, and those comments clearly show the object of the publication of that article. I have expressly stated that my reason for making the order and not postponing the matter was to leave the petitioner free either to appeal from my order or to marry another wife as he thought best in the matter. Purshottam Harji must have got frightened that the petitioner might be able to marry another girl. I have no doubt in my mind that it was not out of regard to the interest of his daughter that he wanted and wants to prevent the petitioner from marrying another wife, but merely with a view to make the petitioner suffer by reason of not having the society and the help of his wife as he was entitled to. By the comments in the article, he appeals to the members of his caste to consider whether a man who has been so wrongful in his conduct like the petitioner, should be allowed to marry again by the community. The whole attempt on the part of Purshottam Harji was to further his own ideas of revenge on the petitioner.

I am of opinin, on these facts, that Purshottam Harji committed not only contempt of Court, but a very gross contempt of Court. It is open to the petitioner Navanitlal Hargovandas to take any steps he likes so far as his own interests are concerned and so far as they are harmed or prejudiced by the publication of the said article. But that does not affect the jurisdiction of this Court to punish Purshottam Harji for the contempt of Court he has committed. That is a matter between him and the Court, which any action taken by Navanitlal Hargovandas cannot affect.

I order Purshottam Harji to pay a fine of Rs. 300 and all the costs of the applicant, Navanitlal Hargovandas, as between attorney and client of this application.

As regards the first respondent, the Editor of the Sanj Vartaman, he has already expressed his regret for the publication of the proceedings. Mr. Jinnah has frankly stated that he is not in a position to show that the first respondent acted mala fide in publishing the article. He contends that he acted recklessly and negligently and even though his action may be bona fide, all the same he has committed contempt of Court. I agree with Mr. Jinnah and hold that he has committed contempt of Court. The Editors of newspapers ought to be more careful in publishing matter in this way and should not be allowed to escape the consequences of their acts on a mere expression of regret. I, therefore, order the first respondent to pay the costs of the applicant between party and party.

As regards the third respondent, he is a boy of seventeen. He is in the service of the second respondent, and wrote the article under the dictation of the second respondent. Considering his tender age and the influence that the second respondent was able to exert on him, I merely warn him against committing a similar act in future. I do not pass any order against him.

Mr. Jayakar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of Taraporewala, J., on a notice of motion taken out by the petitioner in the course of the proceedings he had instituted under the Guardians and Wards Act for his appointment as guardian of the person and property of his minor wife.

On April 17, the Judge announced that he would dismiss the petition, but would deliver his judgment giving his reasons, therefor after the vacation.

On April 21, an article was published in the Sanj Vartaman headed: "Sensational case in the Bania community in Bombay."

It is admitted that Purshottam Hirji had got the article written out by his clerk, and had sent the clerk with it to the Sanj Vartaman for publication. Thereupon the petitioner gave notice to the Editor of the Sanj Vartaman, Purshottam Harji, and M. N. Mehta, the clerk, that the Court would be moved for an order committing them for contempt of Court.

The matter came on before Taraporewala, J., on June 18. A number of affidavits were filed in the case most of them absolutely unnecessary, and lengthy arguments were addressed to the Judge, which have been considered by him in a most exhaustive and painstaking manner; but the matter lies in a nutshell.

Whether the petition had been heard in Chambers or in Court, there can be no doubt whatever that the publication of the article, considering its contents, before judgment was delivered, constituted a contempt of Court.

However in this case, the proceedings were held in the Judge's Chambers throughout, and the question whether a newspaper can publish a report of proceedings instituted according to the rules in Chambers, but heard, as a matter of fact, in a Court room, does not arise. But the practice always has been in this Court that in all Chamber matters no reports of the proceedings or of judgments delivered are allowed to be published by the Press without the leave of the Judge. This is a very salutary practice, and, as far as I know, it has been recognised by the Press. Whether a failure to observe it in an ordinary Chamber summons issued in the course of a suit, would justify the Court in treating it as a contempt, it is not necessary to decide, but certainly with regard to matters relating to wards and lunatics and matters in which the publication of certain facts would cause injury to individuals the rule of practice is absolute. In other matters no Judge would be likely to refuse permission without very good reason, nor, on the other hand, is it likely that a newspaper Editor would wish to act counter to a practice which has now been authoritatively notified as existing.

The order made by the learned Judge imposing a fine of Rs. 300 on Purshottam Harji and directing him to pay the applicant's costs as between attorney and client was, in the circumstances of the case, a lenient one. The appeal is dimissed with costs.

[CUTTACK CIRCUIT.]

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 26 OF 1924

Present :—Mr. Justice Ross.

KRISHNA CHANDRA GAUNTIA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
RAJA MAHAKUR—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s 7 (v) and (xi) (e)—Suit for possession by occupancy tenant—Valuation of suit.

A suit for possession by an occupancy tenant against his landlord on the basis of illegal ejectment falls under s. 7 (xi) (e), Court Fees Act, only when there is no question of title to be gone into. But when a question of title is involved the case would fall under s. 7 (v) of the Act and the Court-fee payable would be on the market value.

[Case-law referred to.]

ORDER OF THE TAXING-OFFICER.—This is a Court-fee matter, arising out of a suit instituted by the respondent for declaration of title as an occupancy raiyat to and recovery of possession of 9·31 acres of gounti raiyati land. According to the plaint, the appellant had first settled the disputed land with the plaintiff-respondent on an annual rental of four purugs of paddy; and had later on agreed to settle the land with the plaintiff in perpetuity for a nazarana or salami of Rs. 300; but had afterwards dispossessed him and succeeded against him in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. For the purposes of the Court-fee and the jurisdiction, the suit was valued under s. 7 (v) (b) of the Court Fees Act at five times the annual rental of Rs. 3 (which was taken to be the equivalent of the four purugs of paddy). The first Court decreed the suit and the defendant appeals to this Court, after an unsuccessful appeal to the lower Appellate Court, and has, on both occasions, valued the appeal in the same manner as the respondent valued the suit.

The Assistant Registrar as Stamp Reporter would treat the suit as one, not under s. 7 (v) (b), but under s. 7 (iv) (c), of the Court Fees Act, and would assess the Court-fee in each Court on Rs. 300, taking this amount as a minimum for the market-value of the disputed land since the plaintiff had set up a settlement on a salami of that amount. If this be correct, there would be a deficit of Rs. 26-6-0 in the Court-fee on the plaint and, if that should bind the appellant, also on each of his two appeals.

It has, however, been urged on behalf of the appellant that s. 7 (iv) (c) cannot apply as against him, because the decree of the first Court, which is all that he is interested in getting upset, shows that no declaration was treated as sought and none was given either [Kesavarapu Ramakrishna Reddi v. Kotta Kota Reddi (1) and Haidari Begam v. Gulzar Bano (2).] I am inclined to accept this contention as sound.

It has been further urged that the suit being one between landlord and tenant for recovery of possession of land from which the tenant-plaintiff had been dispossessed, s. 7 (xi) (e) of the Court Fees Act should be held to apply and the matter valued according to the rent of the preceding year, namely, four purugs of paddy. But s. 7 (xi) (e) speaks of a tenant being "illegally ejected," and these words have been held to differ in scope from the word "dispossessed," in Sundar Mal Marwari v. Murray (3). This interpretation was, however, not followed in Jumla Singh v. Kingsley (4), but this latter ruling does not bear on the Court Fees Act. I am thus inclined to think that the appeal must be valued not under s. 7 (xi) (e), but under s. 7 (v) of the Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has not been able to show me that if s. 7 (v) be held to apply, the matter comes within cl. (a) or (b) or (c) of s. 7 (v). The valuation must, therefore, be based on "the value of the subject-matter" or "the market-value of the land." In order to avoid delay and cost of an enquiry on this point the learned Vakil has agreed that Rs. 300 might, in the circumstances, be taken as the value of the subject-matter of the appeal. He has, however, asked me to refer to the Taxing-Judge, the question whether this matter is not governed by s. 7 (xi) (e) as a question of general importance, especially, in view of the facts that Sundar Mal Marwari v. Murray (3) was not followed in Jumla Singh v. Kingsley (4) and there is no ruling of the Patna High Court on the point.

Even if s. 7 (xi) (e) be held to apply, the taking of four purugs (1 purug=7 maunds) as equal to Rs. 3 only is manifestly wrong, and the learned Vakil has—again to avoid delay and cost—agreed that the annual rent may be taken to be worth Rs. 50.

Under the provisions of s. 5 of the Court Fees Act I direct that the matter be placed before the Taxing-Judge for final decision. The points arising are:—

(i) Whether the suit falls under sub-s. (iv) (c) or (v) or (xi) (e) of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act; and

(ii) Whether the appeal should be valued under sub-s. (iv) (c), (v) or (xi) (e) of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act.

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—No one appears in this case. The cases referred to on the question, whether the case falls within s. 7 (xi) (e) of the Court Fees Act or not, are not of much assistance. The decision in Sundar Mal Marwari v. Murray (3) really proceeded on another ground, namely, that the suit was not one between landlord and tenant only, but also between the tenant and other persons who claimed to have acquired an interest from the landlord. The construction of two words "illegally ejected" suggested in that decision is obiter and does not appear to be a final decision. On the other hand, in Jumla Singh v. Kingsley (4) there is a decision that illegal ejectment is included in dispossession but that was not a decision on the Court Fees Act. The decisions in Balasidhantam v. Perumal Chetti (5) and Promotho Nath Ganguly v. Amiraddi Sheikh (6) indicate that in a suit under s. 7 (xi) (e), of the Court Fees Act, the Court will not try a question of title. The present suit is one for possession of land after determination of the question of title and the title was gone into. The case, in my opinion, falls within s. 7 (v) of the Act and the Court-fee is payable on the market-value of the land, i. e., Rs. 300.

A Court is not justified in refusing to examine a witness who is present in Court and for whose examination no adjournment is asked for.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st August 1925, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Delhi, dated the 30th January 1925.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Chandar Gupt, for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge has described in his judgment what happened in regard to the attempt of the plaintiff to prove his accounts, and the learned District Judge has held that the Trial Court was fully justified in refusing to allow the plaintiffs to be examined and in closing their case. I cannot agree with this conclusion. No adjournment for the purpose of examining the plaintiffs was asked for. The plaintiffs were present in Court and nevertheless were prevented from entering the witness-box. The Trial Court was not entitled to prevent them. The witnesses should have been examined and the value of the evidence given at the stage at which it was given could have been appreciated at the time of final judgment.

I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and return the case to him for a fresh decision. The learned District Judge should cause the evidence, which was excluded, to be taken by himself or by the Trial Court and then should come to a fresh decision on the appeal. Costs will follow the event. Since the lower Appellate Court has disposed of the appeal on a preliminary point and its decree is reversed, the stamp on appeal in this Court will be refunded.

RESPONDENT.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 80—Promissory note on demand—Interest, date of accrual of.

Under s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, on a promissory note payable on demand, interest begins to run from the date of the note and not from the date of demand for payment.

Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait, 23 M. 18; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 407, dissented from.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover the sum of Rs. 40,000 with interest at six per cent. from March 27, 1922, until judgment, on a promissory note, which was worded as follows:—

> March 27, 1922.
> On demand we promise to pay in Bombay to Mr. F. E. Dinshaw or order the sum of forty thousand rupees for value received.
> Ludha Ebrahim & Co.

Suleman Abdul Wahed, who carried on business in the name of Ludha Ebrahim & Co., with three other partners, having died, the record was altered by substituting as defendants the three surviving partners, the executors of the Will of Suleman.

At the hearing the defendants did not appear.

The learned Judge passed a decree for the principal amount with interest at six per cent.. only from the date of the filing of the suit, on the ground that no demand had previously been made, following the decision in Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait (1).

The plaintiff has appealed.

Under the provisions of s. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act when a negotiable instrument is silent with regard to interest, interest is claimable at six per cent. from the date when the principal amount ought to have been paid. The respondents have not appeared, so we have not had the advantage of hearing any argument in support of the view taken by the learned Judge.

Now the liability on a promissory note payable on demand arises from the date of the note and not from the date on which a demand is made for payment. The period of limitation for filing a suit on such a promissory note begins to run from the date of the note, so that no demand is necessary prior to the suit to provide a foundation for its being filed. It is different when the note is payable otherwise than on demand, for in such cases the liability to pay will only arise after the maturity of the note.

We think, therefore, that under the provisions of s. 80 of the Act interest in the present case runs from the date of the note, and with due respect we cannot agree with the decision referred to above.

The decree of the lower Court must be varied by directing that interest should be allowed from March 27, 1922 instead of from June 17, 1924. The appellant is entitled to the costs of the appeal.

R. L. Decree varied.

*Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c), Sch. I, Art. 1—Suit for declaration with general prayer for any other relief—*Ad interim injunction granted—Appeal from dismissal of suit—Court-fee payable.

A vague and indefinite prayer for "any other relief to which plaintiff may be entitled" which is customarily added in a suit, does not turn a suit for mere declaration into one for a declaration with a consequential relief within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. [p. 24, col. 2.]

Where, however, in a suit for declaration an ad interim injunction is granted on the application of the plaintiffs and on dismissal of the suit the plaintiffs in appeal seek reliefs which they had sought in first Court, the case falls under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act and the Court-fee leviable on memorandum of appeal is ad valorem. [p. 25, col. 1.]

Reference made by the Registrar of the Cuttack Circuit Court under the Court Fees Act.

REFERENCE BY THE TAXING OFFICER.—This Court-fee matter arises out of an appeal by the plaintiffs. The suit was brought on the footing that they were the tankidars of Mauza Pratap Ramchandrapur with its two independent off-shoots of Bakshibad and Dianbad and that as such they were entitled to realize rents from their "khatak" or subordinate tankidars the defendants numbered 4 to 187. The "peskash jama" (or tanki revenue) of the mauzas was to be paid to Government, not direct, but through the zemindars, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who, however, according to the plaint, fraudulently got themselves recorded in the Settlement Khewats as having "khas dakhli", or direct zemindari rights in the mauzas. These dakhali rights were also affirmed by the Revenue Court in a suit, No. 1313 of 1917-18 brought by the zemindars, against the appellants and some of the subordinate tankidars, for the rents of Bakshibad and Dianbad. The zemindars also brought a similar rent suit, No. 1865 of 1923-24. regarding the parent mauza of Pratap Ramchandrapur. According to the plaint, this is what led to the institution of the suit; and the prayers made were :—

(ka) that it be declared that defendants Nos. 4 to 187 have no relationship of landlord and tenant with defendants Nos. 1 to 2 but are "khatak" tankidars under the plaintiffs and have been paying the "tanki jama" to them ; and (kha) that a decree may be passed awarding to the plaintiffs such other reliefs as they may be entitled to.

There was also a prayer for the costs of the suit with future interest, but that will obviously not affect the category or valuation of the suit and can be left out of account.

The plaintiffs valued the suit at Rs. 11,000 for jurisdictional purposes, and they paid a Court-fee of Rs. 15 on the ground that the suit, was one for a declaration pure and simple.

They valued the appeal in the same way and paid the same Court-fee on it. The Stamp Reporter objected that this was not a pure declaratory suit, since a cloud having been cast on their title, the appeal, like the suit, sought in effect to get rid of that cloud and clear up the title and possession of the plaintiffs-appellants. On the authority of the two Patna cases [Harnarayan Pandey v. Suresh Pandey (1) and Rachhya Raut v. Chando (2)] he considered that the appellants ought to pay an ad valorem fee on the market-value of the mauzas in dispute. This view was not accepted by the appellants, and the matter was thus referred to me under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has contended before me that the appeal, like the plaint, has been properly stamped for the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with issues Nos. 4 and 3. He has also urged that if ad-valorem fees be held payable, the valuation should be made, on the lines of s. 5 (v) of the Act, at ten-times the amount annually payable to Government for these mauzas, lying as they do in a temporarily-settled estate.

I desire to refer at the outset to some confusion that seems to have occurred owing to the way in which the plaint has been framed. The Stamp Reporter thought that relief was prayed for in reepect of two mauzas (Bakshibad and Dianbad) only; and the learned Vakil for the appellants also was unable to tell me why exactly the third and parent mauza (Partap Ramchandrapur) had been brought in. A careful perusal of the plaint, with particular reference to para. 18, shows that relief was prayed for in respect of all the three mauzas. The result is that the deficit, if any, will have to be calculated with respect to all the three mauzas.

Turning now to the contentions before me, the first question is whether the suit can be properly regarded as a declaratory suit within the meaning of Art. 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule of the Act. The learned Vakil for the appellants adopts the reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge for answering the question in the affirmative; and that reason is that, being in joint possession, the plaintiffs could not consistently have prayed for any relief but the declaration that they are entitled to realize the tanki rents from the subordinate tankidars. But Raj Krishna Dey v. Bipin Behari Dey (3) is an example of a case where a suit, brought for a declaration that the plaintiff was sole shebait notwithstanding an entry in the collectorate register that he was joint with the defendant, was held to be not a pure declaratory suit. It is true that in that case the plaintiff had to add a prayer for consequential relief on an objection made by the defendant under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; but even so, the case is a complete answer to the contention that in the present case the plaintiffs could not have asked for any but a declartory relief. Objections under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act are, however, matters for the Court and not for the Taxing Officer, as the learned Vakil has rightly urged before me. But is it quite correct to say that the plaint in the present case did not really ask for any other relief? In the first place, there is that prayer (kha) for such other reliefs as the plaintiffs may be found entitled to; and it seems to me that the prayer does not cease to be a prayer for further relief merely because it is couched in general terms. Secondly, the plaint is unmistakably designed to reduce the three mauzas into the possession of the plaintiffs to the exclusion of the zemindars, and almost inevitably foreshadows an injunction in respect of the rent suit of 1923-24 brought by the zemindars. This view is confirmed by the fact that during the progress of the suit the plaintiffs actually moved for and obtained such an injunction, and as far as can be gathered from the order-sheet of the suit, the provisional injunction issued by the learned Subordinate Judge is in force at the present moment. In a somewhat similar case [Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (4)], the first two prayers, which were for declaratory reliefs, were followed by a prayer for any other relief "which the Court may find the plaintiff entitled to." The declarations sought were found to be not warranted by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but before coming to the conclusion that the suit was not one "to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed,"

Jenkins, C. J., observed that "the third prayer expressly seeks relief, though it is general in its terms." In confirmation of the view, apparently, that consequential relief was prayed for in that case, his Lordship proceeded to refer to the interim injunction obtained by the plaintiff, and remarked that an injunction is consequential relief. Were it not for the fact that Deokali's case (4) can, not altogether without force, be distinguished on the ground that the declaration sought in the present case is substantially warranted by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, I should have considered myself bound, on the authority of that ruling, to hold that the present is not a suit within Art. 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act.

Coming to the second contention on behalf of the appellants, it seems clear on the authorities that in the face of the prayer for the declaration, the present suit cannot be regarded as one for possession within s. 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act [vide Harihar Prasad Singh v. Shyam Lal Singh (5), Dhakeswar Prasad Singh v. Jioo Choudhry (6), Ugra Mohan Chaudhuri v. Lachhmi Prasad Chaudhuri (7), Skama Pershad Sahi v. Sheoparsan Singh (8) and Khetra Mohan Mohapatra v. Ganesh Lal Pandit (9).]

I am, therefore, inclined to hold that the present suit comes under s. 7 (iv) of the Court Fees Act, which provides for suits "to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed," and as the plaintiffs (with whom I am at present concerned in their capacity of appellants only) seem to be seeking relief in respect of all the three mauzas, they ought, in my opinion, to pay ad valorem fees on Rs. 11,000, their own valuation of the subject-matter of the suit and appeal. But I have not been able to find any direct authority for or against my view. There are reported decisions in which it has been laid down that we ought not to look beyond the plaint in determining Court-fees, but the contrary seems to have been done and the object and effect of plaints considered in several other reported cases. The questions that arise for decision in the present Court-fee matter are:—

(1) Whether a general prayer for relief, such as is found in (kha) in the present case, will suffice to convert what would otherwise be a declaratory suit into a suit within s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act; and

(2) Whether such a general prayer for relief, taken with the interim injunction subsequently obtained by the plaintiffs, will have that effect.

These questions are of general importance in my opinion, and must, therefore, be referred for decision under s. 5 of the Act.

Let the papers be, therefore, placed before the Taxing-Judge at Patna for a final decision under s. 5 of the Court-Fees Act.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference made by the Registrar of the Cuttack Circuit Court relating to revenue.

The plaintiffs-appellants must pay ad valorem Court-fee under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act.

Two reliefs are sought for in the plaint—

(ka) that it be declared that defendants Nos. 4 to 188 have no relationship of landlord and tenant with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 but are "khatak" tankidars under the plaintiffs and have been paying the "tanki jama" to them;

(kha) any other reliefs to which the plaintiffs may be entitled may be granted to them.

The third prayer is for costs which may be ignored. The general relief contained in kha does not by itself subject the plaint to the liability of ad valorem Court-fee inasmuch as such a prayer is almost customary and being vague and indefinite is never deemed to be a substantial relief. The prayer ka is couched in terms that would make it declaratory but the plaintiffs have obtained an ad interim injunction in the lower Court which still subsists. The plaintiffs have lost the case and in appeal seek reliefs which they had sought in the first Court. The ad interim prayer is substantial prayer which makes the relief a consequential one bringing the case within s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. In the case of Krishna Das Laha v. Hari Charan Banerje (10) the plaintiff had described the suit as one for declaration of title with consequential relief although the relief was in the nature of a declaration only. Therefore there was no dispute as to the category in which the suit fell. But the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar

Nath (4) lends strong support to the view which I have taken. In that case there was no specific prayer in the memorandum of appeal for an interim injunction and there was, as in the present case, only a prayer for declaration of plaintiff's title. But in that case, as in the present, there was an interim injunction in the Court below on the application of the plaintiff and that was construed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., as bringing the case within s. 7 (iv) (c).

The questions put in the reference are answered as above and the plaintiff is bound to pay ad valorem Court-fee.

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit consisting only of certain portions of a house devolved on the plaintiffs on the death of their father Allah Ditta in April 1905 when they were minors of tender ages. In February 1906 their mother raised Rs. 3,000 by mortgaging this property on their behalf to the defendant who is the owner of the rest of the house. The deed of mortgage executed by her was duly registered and as stated therein the term of mortgage was 60 years. The plaintiffs now sue to recover possession of the property stating that as their mother had no authority to alienate it the mortgage was void and inoperative as against them. The defendant-mortgagee pleaded that the mortgage having been made for the benefit of the minors was binding on them, that the suit was barred by time, and that in addition to the mortgage-money be was, according to the express terms of the mortgage, entitled to recover Rs, 1,100 on account of the costs of the improvements to the house made by him. The Court below came to the conclusion that the suit was within time and the mortgage was void, but that the plaintiffs were bound to pay the amount by which they were benefited. It further found that out of the mortgage-money Rs. 2,500 was paid to the creditors of plaintiffs' father who had shortly before his death executed a bond hypothecating certain house property for this amount and agreeing to pay interest thereon, that as the father died poor and left no money, the mother required Rs. 500 to bring up the plaintiffs, and that Rs. 400 was payable to the defendant on account of improvements to the house. A decree for possession of the house on condition of payment of Rs. 3,400 was accordingly passed and the parties were left to bear their own costs.

The defendant appeals to urge (1) that the suit should have been dismissed because the mother was competent by custom to make the alienation, and also because it was barred by time as one of the plaintiffs was over 21 years of age at the time of the institution of the suit, and (2) that in any case he is entitled to the full amount of the costs of the improvements. The plaintiffs have filed cross-objections against the order for payment of Rs. 3,400.

Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is not properly stamped. The value of the suit was Rs. 5,200 but the appeal is valued at Rs. 1,800 only. Counsel for the appellant states that the Trial Court having allowed him Rs. 3,400 he valued the appeal at Rs. 1,800. But the relief sought in appeal eing dismissal of the suit and not merely enhancement of the amount allowed, Court-fee was obviously payable on the value of the suit. The appellant's Counsel was, therefore, put on his option either to make good the deficiency in Court-fee or to confine his appeal to the matter for which he had paid the Court-fee. He chose the latter course and, therefore, the only question for determination as regards the appeal is whether the defendant is entitled to recover from the plaintiffs Rs. 700 more on account of the well that he has constructed in the house. This point and the cross-objections can be dealt with together.

Now, it is settled law, as is laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), that a Muhammadan mother has no power to alienate the property of her minor son. This being so the mortgage in the present case was void ab initio and the mortgagee's position was no better than that of a trespasser. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to recover possession of the property, and the question is whether, in accordance with the provisions of s. 41 of the Specific Relief Act, the relief to which they are entitled should be granted subject to the condition of their making compensation to the defendant. In Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following observations with regard to this section :—"Another enactment relied upon as a reason why the mortgage-money should be returned is section 41 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), which is as follows :—'Section 41. On adjudging the cancellation of an instrument, the Court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require.' Section 38 provides in similar terms for a case of rescission of a contract. These sections no doubt do give a discretion to the Court, but the Court of first instance and subsequently the Appellate Court, in the exercise of such discretion, came to the conclusion that under the circumstances of this case justice did not require them to order the return by the respondent of money advanced to him with full knowledge of his infancy, and their Lordships see no reason for interfering with the discretion so exercised." In view of the above it was held in Dattaram v. Vinayak (3) and recently in Limbaji Ravji Hajare v. Rahi Ravji Hajare (4) that "in setting aside a sale made on behalf of a minor by an unauthorised person, the Court may under s. 41 of the Specific Relief Act make it a condition that the minor should refund the amount by which his estate and himself were benefited."

We find that in the present case the minors and their estate were benefited to the extent of Rs. 3,400 and we, therefore, consider that justice requires that they should pay this amount to the mortgagee before taking possession of the mortgaged property. We agree with the Court below that the construction of the well in the house was not necessary and does not constitute an improvement, and we are of opinion that the cost of the well was rightly disallowed. The result is that we dismiss the appeal as well as the cross-objections and leave the parties to bear their own costs.

R. L. Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—In this appeal the plaintiff is the appellant. The suit was brought for settlement of fair and equitable rent under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendants resisted the enhancement on the plea that their holding was a mokarrari holding and that they are entitled to the presumption raised by s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The appellant contends that the defendants are not entitled to any such presumption having regard to the existence of a kabuliyat in respect of the land in suit dated in the year 1878. This document creates in favour of the defendants' predecessors-in-interest a lease for a term of 6 years in respect of jote and basat therein described. Both the Courts below have held that this document was merely confirmatory of an existing tenancy and, therefore, the presumption under s. 50 is not thereby displaced. We think, however, that this is not correct. As has been pointed out in the case of Ramrutno Sircar v. v. Chunder Mookhee Debea (1) where you have a temporary kabuliyat for a term of years the presumption of a fixed tenure from the time of the Permanent Settlement goes. The dowl-kabuliyat before us creates in favour of the defendants' predecessors a term of 6 years. We think, therefore, that this is inconsistent with the existence of a tenancy at a fixed rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement. It is true that the entry in the Record of Rights is in favour of the defendants for in that document the tenancy is said to be mokarrari. But this presumption, we think, has been rebutted by the kabuliyat to which we have referred. We, think, therefore, that the Courts below were wrong in holding that the kabuliyat of 1878 was merely a confirmatory document and being as it is for a term we think that it rebuts the presumption of the existence of a tenancy at a fixed rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

In the result, we set aside the decree of the Special Judge of the 24th March 1922 and send back the case to the Assistant Settlement Officer in order that a fair and equitable rent may be fixed for the holdings in suit.

As the respondents did not appear, we make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Panton, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Mortgage—Suit for redemption—Mortgagee not resisting suit on ground of purchase of equity of redemption—Subsequent suit, whether barred—Defendant in possession, duty of, to resist suit.

Where in a redemption suit the mortgagee does not resist the suit on the ground that he is a purchaser of the equity of redemption of part of the property but simply claims mortgage-money, a subsequent suit by him for possession on the ground of purchase is barred by the rule of res judicata.

A defendant being in possession is bound to resist a claim on all grounds that it is possible for him on his knowledge at the time to bring forward.

Srimut Rajah Moottoo Vijaya Raganadha Bodha Gooroo Sawmy Periya Odaya Taver v. Katama Natchiar, 11 M. I. A. 50; 10 W. R. P. C. 1; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 212; 20 E. R. 20, followed.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Harrison, dated the 19th December 1924.

Mr. Muhammad Tufail, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Nigahia, Roshan and Jani were co-sharers in a piece of land but Jani's share was already mortgaged to Nigahia when Jani contracted to sell his equity of redemption to both Roshan and Nigahia for Rs. 700. The transaction, however, fell through and subsequently Jani sold the equity of redemption of his share to Roshan alone. Roshan then sued Nigahia and Jani for redemption and obtained a decree on payment of Rs. 300. In that suit Nigahia did not plead that one-half of Jani's share had been sold to him, but contended merely on the footing of the mortgage that over Rs. 500 were due to him. Then Nigahia brought the suit out of which the present appeal arises for possession of one-half of Jani's share on the ground that it had been sold to him.

(1) 2 W. R. Act X Rul. 74.

The District Court and the Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the matter was res judicata, but the learned Judge of the Single Bench has held that the matter is not res judicata, inasmuch as "Nigahia could not have pleaded in the redemption suit that he hoped in time to assert his rights and become owner by purchase of one-half of Jani's share." From that judgment the present Letters Patent appeal has been preferred, and we consider that it must succeed.

The present suit is not a suit for specific performance of the alleged contract of sale. The facts now alleged by Nigahia are the same facts as existed at the time of the redemption suit, and what he now pleads is a completed sale. At the time of the redemption suit he was in possession of the land, and had he alleged and proved in that suit what he must prove in this suit in order to succeed, Roshan's suit for possession of one half of Jani's share would have failed. The rule laid down in Srimut Rajah Moottoo Vijaya Raganadha Bodha Gooroo Sawmy Periya Odaya Taver v. Katama Natchiar (1) is that a defendant being in possession is bound to resist a claim on all grounds that it is possible for him on his knowledge at the time to bring forward. Now at the time of Roshan's suit Nigahia on his present pleas was in possession and the owner of one-half of Jani's share. He did not plead that in respect of that half share his mortgage charge had merged in a sale. On the contrary, he accepted the contest on the footing of the mortgage and claimed merely that before ouster he was entitled to Rs. 516, which included a sum representing the improvements which he alleged he had effected in the land.

For the foregoing reasons we accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Decree against dead man—Rent-decree against some dead defendants, whether wholly null—Decree as against surviving defendants, nature of—Execution sale, what passes at—Trial Court, duty of, to try all issues.

A decree against a dead person is a nullity. But the question whether the whole decree is a nullity depends on the question whether the failure on the part of the plaintiff to bring the representatives-in-interest of the deceased on the record affects his right to proceed with the suit. [p. 29, col. 1.]

A decree for rent is a nullity only against the dead defendants or their representatives as a suit for rent against some of the several joint tenants is maintainable. But such a decree cannot be executed as a decree for rent but as a simple money-decree only. Consequently at execution sale of such a decree the entire holding does not pass and the interests of the defendants dead at the institution of the suit remain unaffected. [p. 29, col. 2.]

A Trial Court should not dispose of a case on a law point only but should try all the issues that arise in the case. [p. 30, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—At some date not very relevant to this case, the Maharaja of Dumraon who is the appellant in this Court brought a rent suit against the present plaintiffs, the present defendants Nos. 4-10 and seven other persons who were dead at the date of the institution of the suit. The Maharaja was made aware of the fact that seven of the defendants were already dead and it appears that he filed a petition in the Court asking the Court not to pass any decree against the dead persons. He recovered judgment as against those tenants who are living but in the decree the names of the dead persons were included. The judgment was pronounced on the 26th April 1919. In due course the Maharaja took out execution and the holding was purchased by the present defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It is alleged by the present plaintiffs that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the benamdars of the Maharaja. The present plaintiffs applied for setting aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code and that application was rejected on the 8th May 1920. On the 17th July 1920 defendants Nos. 2 and 3 took delivery of possession of the holding. On the 18th August 1920 the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents for setting aside the decree of the 26 April 1919 on the ground of fraud. Various allegations were made in the plaint so as to raise a case of fraud from start to finish. These allegations have not been examined either by the primary Court or by the lower Appellate Court. The Courts below have decreed the suit on the ground that the decree of the 26th April 1919 obtained by the Maharaja was a nullity inasmuch as it was obtained against dead persons. It should be mentioned that the holding purchased by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 comprises an area of 14.55 acres and that the plaintiffs in this suit claim to recover 6.36 acres as their share in the holding.

It is not open to doubt that a decree against a dead person is a nullity. This was laid down in Jungli Lal v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1) but the question whether the whole decree is a nullity must depend on the question whether the failure on the part of the landlord to bring the representatives-in-interest of the deceased tenants on the record affected his right to proceed with the suit. This again must depend on the question whether the tenants who are properly sued could take the plea that the suit could not proceed until the representatives-in-interest of the deceased tenants were brought on the record. Now on this question it seems to me that only one answer is possible. Under s. 43 of the Indian Contract Act the liability of the joint promisor is joint and several and that section excludes the right of the joint contractor to be sued along with his co-contractors. It was, in my opinion, open to the landlord to bring a suit for rent against all or any of the tenants, though it may be conceded that a decree against some of the tenants cannot be executed as a rent decree and can only be executed as a money-decree. This view has been affirmed in cases far too numerous to mention. In Annada Kumar Naskar v. Hari Das Halder (2) a decree was obtained in a suit for rent against some only of the tenants. It was held that the sale did not pass the entire jama but that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors passed. In Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (3) it was held that a suit for rent against some of several joint tenants is maintainable, as joint tenants are jointly and severally liable. In Chandra Nath Tewari v. Protap Udai Nath Sahe Deo (4) it was held that a decree obtained against some of the tenants cannot be executed as a decree for rent but that it is open to the landlord to treat the decree as a decree for money and to execute it as such. In Joy Gobind Laha v. Manmatha Nath Banerji (5) the question arose whether the whole appeal had abated because one of the tenants had died and no legal representative of the deceased had been brought on the record. It was held that the liability of the tenants being joint and several the death of one of the tenants without his legal representatives being substituted in his place did not have the effect of exonerating the other defendants from the liability. This case was followed in Abdul Aziz v. Basdeo Singh (6). I find that a similar view has been taken in this Court in Nathuni Narayan Singh v. Arjun Gir (7).

Now this being the position, it is quite clear that the entire decree obtained by the Maharaja on the 26th April 1919 cannot be regarded as a nullity. It is quite true that the holding did not pass at the execution sale which followed the decree of the 26th April 1919 and it is also true that the interests of those tenants who were dead before the institution of the suit did not pass at the sale. But the present plaintiffs were parties to the suit and their interests undoubtedly passed at the sale. In my opinion the Courts below were wrong in decreeing the claim of the plaintiffs on the ground that the decree of the 26th April 1919 was a nullity.

But the questions which were raised by the plaintiffs have not been investigated by the Courts below and I should like to point out that the course adopted by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge was wrong. It may be that he was confident that his decision on the point of law was a correct decision, but it is at least conceivable that a Superior Court may differ from him as to his decision on the point of law and, in my opinion, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge should have tried all the issues that arose in the case. This would have had the effect of not only shortening the litigation but of saving of costs to the parties.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and the decrees passed by the Courts below and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court with instructions that it should remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision of the questions of facts raised in the case. The appellant is entitled to the costs both of this Court and in the Courts below. The costs incurred in the first Court will abide the result and will be disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge.

We are informed that one of the plaintiffs is the representative-in-interest of one of the dead persons. If that be so, his interest has not passed by the execution sale. The learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with the case will bear this in mind.

Adami, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are these. This suit was tried along with two other suits. The suit is one for rent brought by the landlord against six persons. These persons are the heirs of one Broja Mohan Bera, who is now dead and with whom the original settlement was made. The case of the plaintiff was that the rent of the plaint land was Rs. 103-8-2.

The case of the defendants was that the rent was Rs. 54-8-6 and that they were entitled to a remission of some Rs. 6-6-8 for Mamulchar for some of the plaint lands and that the rent of remaining plaint lands was Rs. 38-8-5. They further claimed that they were entitled to an abatement of rent as the area was less than had been stated in the plaint.

The first Court allowed the claim of the defendants with regard to an abatement for decrease in area; it did not allow the claim of Mamulchar, and gave the landlord a modified decree. Both parties appealed to the District Court; the plaintiff on the ground that the defendants were not entitled to any reduction of rent for decrease in area, and the defendants on the ground that they were entitled to Mamulchar.

During the pendency of that appeal the respondent No. 6 died and his heirs were not substituted in his place. The appeal so far as he and his heirs were concerned, therefore, abated. The District Judge then held that the appeal was in the circumstances incompetent against the other respondents in the absence of respondent No. 6 on the ground that the respondents being all heirs of Broja Mohan who was the original tenant, the liability was joint and not joint and several. He, however, decided the other points that had been urged in the appeal, in case, as he said, it might be held that he was wrong on the first point. He held that the defendants were not entitled to any reduction in the amount of rent for any decrease in the area and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree at the rate claimed in the plaint. He further held that the defendants were not entitled to any reduction of rent on account of Mamulchar; he, therefore, dismissed the appeal and the cross-appeal. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and has contended that in virtue of the decision of the Full Bench in Reference No. 1 of 1925 in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 586 of 1923 [Kailash Chandra Mitra v. Brojendra Kumar Ckakravarty (1)] the learned District Judge was in error in holding that the appeal must be dismissed as against the remaining respondents.

The respondents have raised a preliminary objection that this appeal is also incompetent.

It would appear that since this appeal was filed the respondent No. 3 has died. Admittedly his heirs have not been substituted in his place, and so far as he is concerned the appeal has abated. The respondent now argues that as the liability is a joint one the appeal must fail for his absence. On this point the appellant contends that on the strength of the decision of the Full Bench to which I have already referred the liability is a several one. The respondent puts his point in this way. The respondent obtained an abatement of rent; that only the whole body of tenants could apply for an abatement of rent, and hence the appeal cannot be decreed against some of the tenants and dismissed against the others. I do not think that there is any substance in this contention. If one of the tenants can be sued for the rent, it is quite clear that he could raise alone, the plea that he was entitled to reduction of rent for decrease in area. No doubt if the appeal is dismissed as against some of the appellants and decreed against the others, the position may arise that the tenants will pay rent at different rates. That cannot be helped. In view of the Full Bench decision referred to I think that it is quite clear that this appeal can proceed in the absence of the respondent who is dead and that the appeal is not incompetent.

With regard to the appeal itself it seems to me that it is concluded by the decision of the Full Bench. The learned Counsel for the respondent frankly admits that he is not in a position to support the decree on the grounds that have been decided against him and to contest the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the grounds that have been decided against him. The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the suit of the plaintiff decreed with costs. Appellant is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Gregory, J.—I agree.

The sole object of O. XXI, r. 92, C. P. C., is to provide that no adverse order should be passed in the absence of the persons affected by it. Inasmuch as an application under O. JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—Biseswar Lal Marwari, Begraj Marwari and Kissen Lal Marwari obtained a decree for Rs. 33,587 as against the appellants and in execution of the decree put up to sale the property which is the subject-matter of the present application. At the auction-sale, the property was purchased by the decree-holders as also by one Salegram Marwari. The sale took place on the 23rd and 24th June 1924. On the 23rd July an application was presented on behalf of the appellants under the provision of O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code for setting aside the sale. In the cause title of that application Biseswar Marwari and Salegram Marwari appeared as the opposite party. A point was taken before the Court below that the application was not maintainable inasmuch as two of the decree-holders were not made parties to the application. The point found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge with the result that he dismissed the application without investigating the merits of the case. Hence the appeal to this Court.

(1) 90 Ind. Cas. 211; 29 C. W. N. 1000; 42 C. L. J. 232; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1056.

Article 166 of the Limitation Act provides a period of 30 days for an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree. The Article refers to the application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code which provides for an application to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it. Rule 92 provides that no order shall be made by the Court until notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby. The learned Vakil appearing for the appellants contends that there is no limit of time under the Limitation Act for serving notices upon the persons affected by the order and that the learned Subordinate Judge should have acceded to his application for having notices served on the decree-holders. In my opinion the contention is right and ought to be upheld. This view has been taken both by the Bombay High Court and in our Court. In Ganesh Bale Naik v. Vithal Vaman Mahalya (1) the auction-purchaser was not made a party to the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Code and it was contended that the application was not maintainable in the absence of the auction-purchaser. Scott, C. J., with the concurrence of Chandavarkar, J., in dealing with the point said as follows: "The first point in this appeal is a preliminary point taken by the auction-purchaser that he was a necessary party to the application of the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 89, and that the application is bad as he was not made a party to it within 30 days. The contention is based upon the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ali Gauhar Khan v. Bansidhar (2). The point, however, is now provided for by the C. P. C. of 1908, O. XXI, r. 92, which says that where in the case of an application under r. 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within 30 days from the date of sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale, provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby." A similar view was taken by this Court in Bibi Zainab v. Paras Nath (3). The decision of this Court is binding on us, and it is a decision with which I entirely agree. The learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the respondents contends that an application under O. XXI, r. 90, cannot be entertained by the Court unless all the persons affected by the application are named in the cause title. With great respect, I think that r. 92 meets the objection completely. There is no particular meaning in the contention that it is necessary to have the parties affected by the application as parties to the application. The whole object of the rule is to provide that no adverse order should be passed in the absence of the persons affected by the order and r. 92 protects all the persons who may be affected by an adverse order by providing that "no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby." In one sense all the decree-holders are already parties to the proceeding, for an application under O. XXI, r. 90 is an application in the suit itself and, therefore, it seems to me that they are all parties to the proceeding. The auction-purchaser is the only person who is not a party to the suit, but so far as the auction-purchaser in the present case is concerned, he was cited as an opposite party in the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge should have acceded to the application of the decree-holders and issued notices upon those decree-holders who were not named in the cause title as the opposite party.

I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order passed by the Court below and remand the case to that Court for disposal according to law. Costs are reserved and will be dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Foster, J.—I agree.

The onus of proving that the ostensible owner is not the real owner is on the plaintiff. [p. 34, col. 2.]

If a simple benami is alleged in the plaint without any suggestion indicating that a fraud or an illegal act was contemplated, the defendant would have to aver and prove that the fraud or the unlawful act that was intended was carried out. [ibid.]

It is not fraudulent to shield some particular property from being proceeded against by creditors so long as there are other properties from which the just dues of the creditors may be realized. [p. 35, col. 1.]

An intention to delay creditors is not necessarily fraudulent or unlawful. [ibid.]

Mere delay caused to creditors in the realization of their dues is not of any consequence so long as there has been no deprivation of the creditors in respect of their just dues. [ibid.]

Fraud in respect of creditors involves an element of loss or injury of a substantial character and not merely inconvenience caused by delay in the realization of what is due. [ibid.]

Sir Provash Chandra Mitter (with him Babus Tarakeswar Pal Choudhury and Jnan Chandra Roy), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff on the following allegations: Plaintiff was one of the partners in a business named Friend and Co., which ran into debts, and the creditors of the firm were about to take proceedings for realizing their dues from out of the plaintiff's properties. The plaintiff thereupon in 1892 executed a benami kobala in favour of the father of the defendant Abani in respect of some of his properties. Some years later, the Comilla Loan Office, one of the creditors of the partnership business, in execution of a decree obtained by them brought to sale in 1895 some of the properties covered by the kobala. The plaintiff thereupon satisfied their dues and got the properties sold reconveyed to himself in 1900 in the name of one Tara Kanta. The plaintiff instituted this suit against Abani and the heirs of Tara Kanta for declaration of his title to the properties, maliki title and title by adverse possession.

The defence of the defendants shortly stated was that the kobala of 1892 was not a benami document but represented a genuine and bona fide transaction and that Tara Kanta in his purchase of 1900 was benamdar for Abani's father and not for the plaintiff.

These pleadings raised several clear issues notably the issues framed as Nos. 7, 11 and 13. These issues raised the following questions:—Whether Abani's father was benamdar for the plaintiff; whether Tara Kanta was benamdar for the plaintiff or for Abani's father; and if Abani's father was benamdar for the plaintiff, is the plaintiff entitled to recover. It should be observed that Tara Kanta's heirs did not set up any title in themselves but supported the defence of Abani. A case of title by adverse possession was also set up in the plaint but in view of the allegation that the plaintiff used to receive the profits of the properties through Abani's father, such a case cannot be said to be well-founded; though if that allegation is found to have been established it would lend support to the plaintiff's case as to the benami nature of the transaction.

The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Subordinate Judge in an elaborate judgment dealt with the facts, circumstances and probabilities of the case and arrived at the following conclusions. He was unable to believe the plaintiff and his witnesses that the kobala of 1892 was a benami transaction and he found that the plaintiff had failed to make out that he was in possession of the properties covered by the kobala. As regards the kobala of 1900 he was unable to come to a finding in plaintiff's favour and held that the plaintiff acquired no title under it. These findings were sufficient to dispose of the plaintiff's suit; but the learned-Subordinate Judge also recorded his findings on Issue No. 13, which related to the question of the maintainability of the suit. His findings on this issue were in these words:

"There is no sufficient evidence to prove that plaintiff amicably paid up all his creditors. Evidently the object of the kobala of 1892 was to defraud the creditors, and the plaintiff cannot recover if the fraud was carried into effect. As there is no sufficient evidence to show that his debts were paid up by the plaintiff, I cannot find that the object to defraud the creditors failed. This issue is, therefore, found against the plaintiff. I may observe that there is also no reliable evidence that the plaintiff defrauded any of his creditors."

The plaintiff appealed against the aforesaid decision. The learned District Judge, on appeal, formulated two questions which he thought called for his decision: viz., (1) was the kobala of 1892 a benami document; and (2) if so, is the plaintiff prevented from recovering the property on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent and the fraud was carried out?

As regards the first of the questions set out above, the learned Judge to quote his own words in his judgment was of opinion that there were more points in favour of the plaintiff's case than were noted in the judgment under appeal and that the evidence was fairly evenly balanced between the parties. He, however, thought that in view of his decision on the second question it was not necessary for him to come to a decision on the first.

As regards the second question the learned District Judge was of opinion that the fraudulent intention pleaded by the plaintiff was the delaying of his creditors, that it is a fraudulent act to transfer one's property to delay the payment of one's debts, that the evidence to prove that the plaintiff's debts had been paid off was inadequate, and that assuming that they had been paid off, upon the plaintiff's case itself they were not paid off till 1313 or 1314, i. e., about 1907, and that in the absence of any explanation from the plaintiff this delay must be attributed to the fraudulent act of the plaintiff. He was thus of opinion that fraud had been carried out and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. In this view of the matter he dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

This mode of dealing with a first appeal on facts, apart from the erroneous view of the law which the decision purports to embody, is highly unsatisfactory. It precludes this Court, when it disagrees with the Court below on the view of the law, from dealing with the matter finally and necessitates a remand, which means considerable harrassment to the litigants.

Now as to the view of the law taken by the learned District Judge several questions arise and it is necessary to deal with them categorically in order that there may be no misapprehension as to how the case should be treated on remand, as that is the order which we feel we must make in the present case.

The first question which arises is the question of onus of proof. The learned District Judge was of opinion that when the fraudulent intention is set out in the plaint and when as in this case the alleged benami transaction took place more than 25 years before the suit and there has been no deed of release the onus lies heavily on the plaintiff to prove that fraud was not carried into effect. In this proposition which the learned Judge laid down for the apprisement of the evidence I am not sure that he was right. The onus of proving that the ostensible owner is not the real owner is undoubtedly on the plaintiff; and the fact that the transaction took place so long ago and that there has been no deed of release, together with the fact that the transferee was in possession casts the onus heavily on him for proof of the benami nature of the transaction. That, however, is a different matter altogether. If a simple benami is alleged in the plaint without any suggestion indicating that a fraud or an illegal act was contemplated the defendant would have to aver and prove the fraud or the unlawful act that was intended and carried out. If the plaintiff's own allegation is, that a fraud was meant to be per petrated and in the present case that statements in the plaint are capable of that interpretation he has got to establish that the fraud was not carried into effect. But when in his plaint he alleged that fraud was not carried into effect and the creditors were all paid off, and in the defendant's written statement it is asserted that the transaction was not benami but real though it is also disputed that the creditors have all been paid off, that onus is considerably lightened. In such a case it is not necessary that the plaintiff should be expected to call the creditors themselves or produce other direct evidence to prove that they were paid off.

As regards fraud the learned Judge's findings are that the fraudulent intention was to delay the creditors that the creditors, even if it be held that they have realized their dues, were delayed, that in the absence of any evidence to show another reason for the delay the Court must assign the delay to the fraudulent act of the appellant and hold that the fraud has been carried out. I am of opinion that in the above findings there is an error resulting from a confusion between the principle embodied in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act and the principle on which a Court refuses to assist a plaintiff to recover property from his benamdar. The two principles are essentially distinct. As regards the latter principle it should be held that it is not fraudulent to shield some particular property from being proceeded against by creditors so long as there are other properties from which the just dues of the creditors may be realized; and mere delay caused to creditors for the realization of their dues is not of any consequence so long as there has been no deprivation of the creditors in respect of their just dues. An intention to delay creditors is not necessarily fraudulent or unlawful. Fraud in respect of creditors involves an element of loss or injury of a substantial character, and not merely inconvenience caused by delay in the realization of what is due. In all such cases it is the fraudulent or unlawful purpose of which the accomplishment either wholly or in a substantial part that has to be proved. The learned Judge's findings, in my opinion, are wholly inadequate for the purpose of refusing relief to the plaintiff on this ground. It is noteworthy that in the judgment of the Trial Court there are findings indicating that the plaintiff had properties, not covered by the kobala of 1892, against which the creditors could have, if they had liked, proceeded, and this finding does not appear to have been assailed before the learned District Judge.

In the earlier decisions in this country a considerable divergence of judicial opinion is noticeable on the question as to the circumstances under which the Court would refuse relief to the plaintiff. These decisions have been very carefully reviewed in an elaborate judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (1). The learned Judge summarised the correct view of the law in these words: "Although where the intended fraud has been carried into effect, the Court will not allow the true owner to resume the individuality, which he has once cast off, in order to defraud others, yet, if he has not defrauded any one, the Court will not punish his intention by giving his estate away to another, whose retention of it is an act of gross fraud." This distinction between the effect of fraud merely intended and a fraudulent purpose carried into effect appears to have been recognized by the Legislature in s. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act II of 1882 which runs in these words:—"Where the owner of property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution, or the transferor is not as guilty as the transferee or the effect of permitting the transferee, to retain the property might be to defeat the provisions of any law the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the transferor." This view of the law has been affirmed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (2). Their Lordships in that case quoted with approval the opinion expressed by Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law (7th Edition, page 595 para. 446) as to the result of the authorities on this subject of benami transactions. From this decision of the Judicial Committee the propositions deducible are the following:—

1. Where nothing has been done to carry the fraud or illegal purpose into effect and the fraud or illegal purpose remains only in the intention the disposer is entitled to have the property reconveyed. 2. To enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud the contemplated fraud must be effected. 3. Overt acts done or steps taken for the purpose of effecting the fraud or the accomplishment of the illegal purpose if comparatively insignificant and harmless, do not disentitle the disposer to relief but a partial yet substantial execution of an illegal purpose or effectuation of fraud disentitles the disposer to the assistance of the Court; and 4. If the disposer has been frustrated in his attempt and the fraudulent or illegal purpose has been absolutely defeated he is entitled to relief.

So far as the kobala of 1892 is concerned the necessary findings of fact being arrived at, the law as enunciated above will have to be applied.

As regards the kobala of 1900 the learned District Judge has not considered the effect of it at all. Apparently he was of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed on the basis of this kobala also on the principles which governed the kobala of 1892. If this was his view he was in error. The law has been summarised in Mr. Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 613, para. 447 in these words:—"Even before the decisions referred to in s. 445 it was held in Bengal that there was nothing to prevent a man enforcing his rights against a benamdar where he had made a new purchase taking the conveyance in the name of a stranger, even though he had done so for the purpose of preventing the property from being seized by creditors."

It is clear, therefore, that the effect of the kobala of 1900 must be separately considered.

The decree of the learned District Judge, therefore, cannot be supported. It must be and accordingly is set aside and the case remitted to his Court so that the appeal may be re-heard and disposed of in the light of the above observations.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This application is directed against the order of the learned Munsif of Muzafferpur, dated the 29th June 1925. The circumstances are these: On the 18th May 1925 the petitioners obtained a decree for Rs. 144-5-9 against Chhattoo Lal in the Court of Small Causes in Calcutta. On the application of the petitioners, the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, sent the decree for execution to the Muzafferpur Court under the provisions of s. 39 of the C. P. C. The petitioners applied for execution in accordance with law; but ultimately on the 21st May 1924 his execution case was dismissed for default and the learned Munsif in seisin of the matter certified to the Calcutta Small Cause Court the circumstances attending the failure to execute the decree. The order of the learned Munsif is not before us but we must presume that he acted under s. 41 of the C. P. C. Thereafter certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtors were sold at the instance of Mohan Prosad Sahu who had obtained a decree as against the judgment-debtors and there being assets of the judgment-debtors in the hands of the Muzafferpur Court the petitioners applied on the 20th April 1925 for attachment of the surplus sale-proceeds which amounted to Rs. 3,436-15-3. On the 27th April 1925 Rs. 1,432-15-9 out of the surplus sale-proceeds in the hands of the Muzafferpur Court was attached at the instance of the petitioners, the Court at the same time directing that the petitioners should obtain another order from the Calcutta Small Cause Court transferring the decree for execution to that Court. The order of the Calcutta Small Cause Court transferring the decree for execution to the Muzafferpur Court was received on the 30th April 1925. Thereafter other decree-holders who had obtained decrees as against the judgment-debtors came in and the surplus sale-proceeds were attached at the instance first of Mohan Prosad, then of Bihari Lal and lastly of Sham Narain Singh. On the 24th June 1925 the petitioners applied for liberty to withdraw Rs. 1,432-15-9 out of the surplus sale-proceeds. They contended that their attachment was first in order of time and that they were entitled to withdraw the sum attached without reference to the rights of the other attaching creditors. Similar applications were presented on behalf of the other attaching creditors and they applied for rateable distribution of the assets. The learned Munsif took the view that s. 73 of the C. P. C., did not apply to the facts of the case and that the distribution of the assets could only be made in order of respective attachments. That being the position, the petitioners contended that their attachment being first in point of time they were clearly entitled to withdraw the sum of Rs. 1,432-15-9 from the Court. In dealing with that application the learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the attachment at the instance of the petitioners was wholly irregular inasmuch as the Muzafferpur Court was no longer in seisin of the execution case and it is the propriety of this order which is the subject-matter of the application before us.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned Munsif is correct and that this application must be dismissed. I entirely agree that the Court executing a decree sent to it has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself; but the point is whether on the 27th April 1925 the date of the order of attachment of Rs. 1,432-15-9 the Muzafferpur Court had any jurisdiction over the matter. It will be remembered that on the 21st May the Muzafferpur Court had not only dismissed the execution case for a default but acted under the provision of s. 41 of the C. P. C. Various cases have been cited before us by Mr. Khursaid Husnain but those cases decide that the mere striking off of an application for execution does not terminate the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution to execute the decree; but at the same time those cases recognize that the jurisdiction ceases as soon as the Court takes action under s. 41 of the C. P. C. and certifies to the Court which passed the decree the circumstances attending the failure on the part of the transferee Court to execute the decree. In the Full Bench case of J. G. Bagram v. J. P. Wise (1) the question was whether or not a Court to which a decree passed by another Court has been transmitted under the provision of s. 286 of Act VIII of 1859 was competent of its own authority to entertain a fresh application for execution after the first application had been struck off by itself for default. It will be noticed that in the Code of 1859 there was no provision similar to the one contained in s. 223 of the Code of 1882 or s. 41 of the present Code. In dealing with this point Mr. Justice Mitter said as follows:—"It will be further observed that the law does not contain any express provision as to how and when the execution records are to be re-transmitted to the Court by which the decree was passed. I do not mean to say that such a thing cannot be done at all, but all that I mean to say is that it can be done only when an order to that effect has been received from the said Court, or from some other Court exercising appellate jurisdiction over the matter." It was clearly recognised by Mr. Justice Mitter in the Full Bench case to which I have referred that the jurisdiction to execute a decree by a Court to which the decree is sent for execution ceases when an order is passed by that Court to the effect that it is unable to execute the decree. In delivering the judgment of the Full Bench, Peacock, C. J., said as follows:—"The order for striking off the application for execution of the decree did not strike the copy of the decree off the records of the Court to which it was sent for execution; and as long as it remains there, the Court to which it was sent may deal with it, and any application for execution of it as if it was a judgment of that Court." But in this case the decree was no longer in the record of the Muzafferpur Court on the 27th April 1925. This was the view which I think was taken by Mookerjee, J., in Manorath Das v. Ambica Kanta Bose (2). That learned Judge said that the Court to which a decree is transferred for execution retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree until the execution had been withdrawn from it or until it had fully executed the decree and had certified the fact to the Court which sent the decree, or had executed it so far as that Court was able to do within its jurisdiction and certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree. In my opinion s. 41 of the Code makes it quite clear that the Court to which a decree is sent for execution has no jurisdiction to deal with the execution case after it takes action under s. 41 of the Code.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact. In dealing with the question in second appeal the findings of fact should be considered to see whether the inference drawn by the Appellate Court was proper or not. [p. 38, col. 2.]

The ouster of a co-sharer in order to render the possession adverse need not be violent nor need notice of adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-sharers by personal or formal communication but it is sufficient if contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed. JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The substantial question in these two appeals is whether the findings of the Courts below to the effect that the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 should be treated as adverse to the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 6 to 10 and that the title of defendants Nos. 6 to 10 has become extinguished by the adverse possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are correct. The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact. In dealing with this question we have got to take into consideration the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court and then to see whether the inference which that Court has drawn from these facts was proper or not. Now what are the facts that have been found by the lower Appellate Court in this case? It has been found in the first place that in 1279 the Roys granted a settlement of the whole of the mokarrari interest to the defendant No. 1. By this settlement the title of the predecessors of defendants Nos. 6 to 10 was altogether ignored It has next been found that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 who claim under that settlement have been paying the whole of the mokarrari rent to the superior landlord since 1279. Nextly it has been found that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have on several occasions mortgaged the whole of the mouzah and have treated it as their sole property ignoring the rights of the predecessors of defendants Nos. 6 to 10. From these facts the Court of Appeal below has come to the conclusion that the possession which was exercised by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 has become adverse to the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 6 to 10. The learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the appellants argues that these facts even if correctly found would not go to show that the possession exercised by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 was in assertion of a hostile title and to the knowledge of the defendants Nos. 6 to 10 and the plaintiffs. It is true that knowledge has got to be found; but it is not necessary that there should be direct evidence of such knowledge. If the circumstances are such that from them inferences as to knowledge on the part of the persons against whom a hostile title is set up are sufficient to lend to the inference that they had such knowledge, it is enough. The learned District Judge towards the close of his judgment observes that he agrees with the Court of first instance that the circumstances are such as to justify the conclusion that there was a complete ouster of the other co-sharers by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5. This finding, in my opinion, involves the requisite finding as to knowledge. A number of decisions of this Court have been cited before us in the course of the argument viz, the decisions in the cases of Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal (1), Jogendra Nath Mukherjee v. Rajendra Nath Bhattacharji (2) Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (3) and Joynarain Sen Ukil v. Suchitra Debya (4). The principles laid down in all these cases, so far as this matter is concerned are well-settled. But it is always a question as to the sufficiency of facts from which legitimate inference as to adverse possession may be drawn. As has been laid down in the case of Lokenath Singh v. Dhwakeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh. (5) the ouster of the co-tenants in order to render the possession adverse need not be violent or intimidating expulsion or repulsion nor need notice of adverse holding be actually brought home to the other co-tenants by personal or formal communication; but it is sufficient, if contrary is not proved, that the circumstances show that such knowledge may reasonably be presumed. The facts are that since 1279 the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are in possession that they treated the property as their own ignoring the rights of the other co-sharers, that they all along paid rent of the entire mokarrari and lastly there is the fact that there was refusal on the part of the landlords to accept the rent from defendants Nos. 6 to 10 although the date of such refusal is not to be found in the judgment. The cumulative effect of all these facts is irresistible and it goes to show that there was adverse possession by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 with an assertion of a hostile title. In these circumstances it is not possible for this Court sitting in second appeal to say that the finding of the learned District Judge was wrong. There is one other matter to which reference may also be made. It appears from the written statement of defendants Nos. 6 to 10 as also from the judgments of the Courts below that the case which was set up on behalf of those defendants was that they were in separate possession of the shares which belonged to them, that they had leased out those shares and had been in possession of those shares by collection of rent and at other times by recovery of burga produce. Evidence was given by them in support of that case and that case according to the judgments of the Courts below had failed. It is true that even if that case failed it has to be found that defendants Nos 6 to 10 have acquired title by adverse possession. But the fact that a case of separate possession of a specified share was set up and that has not been established is important because that shows that in point of fact the appellants before us never made in the Court of first instance a case to the effect that the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 was to be treated as their own possession. In this view of the matter I am of opinion that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court is correct and that these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 18th May 1925.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the Receiver appointed by the Court has been rightly or wrongly appointed in the exercise of the Court's discretion under O. XL, r. 1. Counsel for the appellants has relied on the following facts:—

1. That the plaintiffs are not in possession, but the learned District Judge has found that the disturbance of possession is very recent and I do not think that in the circumstances of this case it is necessary to interfere with the order on that ground.

2. Counsel contends that the income of the property is too small to justify the appointment of a Receiver. This is a matter which can be dealt with when the Receiver, if any, is actually appointed and his emoluments are fixed.

3. Counsel contends that O. XL, r. 1 (2) applies to the circumstances of this case and as the suit is declaratory no Receiver can be appointed. Amarnath v. Tehal Kaur (1) is against this proposition and I see no reason, therefore, to interfere, with the discretion exercised by the lower Court: see Kadir Bakhsh v. Ghulam Mohammad (2) which was upheld in Letters Patent Appeal and Ishri v. Shib Ram (3). I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 9th July 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 74 of 1924.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are members of the Borkhedi Co-operative Credit Society. That Society has been ordered to be liquidated by the Registrar, and the defendant has been appointed liquidator by that officer. The plaintiffs complain that the defendant is trying to recover money from them by issue of warrants of attachment, and they ask for an injunction against the defendant prohibiting him from recovering any amount on account of one Nathugir. An objection was raised that under s. 42, cl. (6) of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, no Civil Court can entertain the suit. That section and clause is as follows:—

"Save in so far as is hereinbefore expressly provided, no Civil Court shall have any jurisdiction in respect of any matter connected with the dissolution of a registered society under this Act."

The objection prevailed in the first Court, and the suit has been dismissed. An appeal to the District Judge shared the same fate.

The case was decided in the first Court, without going into the merits on the preliminary objection; but the lower Appellate Court gives the facts of the case and states that they were not disputed in that Court. These facts the Judge expressed in the following words:—

"The Borkhedi Co-operative Credit Society which had been registered as a Society with unlimited liabilities under Act II of 1912 and which had 17 members on its roll had borrowed some money from the Central Bank, Nagpur. As it failed to re-pay the loan on the due date, the Central Bank obtained an award against it from the Registrar, Co-operative Credit Societies and in execution of this award, the property of one of the members of the Society, viz., Nathugir was attached. Nathugir who like the rest of the members of the Society was jointly and severally responsible for the amount decreed by the award deposited the entire decretal amount in the Central Bank in order to avert the sale of his attached property. Thereafter the Registrar being satisfied that the affairs of the Society were not being carried on satisfactorily cancelled the registration of the Society under s. 39 of Act II of 1912 and ordered its liquidation and appointed Mr. S. N. Fadnavis, Pleader, Nagpur, as liquidator of the Society. The liquidator after going through the accounts of the Society found that the members of the Society had borrowed money from time to time from the Society and had re-paid certain sums and that some money was outstanding against each of the members of the Society except Nathugir. He, therefore, called upon each member under s. 42, cl. (2) sub-cls. (b) and (e) to contribute towards the assets of the Society the amount due by them each to the Society as per statement filed by him before me. He did so with the approval of the Registrar who gave a certificate as required by the proviso to s. 225 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1917 that the money should be recovered from the members of the Society as if it was an arrear of land revenue. Accordingly the liquidator applied to the Deputy Commissioner to have the money due by each member of the Society recovered from him as if it was an arrear of land revenue. It is this action of the liquidator which is sought to be impeached by the plaintiffs in the present case."

It is contended here that the action of the liquidator was ultra vires, and that the Courts below are wrong in holding that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the present suit. And it is further contended that Mahadeogir the Guru of Nathugir paid off the debt due to the Central Bank and that, therefore, the debts due by the Society to the Central Bank having been fully satisfied by Nathugir the liquidator could not call upon the members of the Society to contribute towards the payment of that debt, and further that the action taken by him is really in the interests of Nathugir. Dealing with this point the lower Appellate Court writes:—

"But from this it does not follow that the members of the Society to whom the Society advanced loans out of the money borrowed from the Central Bank have ceased to be the debtors of the Society. They are still liable to the Society for the money borrowed by them and the liquidator was fully justified in calling upon them to pay off those debts. It is true that the money that would be recovered from the members of the Society would be applied to pay off the sum paid by Nathugir to the Central Bank minus his own liability, but I fail to see how this fact affects the liability of the members to pay off the debts due by them to the Society. Nathugir by paying off the debt due by the Society has stepped into the shoes of the Bank and occupies the position of the creditor of the Society and the fact that he is one of the members of the Society cannot affect his position. Plaintiffs allege that Nathugir is not a member of the Borkhedi Society. If that is so, it is not open to them to say that the Society has satisfied the debt due to the Central Bank and the liquidator was perfectly justified in calling upon the members to pay off the debt due by each of them to the Society."

It is here contended that part of the plaintiffs' case is that it is not mentioned in the plaint that they subscribed the money which Mahadeogir paid for the Society. After considerable consideration I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Courts below is correct. The section of the Co-operative Societies Act on which the Courts below have disposed of the case is very clear and in the rules under the Co-operative Societies Act II of 1912 made applicable to the Central Provinces by Notification No. 355 of the 26th of September 1916, and to Berar by Notification No. 356 of the same date, rule No. 42 states that "no appeal shall lie from any order of the liquidator," It seems to me that there can be no doubt that the liquidator was acting in a matter connected with the dissolution of a registered society and even if wrong, as the order was one within s. 42 of the Act, it cannot be questioned in a Civil Court. The orders are clearly matters connected with the dissolution of a registered Society, and a Civil Court has no jurisdiction: see Ganpat Ramrao v. Krishnadas Padmanabh (1) and Mathura Prasad v. Sheobalak Ram (2) and also Beni Madho Singh v. Tahsildar of Unao, Liquidator of Dewara Bank (3).

There seems no force in this appeal, and I dismiss it with costs. The appellants will pay respondent's costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 20.

Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act (I of 1914)—Bequest in favour of unborn child, validity of—No intervening life-interest, effect of.

The vesting of an estate cannot be kept in abeyance pending the happening of an uncertain event nor even by the appointment of trustees. [p. 43, col. 1.]

A person unborn at the death of a testator cannot avail himself of the provisions of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act in a case where no life-estate is interposed between the death of the testator and the time provided for his taking the property. [ibid.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 408 of 1921, preferred against that of the Principal District Munsif, Mangalore, in O. S. No. 97 of 1920.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Sundara Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit claimed the property of his deceased great grandfather on the strength of a Will executed by her in 1883. The testatrix died in 1886. The plaintiff was born in 1899 and he must have come of age in 1917. The suit was brought in 1920. The Will in Ex. II provided that the testatrix's grandson Subraya, who is the 2nd defendant in this suit and his wife Yamuna Bai should manage the estate as agents for the testatrix; collect the amount due to her under a mortgage and out of it pay off mortgages due by her and meet the expenses of her funeral ceremonies and maintain their children and lastly, without alienating the property in any manner, they should deliver all the properties moveable and immoveable to the great-grandchildren of the testatrix upon their attaining their majority. At the time when the Will was made and also when Lakshmi died, no great-grandchildren had been born. The Will on the face of it is in favour of a person unborn at the deceased of the testatrix. Madras Act I of 1914 has since validated bequests and transfers in favour of unborn persons in the Presidency of Madras. In Kudapa Venkayamma v. Kankarla Narasamma (1) and Muthusami Iyer v. Kalyani Ammal (2) has been held that this Act has the effect of validating dispositions made under Wills executed before the date when the Act came into force, provided that some life-estate was interposed. Abdur Rahim, J., observed that if there was no intervening life-estate, the argument of the appellant's Vakil that only persons born on the date of the death of the testator could take, would no doubt have force. In Shanmuga Devar v. Shanmuga Devar (3) it was held for similar reasons that if a life-estate was created and an ulterior estate was bequeathed to a person on his attaining age, the disposition would be valid provided that the final vesting took place after the passing of the Act. It has, therefore, been argued in the first place by Mr. Seetharama Rao that Ex. II creates life-estate. But I cannot accept this contention, because the Will provides that the 2nd defendant, Subraya and his wife were to hand over all the properties moveable and immoveable upon their great-grandchildren attaining their majority. The Will does not give them authority to retain those properties for the length of their lives. The testatrix speaks of her grandson and his wife as her "agents." It is obvious that after her death they could no longer fulfil the capacity of agents. Assuming that her intention was that they should be trustees or executors to carry out the provisions of her Will, the question then arises whether a person unborn at the date of the Will can avail himself of the provisions of the Act of 1914 in a case where no life-estate is interposed between the death of the testatrix and the time provided for his taking the property. The cases referred to in the lower Appellate Court's judgment Varadaraja Mudaliar v. Narayanaswami Mudaliar (4) is not of much help as it was a decision of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri in a case arising within the limits of the city of Madras to which Madras Act I of 1914 did not apply, although similar provisions have been applied subsequently by the Imperial Act VIII of 1921. If there was no person in whom the estate could vest at the date of the testatrix's death it follows that there was an intestacy. The vesting of an estate cannot be kept in abeyance or be, as the District Munsif observes, indefinitely postponed upon the bare contingency of the 2nd defendant having male issue. It is hardly necessary to quote authorities. But Maynes Hindu Law, page 512, West and Bhuller Hindu Law, pages 179 and 112 and Nilcomul Lahuri v. Jotendro Mohan Lahuri (5) make it clear that the vesting of an estate cannot be kept in abeyance pending the happening of an uncertain event, nor by the intervention of trustees, as was the case in Gordhandas Soondardas v. Bai Ramcoover (6).

Mr. Seetharama Rao's second argument, therefore, was that the testatrix's grandchildren took a life-estate which was determinable by the birth of children. The Will, however, contains no valid gift of the remainder at the date when it was executed. There is no direction in it as to the disposal of the surplus income. To treat the grandchildren as having a life-estate defeasible upon the birth of children to them makes the gift in favour of unborn persons no more valid, as there is no provision in the Will that if there should be no great-grandchildren born at the date of the testatrix's death, the grandchildren should take the estate absolutely. In Nafar Chandra v. Rotan Mala Debi (7) both the sons and his wife whom he was to marry were made beneficiaries under the Will and were alive at the time of the testatrix's death and the property was vested in the executors. Jamnabai v. Dharsey (8) was a case in which all the estate vested in trustees for the benefit of the son who was to be adopted by the testator's widow. It does not appear that the son to be adopted was unborn at the date of the testator's death. It was held in the end that the widow took an absolute estate. The facts in Amrito Lall Dutt v. Surnomoyee Dassee (9) which came up in Amrito Lall Dutt v. Surnomoni Dasi (10) and Watkins v. Administrator-General of Bengal (11) can be distinguished from the present case. The Will in that case created a power. The question was whether a direction to accumulate the income of the estate was valid during the continuance of the life-estate. It was held that the accumulation could go on for so long a time as the absolute vesting of the entire interest could be withheld. No case has been quoted in which a disposition has been made in favour of a person unborn in which the vesting of the estate was postponed without the interposition of any life-estate.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the lower Courts were right in finding that the dispositions in this case in favour of a person unborn were invalid and had not been validated by the passing subsequently of Madras Act I of 1914, seeing that if the validity of the transaction had been questioned at any time in Probate or other proceedings undertaken after the testatrix's death but prior to the passing of that Act it must have been held that the Will was invalid and that in consequence an intestacy had been created, and a disposition invalid at the date of the testatrix's death could not be rendered valid by the subsequent birth of a great grandson, nor could an intestacy be converted into a testacy in consequence of an event happening after the death of the testatrix.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., to the judgment-debtor in order that he might be present to assist the Court in drawing up the sale proclamation, not on the motion of the decree-holder but of its own accord is not a step-in-aid of execution. Nor does the swearing in of an affidavit by the decree-holder's identifier to the effect that the notice had been served unaccompanied by any application oral or written give a fresh start to limitation. JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution. The judgment-debtor objected that the application for execution was time-barred. The objection was overruled by the first Court and it was allowed by the lower Appellate Court and the application for execution was dismissed. The facts appear to be these: The application for execution in the present case was made on the 27th July 1922. It was contended by the decree-holder that the limitation was saved, because on the 29th July 1919 an affidavit was put in proving that certain notice under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C. had been served on the judgment-debtor. It would appear that in this former execution case notice had been duly served under O. XXI, r. 22 and service of these notices was proved on the 12th July 1919. The Court then ordered that notice under r. 66, O. XXI should be given to the judgment-debtor in order that he might be present to assist the Court in drawing up the sale proclamation. It may be pointed out that this issue by the Court of the notice under O. XXI, r. 66 could not of itself be described as an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution because this notice was issued not on the application of the decree-holder but by the Court itself on its own motion and, therefore, the issue of the notice could not come in under cl. (5) Art. 182 of the Limitation Act as an application to Court to take some step-in-aid of execution.

Be that as it may, the decree-holder does not depend on the issue of the notice to save limitation. He contends that on the 30th July an affidavit was sworn by the identifier that the notice had been served and he contends that this swearing on the affidavit on the 30th July was a step-in-aid of the execution. I do not think that there is any substance in this contention. The swearing of an affidavit by the identifier cannot by any stretch of imagination be described as applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution which clearly means some application made by the decree-holder. It does not, however, appear that he made any application on the 30th July. All that was done was that an affidavit proving service of notice was put in. This is merely a proof of the fact that a certain act had been done. It does not seem to me that it was an application to the Court to take any further step, because, in the first place, the decree-holder had nothing whatever to do with the issue of this notice under r. 66, O. XXI, C. P. C. That was a matter for which the Court was responsible and which the Court took on its motion and not on any application of the decree-holder. The decree-holder was not in any way responsible whether these notices under r. 66 were or were not served.

Dr. Pal who has appeared for the appellant has referred us to the case of Pran Krishna Das v. Protap Chandra Dalal (1) in support of his contention that the filing of an affidavit in proof of service of notice was a step-in-aid of execution. The facts of that case, however, are different from those of the present case. In that case the question was as to the service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 which had to be served on the judgment-debtor before any further step in execution could be taken. Mr. Justice Woodroffe in disposing of the case remarked

(1) 38 Ind. Cas. 536; 21 C. W. N. 423.

"I am not myself disposed in the present case to take a narrow view of the facts, and from these facts we have it that notice was served in pursuance of a previous order of the Court, that the service was proved, and that may be taken to be an invitation to the Court to proceed to the next order which should have been made in these proceedings, namely, that the decree be executed." The reason being possibly that until notice had been served on the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 22 no further step-in-execution could be taken. This case has been distinguished in the case of Annopurna Thakurani v. Dhirendra Nath Chakravarty (2) a decision to which I was myself a party and where it was directly held that the swearing of an affidavit merely filed by the decree-holder's identifier unaccompanied by any application oral or written does not give a fresh start to limitation. In the present case it does not appear that there was any application either written or oral made on behalf of the decree-holder at the time when the affidavit was filed. So it cannot be said that an application was made by the decree-holder to the Court to take any step-in-aid of execution.

The result must be that the appeal fails and is dismissed. The respondent not having appeared there will be no order as to costs.

Ghose, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Quære.—Whether an order refusing leave to file a memorandum of objections in forma pauperis is a judgment under cl. 15, Letters Patent.

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice Krishnan, dated the 11th November 1924, on C. M. P. No. 3775 of 1924, praying for leave to file a memorandum of objections in forma pauperis to Appeal No. 116 of 1924, preferred to the High Court against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, at Palghat, in O. S. No. 21 of 1921.

Mr. C. S. Swaminadan, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. S. Narayanasami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Waller, J.—This is an appeal against an order of Krishnan, J., rejecting an application for leave to file a memorandum of objections in forma pauperis. It is argued that no appeal lies against such an order. There are, no doubt, some decisions to that effect, e. g., Appusami Pillai v. Somasundara Mudaliar (1) and Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Hussain (2). But the former has since been expressly dissented from in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (3) and the latter proceeded on a ratio decidendi which is no longer maintainable. The pronouncement of Sir John Edge in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (4) is also relied on. Speaking for myself, I should welcome any clear cut definition which would render unnecessary the discussion which is at present, almost inevitable, whether a particular order does or does not pass the test laid down in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (3). That test is never particularly easy of application and would be extremely difficult to apply in a case like this. I, however, see no reason to consider the very large question raised by that pronouncement. Assuming that there is a right of appeal against an order like this, I think that we should not interfere. The question is one of the exercise of discretion. That is, of course, not the test of non-appealability, but "when the determination complained of is merely the result of the exercise of discretion on the part of the Judge in a matter which was a proper subject for the exercise of that discretion, the Appellate Court would rightly decline to interfere." De Souza v. Coles (5). Here, the Judge had discretion to admit the application, but he thought fit not to exercise it in the appellant's favour. I think, that we should decline to interfere with his order. The appeal is dismissed without costs. One month for paying the necessary fees.

By virtue of the third condition on the back of the sale certificate, it is in the discretion of the Court or the officer holding the sale to decline acceptance of the highest bid when the price offered appears so clearly inadequate as to make it advisable to do so. [p. 47, col. 1.]

When the Court thinks fit not to accept a sale and orders a re-sale, the order should state reasons for the same.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Additional Munsif at Jamalpur (Mymensingh), dated the 25th February 1925, in Case Nos. 1227/1653 and 1293/1718 of 1924.

Babu Prafulla Chandra Nag, for the Petitioners.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—These two Rules are directed against an order passed by the learned Munsif of Jamalpore on the 25th February 1925 by which he directed a re-sale of certain properties which had been previously sold in execution of two decrees for rent. The decree-holder himself purchased the properties for Rs. 71 and Rs. 89 at the sale. The bids were accepted by the Nazir the decree-holder having filed a petition to set off his decretal dues against a part of the purchase money. The Nazir submitted the usual report to the Court and the Court thereupon on the 25th February 1925 on receipt of the Nazir's report ordered the cases to be put up on the 23rd March 1925 for confirmation of the sales. On the 25th February 1925 petitions were filed by one Radha Nath Dey in the said two cases in which he stated that he had filed vakalatnamas in those cases and had given instructions for bidding at the sales but that the officers of the decree-holder acting collusively with some other persons had caused the properties to be sold secretly and had purchased the same for themselves. The petitioner Radha Nath Dey also stated that he was willing to purchase the two items of property covered by the two sales at Rs. 400 each. The learned Munsif on receipt of the said petitions and on hearing the Pleaders of all the parties ordered the properties to be re-sold on the 26th March 1925. On that date petitions were filed by the decree-holder in which it was stated that the decree-holder was absent, that an appeal against the said orders of the 25th February was contemplated and that the sales should not take place until that appeal was disposed of. That application was rejected and the decree-holder refused to bid at the sales and the properties were knocked down to Radha Nath for Rs. 400 for each plot, that is to say, for Rs. 800 in all. The Nazir submitted a report as to the sales which had taken place and the bids of Radha Nath were accepted by the Court. The orders of the 25th February 1925 which have been challenged on behalf of the petitioners in these two Rules unfortunately do not give any reason and on a perusal of those orders it would seem as if there was no valid ground for ordering re-sales. The learned Munsif should have in the aforesaid orders given some reasons as to why he thought it necessary not to accept the bids of the decree-holder and why he thought that re sales were necessary in the present cases. It is the omission on the part of the Munsif to record his reasons in this respect which probably led to the issuing of these Rules. The facts of the case, however, have now been placed before me in the counter-affidavit which has been filed on behalf of the opposite party and it appears to me that, as a matter of fact the opposite party might very well contend that the properties had originally been sold at inadequate prices and also that he had no opportunity of bidding at the sales. The question in these circumstances is whether the Court had a discretion to make the order which it did and whether that discretion has been properly exercised in view of the circumstances of these particular cases. It has been laid down by this Court in several cases amongst which reference need only be made to the decision of Coxe, J., in the case of Rajendra Prasad Jha v. Upendra Nath Jha (1) and to the unreported* decision of Newbould, J., in the case of Fazil Meah v. Prosanna Kumar Roy (2) that by reason of the third condition on the back of the sale proclamation a discretion is reserved to the Court to accept or not to accept a bid in view of the particular circumstances disclosed in the case and that condition expressly states that it shall be in the discretion of the Court or the officer holding the sale to decline acceptance of the highest bid when the price offered appears so clearly inadequate as to make it advisable to do so. Upon the facts to which I have referred it can reasonably be held that the Court, if it had a discretion, was right in exercising that discretion upon the particular facts of these cases. The orders passed for re-sale, therefore, in my opinion appear to be correct and I decline to interfere in these cases. The Rules must, therefore, be discharged with costs one gold mohur in each case.

It is subject to reasonable regulations for preventing overcrowding, etc. Courts should be slow to recognise without proper evidence claims of right which would materially interfere with the rights of trustees to regulate the worship and ceremonials of temples in the interests of the whole community. A distinction must be drawn between a temple and its inner sanctuary. Every Hindu has a right to enter a Hindu temple and obtain sight of the idol and perform his act of worship from a distance without payment of fees. But the right of access to Holy of Holies is not equally free and may be regulated by special rules. [p. 55, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J.—The facts out of which this application arises have been fully stated in this Court's judgment of April 11, 1919, in Appeal No. 223 of 1915, and need not be re-stated. That judgment, and the consequential one of September 22, 1919, have been set aside under the judgment of their Lordships in Privy Council Appeal No. 95 of 1923. In that judgment it is said :—"The High Court at Bombay had power conferred upon it by cl. 20 of the scheme confirmed by His Majesty's Order in Council upon an application made to it with that object to alter, modify or add to the rules sanctioned by the District Judge, but it had no other power, and that power it did not exercise; it may, however, still be exercised upon application properly made to it." Accordingly the present application has been made by twelve Gors "for themselves and on behalf of the other Tarwadi Mewada Gors, residing at Dakore." Their main contention is that the rules framed by the Temple Committee and sanctioned by the District Judge are illegal and ultra vires, so far as they impose fixed fees in payment for passes, whether on the Gors or the general public entitled to worship in the temple at Dakore. They also urge that some of the rules are objectionable, so far as they impose on the Gors the necessity of obtaining a free pass for entering the nij mandir and ascending the sinhasan for the purpose of performing worship and other religious rites. Detailed modifications of certain rules are proposed.

We have heard all the parties concerned in the matter. The Advocate-General supports the contention that no fees should be charged, but is in favour of free passes being required for entry to the nij mandir and ascending the sinhasan. This view is also taken by opponent No. 3, the representative of the Tambekar family who have a special position with reference to this temple. On the other hand, the Temple Committee and the representatives of the Sevaks oppose the modification of the rules.

Before considering the questions that arise upon their merits, it is necessary to dispose of a preliminary objection that was raised by Sir Chimanlal Setalvad for the Sevaks. He contends that under cl. 20 of the scheme it is not competent to this Court to interfere with the rules framed by the Temple Committee and sanctioned by the District Judge and that the powers of this Court under that clause are confined to an alteration of the provisions of the scheme itself.

Clause 20 says :—

"The provisions of this scheme may be altered, modified or added to by an application to His Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay."

Clause 12 says :—

"The Committee shall have power,

(1) To take the temple property into their custody and to provide for efficient checks for its preservation, maintenance and growth.

(2) To make rules for the guidance of their business.

(3) To make rules for securing the punctual performance of the Seva by the Sevaks in due conformity with the established practice of the institution.

(4) To make rules for the issue of passes as to the admission into the nij mandir and on the sinhasan patia in order to prevent overcrowding and preserve order at those places, provided that such rules shall not affect any member of the Tambekar family or interfere with the decided rights of the Sevaks and the Gors.

(5) To make rules for keeping accounts in a proper manner.

(6) To provide for punishment for the breach of the rules.

(7) To have all the rules framed by them sanctioned by the District Court of Ahmedabad to the intent that the rules, which sanctioned, shall have the same force as if they were part of this scheme.

(8) To modify, alter and rescind any of the rules made by them with similar sanction."

In view of the express provision in cl. 12 (7) that "the rules, when sanctioned, shall have force as if they were part of this scheme," we feel no doubt that the objection fails. Sir Chimanlal contends that this does not make the rules part of the scheme, but only means that the rules are to be executed and obeyed, as if they were part of the scheme. This distinction is not, in our opinion, justified. The case is analogous to one where an Act confers power to make rules under the Act and enacts that rules so made "shall be of the same effect as if they were contained in" the Act. In such a case there is the high authority of Lord Herschell for saying that such words can be given no "other meaning than this, that you shall for all purposes of construction or obligation or otherwise treat them exactly, as if they were in the Act." See Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood (1). Similarly Lord Watson says at page 365*:—"Such rules are to be as effectual as if they were part of the Statute itself." A similar view was taken by a Full Bench of this Court in Secretary of State for India v. Bhaskar Krishnaji

Samant(2), in regard to rules made under the Indian Forest Act, 1878, which under s. 77 of that Act "have the force of law." The Bench held that in view of this provision such a rule "must be considered as taking its place within the Act."

Accordingly we hold that the effect of the words I have referred to in cl. 12 (7) of the scheme is to make the rules now under consideration part of the scheme for the purpose of cl. 20. This is in accordance with the opinion already expressed both by this Court (see the paper of the appeal to the Privy Council, page 227, lines 39-41) and the Privy Council in the extract from their judgment already given. The latter opinion is necessarily entitled to the greatest weight, even if it is not binding on us.

The main question to be decided is the legality of (a) requiring passes and (b) imposing fees for passes (1) in the case of Tarwadi Mewada Gors residing at Dakor and (2) in the case of worshippers at the temple. As to (1) it is, in my opinion, clear that to impose fees on Gors would "interfere with the decided rights of the........... Gors" within the meaning of cl. 12 (4) of the scheme, and that any rules purporting to impose such fees would be ultra vires. The legality of rules levying such fees was the main issue in Suit No. 18 of 1887 between the Gors and the Sevaks, and was decided in favour of the Gors by Mr. Dayaram Gidumal (P. C. paper book, pages 320 and 323). This decision was upheld by this Court in First Appeal No. 36 of 1888 (ib pages 330 and 332) The learned Judges went further and held that the levy of fees from worshippers also was illegal—that is a question which can best be considered later. But, so far as the Gors are concerned, I agree with Diwan Bahadur Rao that rules imposing fees for passes on them would be ultra vires.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad contended the contrary. His first point was that there was nothing in the decrees passed in Suit No. 18 of 1887 or First Appeal No. 36 of 1888 to make the present rules inconsistent. So far as they provide for free passes to Gors, this must be conceded, unless we go further and hold that to require any passes at all is an interference with the decided rights of the Gors. The latter was the view which Diwan Bahadur Rao asked us to adopt: but, in my opinion, this is going too far. The declared rights of the Gors were made "subject to the right of the Sevaks to enforce orderliness and decency of worship," and the pass-system is one which, if properly designed and worked, can help considerably towards the maintenance of such orderliness and decency. The rules requiring free passes from Gors are based on this ground (cf. r. 56), and I think the District Judge rightly distinguished between Gors having to take a pass and having to pay a fee for it (P. C. paper-book, page 116). With due deference I do not agree with the view taken in the Appeals of 1915 (ib. page 229) that rr. 56 and 57 should be amended, so far as they require free passes, as being restrictions upon the established rights of the Gors to enter with their yajmans into the nij mandir. They are in a sense "restrictions" but they are very small ones and fall within the excepted rights of the Sevaks mentioned in the decree that I have already referred to. Those rights have also to be regarded under cl. 12 (4) of the scheme, and the Temple Committee in working the rules can, I think, be trusted to see that the requirement of a free pass does not unduly interfere with a Gor's right of free access to the nij mandir and of ascending the sinhasan patia with the permission of the attendant Sevaks; and the requirement is one calculated to promote the general interests of the institution and one of which the Gors cannot reasonably complain. The gravamen of their complaint in the suit of 1887 was the loss of emoluments caused by the levy of fees (cf. P. C. paper-book, pages 286 and 328), and not the requirement to take out passes apart from such levy.

Sir Chimanlal contended that the decrees in the litigation between the Gors and the Sevaks could not bind the Temple Committee, who were not parties to that litigation. With this may be taken Diwan Bahadur Rao's contention that the rules must be in accordance with the established practice of the institution. Both contentions, in my opinion, go too far. The Privy Council no doubt approved the direction of this Court that in framing the scheme due consideration was to be given to the established practice of the institution: Chotalal Lakhmiram v. Manohar Ganesh Tambekar (3). But that does not mean that the scheme and any rules thereunder must always conform to such established practice. A scheme in fact supersedes established practice: Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (4) and the interests of the institution and the facilitating of the work of management are the primary matters for consideration both in preparing the scheme and making any modifications in it: Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Ahmed Moola Dawood (5). There should be means of progress, even if this involves some departure from established practice; and the provisions of cl. 12, especially sub-cls. (1), (4), (9) and (11), show that the framers of the scheme had this in mind. On the other hand, the scheme directs that the established practice of the institution is to be regarded in framing rules under sub-cls. (3) and (18) of cl. 12, and r. 17 speaks of a "reasonable regard to the past practice." Inasmuch as sub-cl. (4) of cl. 12 especially provides for rules for the issue of passes, and does not say that in framing such rules "regard must be had to the established practice of the institution," whereas it does say such rules shall not "interfere with the decided right of the Sevaks and Gors" it seems perfectly clear that the Committee are not tied down to past practice. In fact this would prevent them making any rules for passes at all, if the practice prior to 1883 is to be observed, as Diwan Bahadur Rao contends it should. This can clearly never have been intended. Equally it is quite clear that, as sub-cl. (4) expressly says the rules shall not interfere with the decided rights of the Sevaks and the Gors, the decrees in the litigation between them cannot be put entirely on one side, as Sir Chimanlal Setalved asks us to do.

Nor do I think his contention that those decrees can only be given effect to in favour of the individual plaintiffs in the suit of 1887, and not in favour of the Gors as a class, is on any sounder footing. It is quite clear that the plaintiffs sued not merely on their own behalf but on behalf also of their brother Gors as a class and permission to sue on behalf of all having the same interest was in fact asked for under s. 30 of the C. P. C., 1882, corresponding to O. I, r. 8 of the present Code. The prayer was apparently not allowed, and instead the various other Gors affected were joined as plaintiffs (see per Parsons, J., at page 331 of the P. B.) But the suit was treated as a representative suit and a decree granted in regard to the general rights and privileges of the Gors against the Sevaks (ib. pages 292 and 393). Parson, J., thought this irregular, but that interference was not called for (ib. pages 331-332). In the circumstances, the decrees must obviously be treated as establishing the rights of Gors generally, at any rate of those Gors who are Tarwadi Mewada Gors residing at Dakore, the class to which all the plaintiffs belonged. Order I, r. 8, C. P. C., is merely an enabling rule and does not prevent a representative suit being brought in any other manner that the law permits. Thus one or two persons can sue in respect of maladministration of property belonging to the community: Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (6) and an injunction obtained by them will enure for the benefit of all others similarly affected: Purandas Mohandas v. Girdharlal Mathuradas (7). See also Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume IV, Art. 1134 and footnotes (q) and (r) at pages 518, 519. The case is one which, in my opinion, clearly falls under Explanation VI to s. 11 of the C. P. C. Moreover, the scheme impliedly recognises that the suit in question was a representative one by providing in cl. 12 (4) for "the decided rights of the Sevaks and the Gors." The suit of 1887 (it was originally filed in 1884) was the only litigation in regard to rules for passes; and it is absurd to suppose that the framers of the scheme meant that only the rights of the individual plaintiffs and defendants to that suit should be respected. I agree, therefore, with the view taken by the District Judge that the concession as to a free pass should apply to all the Tarwadi Mewada Gors who hold Vrittis at present (P. B. page 116), a view upheld by this Court in Appeals of 1915 (ib. page 229).

The remaining contentions of Sir Chimanlal Setalvad on this point may be taken together. He argued that the rights of the Gors, as so decreed, were not allowed to prevail against the Receiver or subsequent-y against the Temple Committee, and that was equivalent to a judicial decision that the decrees in the litigation referred to did not bind the Temple Committee. He also contended that, as r. 13 of the scheme as sanctioned by the Privy Council allows the pass rules with fees to continue, until the rules mentioned in cl. 12 are framed and sanctioned, there was no longer any objection to those rules being allowed under cl. 12 (4). Both these arguments unduly ignore the provisional nature of the orders and directions referred to. They merely amount to allowing the old rules to continue, without prejudice to the contentions of the respective parties, to be dealt with when rules were made and sanctioned under cl. (12). Mr. McCorkell's judgment (P. B., page 341) refers to the necessity of having some rules pending the framing of a scheme so as to avoid the necessity of referring every current question of management for orders to the District Judge: and he naturally preferred to continue rules which had been working since 1883 and not been interfered with by the Receiver to the task of drawing up interim rules, which were sure to be objected to by one side or the other. In my opinion, it is absurd to treat this order, or r. 13 of the scheme, as anything but provisional and 'without prejudice.' Sir Chimanlal referred to In re Suttan Coldfield Grammar School (8) in support of his contention that r. 13 should be given some degree of finality, though it was expressed to be of a provisional nature. But that was an entirely different case. A scheme was framed, which in form was final and not provisional. It was argued that it was not 'final,' because it contained a clause saying that it might in whole or in part be varied by a future scheme. It was held that this merely reserved the statutory right to make future schemes, which the present scheme could not either then or thereafter prejudice. The contention that the continuance of the rules for passes with fees was not a purely "temporary arrangement" has already been twice rejected by this Court (P. B. pages 227 and 258); and, I think, there is clearly no substance in it.

There remains the question of the legality of levying fees for passes from ordinary worshippers. No doubt this was stigmatised as improper, illegal and ultra vires in the previous litigation (P. B., pages 320, 330 and 332). But these remarks seem to me obiter dicta so far as the rights of worshippers, and not the rights of Gors, which were the subject-matter of the suit, are concerned. They must, of course, be treated with great respect, and we propose to do this in dealing with the present application. But, on the other hand, it is, I think, clear that a right of worship at a temple is not an absolutely unrestricted right. It obviously must be subject to reasonable regulations for preventing overcrowding, etc. Thus in Ankapati Subba Reddi v. Tippana Narayana Reddi (9) it was held that the mere fact that a person had offered worship at a particular place for a number of years would not necessarily give him a right to do so; and that the Courts should be slow to recognise, without proper evidence, claims of right which would materially interfere with the rights of trustees to regulate the worship and ceremonial of temples in the interests of the whole community.

Similarly in England a parishioner's right to attend Church is subject to his obeying the reasonable directions of the Churchwardens as to which seat he shall occupy; and fees or rents can be charged for pews or enclosed seats in a Church, cf., Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XI, Arts. 1453, 1457, at pages 737 to 741. The argument that because there is a statutory duty upon members of the Church of England to go to Church, there is a correlative general right to go to Church on those who are obliged to go [Taylor v. Timson (10)] does not apply to Hindus and others in India. There is also, as pointed out in my learned brother's judgment which I have had an opportunity of perusing, a distinction between the temple and the inner sanctuary, which should be borne in mind. The levy of fees for admission to the latter is not on the same footing as a similar levy for admission to the main hall of the temple. Accordingly, I can see no sufficient ground for treating the rules prescribing the pass-system as illegal and ultra vires in so far as they have imposed fixed fees in payment for the passes, "whether upon the Gors or the general public entitled to worship in the temple at Dakore," as was done in this Court's judgment of April 11, 1919 (ib. page 227), which has been set aside. So far as the judicial decisions of 1887 and 1890 treat of rights other than those of the Gors and the Sevaks, they are not recognised in cl. 12 (4) of the scheme as prevailing over the general power of the Committee "to make rules for the issue of passes," etc; and for reasons, I have already given, I do not think it is legitimate to bring in "the established practice of the institution" in considering this question. The words "to make rules for the issue of passes" are wide enough to cover what is as is pointed out by Lord Herschell in Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood (1) an ordinary accessory right to fix such fees as may be thought reasonable and necessary for carrying into effect the object of the rules. Also the rules allowed to continue under cl. 13 of the scheme provided for the levy of fees. Therefore, so far as yajmans are concerned, I do not think it was beyond the legal competence of the Temple Committee to frame, and of the District Judge to sanction, such rules as are now before us, and I accept the view put before us by the learned Advocate-General on this point.

But, of course, in dealing with the application, we are not confined to the question of legality alone. As a controlling authority, by virtue of the power reserved to us in cl. 20 of the scheme, it is our duty to consider also the objections that have been urged to allowing fees to be charged for passes. It is an important question on which we can, in my opinion, properly interfere, having due regard to the well-known principles on which alone a controlling authority should interfere with the bona fide exercise of the power to make and sanction rules which has been entrusted to specific bodies or persons. I am prepared to accede to the statement that the levy of such fees is not unprecedented or confined to this temple alone: thus I see it is stated by Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in Kalyana Venkataramana Aiyangar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyangar (11) that "in all the important temples in Southern India, devotees are called upon to pay a fixed sum for the archana that has to be performed." On the other hand, such payment is opposed to Hindu sentiment on the subject, as stated by Mr. Dayaram Gidumal (page 320) and Mr. Kennedy (page 116), though the supposition that no other temple in India does anything of the sort seems incorrect. In the present case I agree with my learned brother that the onus lies on the Temple Committee to establish a case justifying the levy of fees from the public visiting the temple and that they have not done this. The financial position of the institution certainly does not indicate any such necessity.

In my opinion, therefore, the rules (as printed at pages 119 to 132 of the P. B.) only require modification to the extent detailed in my learned brother's judgment, and we order accordingly.

As to costs after hearing the parties, we order that, as the Gors and the Sevaks have each partially failed and partially succeeded and the appearance of the representative of the Tambekar family was not really necessary, each party should bear his own costs, except the Advocate-General, whose costs should be paid out of the funds of the institution by the Temple Committee.

Mr. Ratanlal has kindly agreed to translate the modifications of the rules which we have directed: and the translation, if agreed to, should be appended to the decree, otherwise the translation will be settled on speaking to the minutes of the decree.

Madgavkar, J.—This is an application by certain Gors of Dakore, asking this Court to alter certain rules framed by the Dakore Temple Committee and sanctioned by the District Judge, Ahmedabad, under the scheme framed by this Court as modified by the Privy Council. The applicant had applied to the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in a Miscellaneous Application No. 21 of 1912 and to this Court in Appeal No. 223 of 1915. The opponents Sevaks Jairanchod and others after obtaining leave in this Court, appealed to the Privy Council in Appeal No. 95 of 1923. That appeal was allowed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, who held that the judgment of this Court, in appeal dated September 22, 1919, was not competent and must be set aside on the ground of jurisdiction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council added an expression of opinion that this Court had power conferred upon it by cl. 20 of the scheme to alter or modify or add to the rules sanctioned by the District Judge and that this power would be exercised upon application properly made to it.

Accordingly, the Gors who had succeeded in appeal to this Court but who failed in the appeal before the Privy Council make the present application asking this Court under cl. 20 above, to modify certain rules made by the Dakore Temple Committee.

The opponents are, firstly, the Temple Committee by its Manager, secondly the Advocate-General as representing the public and, thirdly, added on his own application, Gopalrao Manohar Tambekar, the Manager of the inam villages. The five Sevaks, the appellants to the Privy Council, were, on their own application, added as opponents by this Court. All the interested parties are, therefore, represented.

Details apart, the main grievance of the Gors applicants relates, firstly, to passes; and, secondly, to fees imposed by the Committee. Again, speaking broadly, the application is supported by Tambekar and, in regard to fees, by the Advocate-General, and is opposed by the Sevaks and the Temple Committee.

A preliminary objection as to jurisdiction was taken on behalf of the Sevaks. The scheme itself, as framed by this Court and amended by the Privy Council is to be found at pages 282-284 part III, Exhibits, the rules as sanctioned by the District Judge at pages 119 to 131 of the Printed Book, and the judgment of this Court in Appeal No. 293 of 1915 on pages 224 to 232 of the Privy Council Record.

The objection of jurisdiction is that the last clause of the scheme under which alone this application would lie does not apply to rules framed by the Committee but only to the provisions of the scheme itself. That clause is as follows: "The provisions of this scheme may be altered, modified or added to by any application to His Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay." The words on 'necessity arising' after the words 'may' which had originally been inserted by this Court, were omitted by direction of the Privy Council.

It is argued for the Sevaks that this power applies only to the provisions of the scheme itself and not to rules framed by the Committee under cl. 12 of the scheme. Sub-clauses 7 and 8 of cl. 12 are as follows:—

"The Committee shall have power,

"(7) to have all the rules framed by them sanctioned by the District Court Ahmedabad to the intent that the rules when sanctioned shall have the same force as if they were part of the scheme;

"(8) to modify, alter and rescind any of the rules made by them with similar sanction."

It is contended that even though the rules framed by the Committee and sanctioned by the District Court have the same force as if they were part of the scheme, this does not make them provisions of the scheme within the meaning of the last cl. 20 above. To this position the Committee assents, but the other parties oppose on the ground that the rules sanctioned by the District Court are part of the scheme and, therefore, within the purview of cl. 20.

I am of opinion that the objection for the Sevaks and the Committee is not tenable. The scheme read as a whole is clear. It had to be framed because of the previous mismanagement of the temple by the Sevaks and Tambekar and the quarrels and litigation between these two parties and the Gors to the prejudice of the temple, the deity and the worshippers. To safeguard these last supreme interests, a Committee was appointed with a resident member on the spot and with powers as defined in cl. 12. The power of making as well as of altering rules was, however, subject to sanction by the District Court of Ahmedabad, and the power to alter the scheme itself was kept in reserve by this Court. This power applied to all the provisions of the scheme at any time. Under cl. 12, sub-cl. 7, the rules framed by the Committee and sanctioned by the District Court become part of the scheme and it is only because they become part of the scheme that they have force in law. The argument for the Sevaks pressed to its logical conclusion would mean either that the rules framed by the Committee and once sanctioned are irrevocable except on the initiative of the Committee and sanction by the District Court under cl. 12 sub-cl. 8, or that this Court would have in the first instance to add an express clause to the scheme, empowering itself to alter the rules and then allow an application such as the present. I do not think that the first alternative is consistent with the reservation of powers in this Court under cl. 20. The second alternative is merely a roundabout way, which serves no purpose and leads to the same result as the present application. Even apart from the continuous litigation in regard to the temple, neither upon the scheme as a whole nor the pertinent clause is it reasonable to hold that the procedure contended for on behalf of the Sevaks was the one contemplated. I am of opinion that cl. 7 has exactly the same construction as though it read that the rules shall be part of the scheme and shall have the same force. In other words they are as liable to alteration or modification by this Court as any other provisions of the scheme itself. The preliminary objection against the application, in my opinion, fails.

On the merits it is contended for the Gors that the system of passes and of fees is opposed, firstly, to the established practice, secondly, to the decided rights of the applicants Gors, which are expressly safeguarded by cl. 12 of the scheme, and, thirdly, to the conclusion of the Courts in the judgment of the Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad in Suit No. 18 of 1887 which is to be found on pages 285 and 323, Part III, and to the judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 36 of 1888 from this decree pages 328 to 332. It is also argued that the necessity for passes or tickets or fees is not shown.

For the Sevaks and the Committee it is contended that in the interests of the Temple both the passes and the fees are indispensable and that they are not contrary to the decided rights of the Gors. These rights are the rights not of a class but only of the particular plaintiffs in the suit of 1888, and passes and fees have worked well in practice from 1883 to 1919. There are also affidavits to show that fees are levied in numerous other temples of both Vaishnavas and Shaivaits such as Dwarka, Rameshwar and others, and it is argued that this Court ought not to interfere with the rules framed by a practical body such as the Committee, which contains leading and disinterested Vaishnava gentlemen of weight and experience.

With this last contention I entirely agree both on general principles as well as on the scheme as framed. As I have said above, the management is intended to be left in the hands of the Committee and the framing of the rules is within the power of the said Committee, subject only to the sanction of the District Court. Once that sanction is obtained it would ordinarily require very good grounds before this Court would allow or lightly entertain any application to alter such rules. The managing member who is always on the spot, the Committee which can often meet there, the District Judge who is within easy distance and knows the local conditions are authorities far better placed to judge ordinarily all matters within the scope of the rules than we are. As was observed in Attorney-General v. Bishop of Worcester (12):

"This Court is in the constant habit of altering schemes which have been settled under its decrees, as the alterations of times and circumstances have required; and it has frequently done so upon petition in the causes in which the decrees have been made; and I do not think that the power of the Court to make such alterations can depend upon the character in which the decree has been made by the Lord Chancellor......

"It is obvious I think that the Court must proceed upon such applications with the utmost possible caution; that what has been done by the Court must not be disturbed, except upon the most substantial grounds, and upon the clearest evidence, not only that the scheme does not operate beneficially, but that it can by alteration be made to do so consistently with the object of the foundation."

Similar observations were made by Lord Alverstone, C. J., in London County Council v. Bermondsey (13).

It is in this spirit that the present application should, in my opinion, be disposed of; and it appears preferable to dispose of the question of passes or tickets separately from that of fees. In spite of the elaborate arguments for the applicants, the passes do not, in my opinion, affect their right as decided by the Courts. The present r. 56 expressly makes reference to their decided rights in Appeal No. 36 of 1838 and the concluding words 'and they will be given a free pass for the same' show that no obstruction in the way of their exercise of these rights is implied or achieved. On the other hand the opinions of the Courts from the time the passes have been issued are practically unanimous that the confined space of the nij mandir and much more of the sinhasan and the large number of pilgrims who desire to enter it, particularly on punam day and festival days, as well as the necessity for the safe custody of the valuable ornaments on the person of the idol—all these circumstances render some regulation of entrance into the nij mandir absolutely necessary; and other than passes or tickets no other means of regulation are suggested. The mere fact that passes were not issued for centuries is no argument. Railways did not then exist, the population was not so numerous, nor travel so safe; and even in the old days, as is pointed out on behalf of the applicants Gors in other applications, the management of the temple both on the part of Tambekar and of the Sevaks left a great deal to be desired. On all these grounds it appears to me that no case is made out for our interference in the matter of the passes, even as regards Gors. The only point in favour of the application as regards the passes is perhaps r. 60 under which Vaishnavas of Dakore Gam can apparently enter the inner temple without passes. There is nothing on the record to show the number of families of Vaishnavas or the number out of these, who habitually resort to the inner temple; and in any case the concluding sentence of r. 60 gives the Manager the power to exclude the Vaishnavas at times of crowd or for any other proper reason. For these reasons, as regards the free passes in general and r. 56 in particular the application, in my opinion, fails.

As regards the fees, it appears that they were first imposed by Sevaks and continued by the Receiver appointed by the Court and then by the Temple Committee. The scale of fees is moderate; and at a late stage of the case a clerk in the office of the temple has put in an affidavit with annextures showing the number of passes and the amounts realised. Here again the argument for the applicants rests on two bases. Firstly, of legal rights, and, secondly, of custom. No fees are charged to the applicants themselves. They are levied on the pilgrims desirous of entering the nij mandir and of performing certain special ceremonies, which involve the touching of the deity, ascending the sinhasan and remaining for some time near the idol. In the judgment in the original suit of 1888, the idea of taking fees in Hindu temples was characterised as repugnant to Hindus and was the subject of very strong comment. It appears that while there are other famous temples such as Pandharpur, where no fees are levied, there are equally others not less famous such as Dwarka, which is second, if at all, only to Dakore, and Rameshwar, where fees are levied. On the first point it appears to me necessary to distinguish between the levy of fees in the main body of the temple, such as the Sabha Manday, and the levy of fees in, so to speak, the Holy of Holies and for special rites, as distinguished from the general worship or Darshan and sight of the idol. As far as I know, it is undoubted that every Hindu has ordinarily a right to enter a Hindu temple and obtain sight of the idol and perform his act of worship from a distance in the main body of the temple, such as the Sabha Mandap here, without any payment of fees; and payment for mere entrance would, I think, undoubtedly be repugnant to Hindu ideas. On the other hand, not only in a Hindu temple but also in other places of worship, there is often a Holy of Holies to which access is not equally free and is regulated by special rules for the special right to enter and perform worship therein; and there does not appear to me to be the same sentiment against the regulation of entrance into this Holy of Holies by whatever rules may be necessary from the point of view of that particular religion and that particular form of worship in that particular temple. Thus, in the ordinary Hindu temple, the Sewak is not always present, the doors of the inner temple where the idol is kept are not always open but are locked up, while he is away, so that without his presence and permission contact with the idol is impossible. At the same time it is, I think, undoubted that until the Sevaks started and the Receiver continued the system of fees for entrance in the nij mandir and for special forms of worship, such compulsory fees were not known in the Dakore temple. Therefore, to a certain extent, the onus is, in my opinion, on the Committee, which wishes to perpetuate these fees, to show that they are necessary or at least advisable. And as it happens, these passes and fees have been enforced for a period of exactly thirty years from 1887 to 1918 till the decision of this Court in 1919 in Appeal No. 223 of 1915, which decided against the fees. Pending the appeal by the Sevaks to the Privy Council, the Sevaks applied to this Court in Civil Application No. 828 of 1919 that the levy of fees for passes should be continued pending the decision of the Privy Council. That application was dismissed on the September 22, 1920, and fees have not since then been levied. We are, therefore, now in a position to see the consequences of the imposition of these fees for a period of thirty years, and their cessation for a period of five years, as shown in the annexures. A, B, by the clerk to the temple.

From these annextures it would appear that the cessation of fees has caused the number of passes both for Darshan and for Charansparsha and Kesarsnana to rise enormously from 11208 and 13641 in 1921 to 21600, and 66400 respectively. Column 4 of annexture A shows that during the later years the total sale-proceeds from these passes and tickets varied from Rs. 7,000 to Rs. 8,000 a year. Under the judicious management of the Committee the income is nearly Rs. 2,00,000 and the expenditure about Rs. 1,65,000. After the total expenditure there is usually a surplus of at least Rs. 15,000 in ordinary years. There is a total reserve of nearly Rs. $1\frac{3}{4}$ lacs.

The net balance is divided in equal shares between the temple funds and the Sevaks. From these figures I conclude that from a pecuniary point of view the imposition of these fees is not necessary for the temple itself and serves the interests of the Sevaks more than that of the temple. If so, and particularly in view of the objection of the Advocate-General representing the general public, I am of opinion that the cessation of the fees has gone on for five years not only without prejudice of the temple but also to the substantial convenience of the worshippers in the inner temple, as is apparent from the large increase in their members. The cessation of fees should, therefore, continue, at least until a clear case of necessity for their imposition is made out by the Temple Committee to the satisfaction of the District Court of Ahmedabad, in which case under cl. 12, sub-cl. 8 of the scheme, it would be open to the Committee to re-impose them. Whether such a necessity will arise, as was argued before us, from famine years or other fall in the revenue of the temple necessary for the up-keep for the services of the idol and the maintenance of the cattle or otherwise, must be a matter for the future on which it is not advisable for us to express any opinion at present.

In the result, therefore, the application, in my opinion, fails as regards free passes or tickets and succeeds as regards fees. As regards fees the payment whether to the temple or to the Sevaks or to the Gors should be, as far as possible, entirely a matter of option with the worshippers and not a matter of compulsion.

MOHANYA—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—NON-APPLICANT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Nature of fraud permissible to prove—Remedies open to applicant.

It is not correct that for the purposes of Art. 164 of the Limitation Act the only fraud that is relevant to be considered in the application for setting aside an ex parte decree is a fraud with reference to the service of the notice and that s. 18 of the Limitation Act does not otherwise apply to such an application. It is open to the applicant in such a case to prove a fraud practised on him by the decree-holder which prevented him from appearing in Court on the date of hearing. [ibid.]

The applicant in such a case has a dual remedy, one by an application to set aside the ex parte decree and another by a civil suit to set aside the decree as having been obtained by fraud. [ibid.]

Application for revision against an order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 25th August 1925, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 3 of 1925.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The decree-holder-applicant, Rao Bahadur M. B. Kinkhede, obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure against the non applicant Mohanya on 30th November 1921. The usual 6 months were allowed for payment. On 6th September 1924 the plaintiff applied for decree final. At the hearing on the 14th October 1924 the present non-applicant alleged that he had made a payment of Rs. 200 and the case was adjourned to the 4th of November 1924, in order to enable the plaintiff's agent to make a reply. At this hearing the non-applicant and the other defendants remained absent and the decree was made final.

On 6th January 1925 the present non-applicant filed an application to have the final decree set aside, making allegations of fraud against the decree-holder's agent and stating that it was in consequence of an assurance given by this man that he had not appeared in Court on 4th November 1924. The Judge of the first Court held that the application was barred by time and that he could not consider the allegations of fraud offered by Mohanya. The Subordinate Judge was apparently of opinion that, having regard to Art. 164 of the Limitation Act, fraud could only be enquired into if it related to the service of summons or notice. In the present case, admittedly the non-applicant had been served with notice of the application for decree absolute. The Subordinate Judge read Art. 164 of the Limitation Act as implying that where there has been proper service, the application must be made within 30 days of the date of the decree, and was of opinion that it was not competent for him to go into the allegations of fraud as the question of the applicant Mohanya's knowledge of the decree only became material thereunder when he had not been duly served.

The present non-applicant appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur. This Judge was of opinion that O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., laid down that an ex parte decree could be set aside when the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. Obviously, he held that fraud might be such a sufficient cause. As regards Art. 164 of the Limitation Act, he was of opinion that s. 18 thereof applied in the peculiar circumstances of this case, and that, if Mohanya's allegations regarding the fraud practised on him were made out, he was entitled to an extension of time upto the date on which he had knowledge of the final decree having been passed. The application for setting aside the decree absolute was accordingly remanded for re-trial to the first Court, and the decree-holder has now come up here in revision against the said order of the Additional District Judge.

I am not impressed by the preliminary objection which was offered on behalf of the non-applicant that no application for revision lies in the present case, even if it be assumed that the finding on the point of limitation was an erroneous one. Obviously, in my opinion, if the Judge of the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that it was permissible for the first Court to enquire into the allegations of fraud made in an application, and not by separate suit, a question of the Court exercising a jurisdiction, which did not vest in it, did arise. Prima facie, therefore, I am of opinion that the present application lies.

I am not prepared, however, to accept the contention offered on behalf of the applicant that, for the purposes of Art. 164 of the Limitation Act, the only fraud, which can be relevant to be considered in the application in question was a fraud with reference to the service of notice and that s. 18 of the Limitation Act could not be applied, even if we assume that Mohanya's explanation as to why he did not appear on the 4th November 1924 be correct in point of fact. The decision in Biroo Gorain v. Jainurat Koer (1) has been quoted, however, in support of the applicant. I do not see that this decision has any peculiar relevancy in the present case, concerned as it was with the consideration of r. 2 of O. XXI, C. P. C. A similar remark applies to the decision in Pasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (2). In my opinion, the applicant had both remedies, viz., that by application and the one by suit open to him: cf Radha Raman Shaha v. Pran Nath Roy (3) and Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (4).

The only question which indeed remains is whether the non-applicant was entitled to the benefit of s. 18 of the Indian Limitation Act. For my own part, I cannot see the slightest reason why this provision does not apply proprio vigore to the facts of the present case. The non-applicant alleged that he did not appear in the decree, final, proceedings on the date we are concerned with as a result of an express representation from the decree-holder's agent that he should not, and need not, so appear. If this is established, he is clearly entitled to an extension of time upto the date on which he came to have knowledge of the decree absolute, in other words, the date on which it came to his knowledge that the alleged fraud had been practised on him.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Additional District Judge was correct in remanding the case, as he did, for enquiry into the alleged fraud. The present application is dismissed. The applicant must bear the non-applicant's costs. I assess Rs. 25 as Pleader's fees.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 1537 OF 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Dalip Singh.

DHANPAT RAI—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

NATHE KHAN AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Decree made final without separate sheet—Irregularity.

Where in a mortgage suit, a preliminary decree is made final by an endorsement on the preliminary decree-sheet and no formal decree is drawn up, the absence of a separate decree-sheet should be considered only an irregularity and the Court should be considered to have made the decree final.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 9th May 1925.

Lala Shaukat Rai, for the Appellant.

Mirza Asghar Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is whether under the terms of the decree passed on the 16th day of March 1921 by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, which was made final on the 15th of October 1921, the decree-holder is entitled to execute separately for costs against the judgment-debtors mentioned in the decree-sheet.

The preliminary decree declared that the amount due to the plaintiff on account of principal, interest and costs calculated up to the 16th day of April 1921 was Rs. 27,921 and that the amount of Rs. 24,923-4-6 should carry interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum until realization. It was further declared that if such payment was not made on or before the 16th of April 1921 the mortgaged property should be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of what was declared due to the plaintiff together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs. The decree further went on to say that Nathe Khan, Sain Das, Shahab Din and Jalal Din should pay the plaintiff costs of the suit amounting to Rs. 1,526-10. No separate final decree was drawn up but on the decree-sheet the learned Senior Subordinate Judge endorsed the words: "This decree is made final" and signed and dated the same. It seems that the decree-holder took out execution for the total sum found due under the decree, namely, Rs. 27,921 which included the Rs. 1,526-10, found due as costs. The mortgaged property was sold and Rs. 15,695 was recovered by the decree-holder. The decree-holder has now taken out execution against the judgment-debtors named in the decree for the costs alone.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has dismissed this application on two grounds:—

(1) That as the decree-holder has already taken out execution for costs and recovered more than the total sum due for costs, there was nothing left to execute so far as costs were concerned. I cannot see how it can be said that the decree-holder's realization of Rs. 15,695 out of Rs. 27,921 due can be said to be in complete satisfaction of the Rs. 1,526-10-0 costs which were included in Rs. 27,921.

(2) The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the decree-holder cannot proceed against the present judgment-debtors without a separate personal decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6 C. P. C. So far as this point is concerned, it seems to me that rightly or wrongly the decree already gave a personal decree against the aforenamed judgment-debtors for the amount of the costs and that, therefore, it was not necessary for the decree-holder to get a further decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6, C. P. C., for the amount of the costs.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has further contended that as no final decree was drawn up, therefore, there is no execution open to the decree-holder at all. In the first place I am not satisfied that where a preliminary decree is given for costs alone, that decree cannot be executed after it has been made final. Further I do not think that the absence of a formal decree-sheet can in the circumstances of this case be taken to mean that no final decree was passed. By the endorsement on the decree-sheet the learned Senior Subordinate Judge intended to make the preliminary decree the final decree and the absence of a separate decree-sheet should in my opinion, only be taken to be an irregularity. I, therefore, accept the appeal and remand the case for disposal. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal.

BENJAMIN SOLOMON BENJAMIN—DEFENDANT.

Jews—Marriage law applicable—Monogamy—Divorce, claim of, by Jewish wife—Grounds—Dissolution of Jewish marriage, how effected—Decree nisi —Alimony—Letters Patent, Bombay, cl. 12—Jurisdiction to entertain matrimonial suits between Jews.

Clause 12 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court gives that Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit arising out of matrimonial disputes between Jews and the law applicable would be Jewish Law "with such adaptations to the circumstances of the case as justice may require." [p. 64, cols. 1 & 2.]

Jews in Bombay, generally speaking, are monogamous, and a husband cannot marry a second wife during the lifetime of her first husband except in certain specified exceptional cases. [p. 67, col. 2.]

A jewish wife can claim divorce on account of repeated ill-treatment received from her husband or turning her out of doors or prohibiting her from visiting her parental home. [ibid.]

A Jewish marriage can be dissolved by Courts of State and it is not necessary to obtain a ritual 'get' or 'bill of divorcement' executed by the husband. [ibid.]

The Court may in a case where the parties are Jews grant a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage. [p. 68, col. 1.]

It cannot be doubted that the Court has also power among the Jews to grant a permanent alimony. [ibid.]

Mr. M. L. Maneksha, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Mulla (with him Messrs. Bahadurji and Amin), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT:—This is a suit between a husband and a wife of the Jewish persuasion. The wife, who is the plaintiff, seeks for relief against the defendant, the husband, on the ground of cruelty and adultery. The facts which are admitted are as follows:—

The families of the parties live in Bombay. On August 12, 1918, there was an agreement in writing between the fathers of the two parties whereby each agreed to contribute Rs. 10,000, the whole sum of Rs. 20,000 to be invested in the joint names of the two parties. This sum of Rs. 20,000 was apparently intended to be the wife's dowry (Ex. 7). That agreement is the starting point of the history of this case and it is clear that the intention expressed in this writing was never departed from but that full effect was not given to it. Sometime in March 1919 War Bonds of the face value of Rs. 20,000 were purchased. To this sum plaintiff's father contributed Rs. 10,000 and the defendant Rs. 10,000. Bonds of the face value of Rs. 10,000 were bought in the name of plaintiff, and bonds of a similar value in the name of defendant. Plaintiff or her father kept the bonds in her name, and defendant kept the bonds in his name. In May 1919, it was decided to sell the bonds as it was thought that the value would fall. The sale was through Messrs. Forbes & Croft, and two cheques were issued by them, each cheque representing the sale-proceeds of one of the two lots. The sale-proceeds Rs. 20,000 were invested in piece-goods and the transactions resulted in a loss. From August to the end of October 1919 there was correspondence over this matter, and some settlement was effected. On November 4, 1919, the parties were married. At the time of the marriage a Kethuba was executed. Shortly after the marriage plaintiff's father, who was engaged in business in piece-goods, went to Basra. There he suffered a heavy loss. He returned about February 7, 1920. On February 15, 1920, plaintiff left defendant's house and complained to the Police that defendant had assaulted her. On February 17, 1920, she applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for an order for maintenance under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. On February 19, 1920, the parties appeared before the Magistrate and the matter was compromised. Thereafter plaintiff returned to the defendant's house. On February 22, 1920, defendant produced the plaintiff's jewellery and plaintiff signed a receipt for it. On March 10, 1920, plaintiff again left the defendant's house. She returned in April 1920 and remained until July 5, 1920. On that date she again left the defendant and on August 17, 1920, she wrote a letter to Mr. A. J. Raymond, at that time the elected Head of the Jewish Community in Bombay, asking for his intervention. On August 22, 1920, a son was born to plaintiff, and by the intervention of friends a reconciliation was effected. On Augnst 28, 1920 plaintiff returned to the defendant's house and remained there till June 5, 1921. On that day she again left the defendant. On June 6, 1921, plaintiff's father complained to the Police that defendant had assaulted plaintiff. On June 7, 1921, plaintiff filed a complaint to the Second Presidency Magistrate under s. 323 ofthe Indian Penal Code. On June 23, 1921, the Magistrate dismissed the complaint for want of independent evidence. Correspondence followed but plaintiff declined to return to her husband. On May 16, 1922, defendant went through the form of marriage with another woman. On May 22, 1922, plaintiff complained to the Jewish Benevolent Society. A meeting was held on May 31, 1922, at which both parties were present. The consideration of the matter was referred to five 'Rabbis.' This meeting was adjourned to June 7. On that day the five 'Rabbis' pronounced their decision which was in favour of plaintiff. Defendant refused to abide by it, and was ex-communicated.

There are various matters of fact in dispute. These I shall deal with later. The plaintiff's case, put shortly, is that her husband cruelly ill-treated her, drove her out of the house, and contracted a second marriage which is invalid under the law by which the parties are governed. She contends (1) that the decision of the 'Rabbis' has dissolved the marriage, (2) that if that is not so then defendant should be compelled to give her a bill of divorcement, or alternatively that the Court should decree dissolution of the marriage. She claims various reliefs on the dissolution of the marriage of which the principal one is that defendant should be ordered to pay to her the sum of Rs. 25,555 specified in the Kethuba executed at the time of the marriage. The main defences are a denial of the allegation of ill-treatment and an assertion that the second marriage is valid; the plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to a divorce in pais; the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this nature between parties professing the Jewish faith.

It will be convenient to set out the issues which have been raised:—

1. Whether plaintiff is entitled to the payment of Rs. 25,555 as claimed in the plaint.
2. Whether plaintiff's father gave Rs. 10,000 to the defendant as part of plaintiff's dowry.
3. Whether plaintiff brought with her clothes, ornaments and wearing apparel of the value of Rs. 5,000 as alleged by her.
4. Whether plaintiff left behind her jewellery, ornaments, wedding presents and furniture as mentioned in Ex. C to the plaint.
5. Whether defendant ill-treated and molested the plaintiff as alleged in the plaint.
6. Whether plaintiff is entitled to any maintenance, and, if so, what.
7. Whether plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that her marriage with defendant is dissolved.
8. Whether plaintiff is entitled to a decree directing the defendant to give a divorce to the plaintiff.
9. Whether this Honourable Court has jurisdiction to grant a declaration and pass a decree as stated in the two preceding issues.
10. Whether plaintiff is entitled to a decree for dissolution of marriage.
11. Whether defendant was entitled according to Jewish Law and custom to marry a second wife during the lifetime of plaintiff.

The case gives rise to a number of questions which are by no means easy to resolve in the absence of any authority.

I propose to deal first with the question of jurisdiction and the question of the law to be applied to the parties in this suit, if the Court can entertain it.

In order to understand the question of jurisdiction it is necessary to approach it historically. Before the creation of the High Court there were two Courts: the Supreme Court exercising jurisdiction in the Town and Island of Bombay, and the Sadar Diwani Adalat exercising jurisdiction over the rest of the Bombay Presidency.

The Supreme Court had jurisdiction under the Charter of 1823. An examination of that Charter will show that the jurisdiction fell under four heads, viz., Common Law, Equity, Ecclesiastical, and Admiralty. The Court was thus (1) a Court of Common Law having the jurisdiction and authority of the Court of King's Bench 'as far as circumstances will admit'; (2) a Court of Equity having power to administer justice 'as near as may be' according to the rules and precedents of the High Court of Chancery; (3) a Court of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction having power to administer the Ecclesiastical Law 'as used and exercised in the Diocese of London in Great Britain,' and (4) a Court of Admiralty. The limits of the jurisdiction were the Town and Island of Bombay with certain exceptions which need not here be specified.

The Sadar Diwani Adalat was established in 1799 and sat in Bombay until 1820. In that year it was transferred to Surat. In 1827 it was re-transferred to Bombay. This Court was a Court of Appellate Jurisdiction to which appeals lay from the Local Courts established by the Company in the interior of the Presidency.

In 1856, the case of Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (1) came before the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court. The plaintiff was a Parsi lady and she sued her husband, a Parsi, for restitution of conjugal rights. The suit was heard on the Ecclesiastical side of the Supreme Court. The defendant objected that the Court had no jurisdiction but the objection was overruled. On appeal the Privy Council upheld the objection. The importance of the case lies in this that it is well-known that this case was one of the matters taken into consideration in framing cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court. The case is further important as showing what the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and that of the Sadar Diwani Adalat, was in cases of this nature. The Privy Council held that the suit was not maintainable, and, put shortly, the ground of the decision was that it was impossible to apply the Law of the Diocese of London, a Christian Law, to persons professing the Zoroastrian religion. Their Lordships approached the case as being strictly an Ecclesiastical proceeding, and having concluded that for this reason the suit could not be maintained, they proceed as follows (page 390*):—

"But we should much regret if there were no Court and no law whereby a remedy could be administered to the evils which must be incidental to married life amongst them (the Parsees.) We do not pretend to know what may be the duties and obligations attending upon the matrimonial union between Parsees, nor what remedies may exist for the violation of them, but we conceive that there must be some laws, or some customs having the effect of laws, which apply to the married state of persons of this description. It may be that such laws and customs do not afford what we should deem, as between Christians, an adequate relief, but it must be recollected that the parties themselves could have contracted for the discharge of no other duties and obligations than such as, for time out of mind, were incident to their own caste; nor could they reasonably have expected more extensive remedies, if aggrieved, than were customarily afforded by their own usages. Such remedies we conceive that the Supreme Court on the civil side might administer, or at least remedies as nearly approaching to them as circumstances would allow. In suits commenced on the civil side, the peculiar difficulties which belong to the exercise of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in some matrimonial cases would not arise. Proceedings might be conducted on the civil side with such adaptation to the circumstances of the case as justice might require, though on the Ecclesiastical side such modification would be wholly irreconcilable with Ecclesiastical Law.

"We have been led to make these observations, not merely by general considerations but more particularly by the case of Mihirwanjee Nuoshirwanjee v. Awan Ball (2). That case shows that the Sudder Adawlut at Bombay will take cognizance of matrimonial suits between Parsees, and will afford them such relief as a due regard to their own laws and customs will allow; it also proves, as indeed must be expected, that those laws and customs are wholly at variance with the principles which govern the matrimonial law of the Diocese of London, and incompatible with the Ecclesiastical Law, as in such cases is administered. One instance will suffice. It appears that, under many circumstances, the husband is permitted to take a second wife, the first being alive."

*Page of 6 M. I. A.—[Ed.]

An examination of the case cited from Borrodaile shows that the Court had no doubt as to the jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a Parsi lady for a divorce from her husband. The parties resided outside the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council, therefore, decided that the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, could not entertain a suit between Parsis for restitution of conjugal rights. They suggested, but did not decide, that the Supreme Court on its civil side could deal with matrimonial disputes between parties other than Christians, applying to those cases the law of the parties with any necessary modifications. They tacitly at least approved of the practice of the Courts subordinate to the Sadar Diwani Adalat in dealing with such matters. It would be difficult to hold on this decision that the Supreme Court could not upon its civil side have entertained such a suit as that now before me, and it must follow that the law to be applied would have been the Jewish Law.

Until 1861 there was no change in the constitution of the Courts. In that year the Act for establishing High Courts of Judicature was passed (24 & 25 Vic. c. 104). The Supreme Court and the Sadar Diwani Adalat were abolished (s. 8). The jurisdiction of the High Court which took their place is defined by s. 9. That jurisdiction is two-fold:—

1. Such as is prescribed by the Letters Patent to be issued under the Act.

2. All the jurisdiction vested in either of the Courts abolished by the Act 'save as by such Letters Patent may be otherwise directed and subject and without prejudice to the Legislative powers of the Governor-General of India in Council.'

It is necessary for the present purpose to consider the original Letters Patent of 1862. It will be seen that the following jurisdictions are defined.—

(I) Civil Jurisdiction, cls. 11 to 20.

(II) Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction cls. 31 and 32.

(III) Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction, cls. 33 and 34.

(IV) Matrimonial Jurisdiction, cl. 35.

In Nusserwanjee Pestonji Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia (3) the Appellate Court had recourse to the Despatch of the Secretary of State of May 14, 1862, forwarding the Letters Patent as an aid to the construction of this document. I am, therefore, entitled to refer to paras. 17 and 33 of that Despatch. The first of these paragraphs explains the scope of cl. 12. "17. The terms of cl. 12...are intended to include every description of case over which the Moffussil Courts have jurisdiction." Then there follows a reference to the decision of the Privy Council in Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (1) in the following words:—

"Further, a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, pronounced in April 1856, ruled against the exercise of the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters matrimonial between others than Christians, and even expressed some hesitation as to whether that Court could administer a remedy in such cases on the civil side. It is one object of the present Charter to do away with all such restrictions and limitations, as far as this can be done without trenching on the proper province of legislation. It has, therefore, been sought to invest the High Court, in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, with as ample powers in receiving and determining cases of every description, and in applying a remedy to every wrong, as are exercised by the Courts not established by Royal Charter, and thus to place the Court of first instance in the Presidency Towns, and in the interior of the country in this respect, as nearly as may be, on the same footing."

The scope of cl. 12, so far as concerns the matter before me, is thus clear. Apart from this commentary the words 'suits of every description' could hardly be more comprehensive.

As I shall show presently the cases where Christian parties are concerned are specially provided for in the Letters Patent, and in the legislation undertaken in consequence thereof. Also the Parsis have now their own Matrimonial Tribunal constituted by a Special Act of the Legislature. In other communities in this country divorce is possible by act of the parties themselves, or is practically unknown owing to the existence of polygamy. But nonetheless there are cases in the reports in which the High Court in its original civil jurisdiction has exercised jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes and has applied the law of the parties for the purpose of giving relief. In Dadadji Bhikaji v. Rukmabai (4) a decree for restitution of conjugal rights was made as between Hindus. In that case Sargent, C. J., said (page 310*): "It was not attempted to be denied that, since the expression of opinion by the Privy Council in Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (1) 'the Civil Courts of this country 'should afford remedies for the evils incidental to married life,' suits for the restitution of conjugal rights had frequently been entertained by the Civil Courts in the case of natives, whether Hindus or Muhammadans." In a later case, A. v. B. (5), a suit for divorce by a Muhammadan lady against her husband was entertained without objection. It may be observed that the fact that the Legislature has made provision from a very early time for the administration of Hindu Law between Hindus and Muhammadan Law between Muhammadans does not affect the question of jurisdiction. What law is applicable is a different question.

It would appear from the decision of the Privy Council that in dealing with matrimonial disputes the law to be applied was the law of the parties. That being so in the case of the Supreme Court, the same rule applied to the High Court by virtue of cl. 18 of the Letters Patent of 1862 and cl. 19 of the Amended Letters Patent of 1865. Whether that would be so in other matters it is unnecessary to consider. The case of Muhammadans and Hindus was provided for in the Charter of 1823, but as regards inhabitants of Bombay it has been held that the English Common Law is applicable: see Naoroji Beramji v. Rogers (6) (Parsis): Lopes v. Lopes (7) (Portuguese). In the case last cited, Westropp, C. J. recognised that question of matrimonial law formed an exception to the general rule (page 190†). Section 112 of the Government of India Act, 1915 was cited in argument but it is open to doubt whether the words used cover a suit such as this. If the Court has jurisdiction it must, in the absence of any Statute, apply either the English Law or the law of the parties. In my opinion the Law of the parties, here the Jewish Law, is applicable. That appears to be the result of the cases. The history of the legislation upon this question is dealt with in Chap. IV of Ilbert's Government of India (3rd Edition), and at page 359* the learned Author sums up the case as to "the law applicable to persons neither Hindus nor Muhammadans" and arrives at the same conclusion.

Reliance has been placed on cl. 35 of the Letters Patent as limiting the jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes to cases where the parties are Christians. There are, however, no expressions limiting the jurisdiction which the Supreme Court possessed 'on its civil side.' The scope of this clause is confined to proceedings between Christians. It was intended to re-place in a wider and more modern form the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The scope of the clause and of the proviso is explained in para. 33 of the Despatch. The intention was that legislation should be undertaken to deal more completely with matrimonial disputes between Christians, and it is well-known that after a prolonged delay due to the difficulty of determining whether residence or domicil should be the test, the Legislature selected the former alternative, and enacted the Indian Divorce Act of 1869. I find nothing here which touches the case of persons other than Christians, or in any way trenches upon the jurisdiction conferred by cl. 12.

But the main argument for the defence—and it is this which has made it necessary for me to examine the matter at some length—rests upon the decision of the Appeal Court in Nusserwanjee Pestonjee Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia (3). It is necessary to examine that case carefully in order to understand what was the question before the Court. The plaintiff, a Christian lady, was married to the defendant, a Parsi, at the marriage Register Office in the District of Kensington in the county of London. She came to Bombay and sued the defendant under the matrimonial jurisdiction of the High Court, which is strictly speaking the jurisdiction conferred by cl. 35 of the Letters Patent. There is no other matrimonial jurisdiction to nomine, and it is limited to cases arising between Christians. In the Trial Court an issue was raised and the argument turned on the interpretation of s. 2 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, viz., whether the 'residence' of the petitioner justified the requirements of that section. The Court held upon that narrow point that there was jurisdiction. The case went on appeal. An examination of the judgment will show that the Court first considered the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, and then pointed out that the High Court had such matrimonial jurisdiction as was conferred by the Letters Patent, or as was exercised by the Supreme Court. The Ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Supreme Court could not be exercised between Parsis [Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (1)]: cl. 35 of the Letters Patent only gave matrimonial jurisdiction between Christians. The Indian Divorce Act, 1869, was enacted to supplement cl. 35 of the Letters Patent, and s. 4 limited the jurisdiction to decree restitution of conjugal rights to cases between Christians. Therefore, it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction where the defendant was a Parsi. The true effect of that decision is that in the exercise of the matrimonial jurisdiction conferred by cl. 35 of the Letters Patent, or the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, the High Court had no jurisdiction to give a decree for restitution of conjugal rights in a case where the plaintiff is a Christian and the defendant a Parsi. No case is an authority except upon its own facts. Here the parties are Jews and the question is whether cl. 12 of the Letters Patent gives this Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit arising out of matrimonial disputes between Jews. The decision of the Appeal Court does not touch the true construction of cl. 12. The arguments of Counsel in the Appeal Court are somewhat more fully set out in the report of the case Nusserwanjee Pestonji Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia (3). The only reference made to cl. 12 of the Letters Patent was for the purpose of illustrating the meaning of the word "resides." The case proceeded solely on the basis that the suit was one in the exercise of the "matrimonial jurisdiction" conferred by cl. 35 of the Letters Patent or by the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. It follows that nothing was there decided which is in any way relevant to the question now before me. I reach this conclusion the more readily as it avoids the position which the Privy Council deprecated so strongly in Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (1), when their Lordships said (page 390*): "But we should much regret if there were no Court and no law whereby a remedy could be administered to the evils which must be incidental to married life amongst them." Those words are as applicable to Jews as to litigants of any other persuasion, and, as I have endeavoured to show, cl. 12 of the Letters Patent was deliberately intended to remove the difficulty. I hold, therefore, that I have jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and that in deciding it the Jewish Law must be applied "with such adaptations to the circumstances of the case as justice may require."

It may further be pointed out that the Courts outside Bombay exercise jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes between persons who are not Christians, and that the jurisdiction, so far as I know, has never been questioned [cf. Abdul v. Hussenbi (8) and Bai Hansa v. Abdalla (9)], and it would be highly anomalous were it necessary to hold that the High Court had no jurisdiction in such matters as between members of those communities living in the City of Bombay.

[Here his Lordship discussed the evidence in the case and then proceeded:—] If the whole history of the case is considered and the evidence of the principal parties, the truth, in my opinion, lies on the side of the plaintiff. Defendant, as he says in his affidavit already alluded to, regarded himself as entitled to receive Rs. 10,000 from plaintiff's father, and his disappointment in this matter appears to have prejudiced him against the plaintiff. Possibly it is true that she was inclined to support her father in this matter. But, whatever the provocation, he was not justified in beating her and turning her out of the house and in retaining her property as he appears to have done. I would add here, with reference to a somewhat obscure charge made by plaintiff, that defendant was anxious to explain this matter, but it appeared to me unnecessary to go into unsavoury details in the absence of any more definite statement, especially as no corroboration was possible.

After June 5, the parties lived apart. Neither took any definite action either by process of law, or by any application to the leaders of the community. In May 1922, defendant determined to marry another woman. On May 8, 1922, he wrote to Mr. Raymond setting out his version of the matter and asking for permission to marry a second wife "according to our Jewish Laws." In para. 11 of the written statement the defendant states that "he married another wife with the permission of the President of the Jewish Benevolent Society." In his evidence he says: "Mr. Raymond sent me oral permission to marry a second wife. His statement about that is untrue. I applied for permission in writing. It was not necessary to get a reply in writing. I only applied in order to get the loan of the canopy and other articles (articles belonging to the synagogue used at marriages). It was only a formality." Upon this point defendant called one witness Benjamin Salem, the caretaker of the synagogue. He says he took the letter to Mr. Raymond, and that defendant told him to tell Mr. Raymond that if he did not get permission he would marry outside the synagogue. Mr. Raymond said: "We cannot prevent him doing that." Mr. Raymond says: "It is false that defendant applied to me for permission to marry again and that I gave that permission. It is impossible. It would be against the wishes of the community and against our religion." This witness is independent and reliable. His memory as to the particulars of the case is not very clear, but his statement set out above depends not on memory alone, but on the stronger ground that he could not have done what is alleged. Defendant's own witness corroborates him, for what Mr. Raymond said to this witness amounts to a plain refusal of the permission applied for. I have set this matter out at some length as it illustrates the value to be attached to defendant's evidence. First, he sets out this permission as a defence; then when Mr. Raymond appears and contradicts him, he endeavours to change his ground, and to represent that it was after all only a formality and the words used by Mr. Raymond amounted to a permission. I am not now dealing with the legality of this second marriage, though on that point too the admission in the written statement is somewhat awkward, and defendant may, therefore, have been all the more ready to explain it away.

On May 16, 1922, defendant went through a form of marriage with another woman. On May 22, plaintiff wrote to the Jewish Benevolent Society (Ex. Q.) setting out her case and asking for an investigation. There is no doubt that the second marriage made the breach irreparable, and was the cause of this action on the part of the plaintiff.

A word of explanation is now necessary as to the position and functions of the Jewish Benevolent Society. This Society has been in existence for many years and is regarded as the governing body in the community. It appears that the head of the community is elected, and is President of the Committee of the Society. There are some eight or nine members of the Committee who are also elected by the community. This Committee has no legal constitution and no legal powers save such as it may possess by the custom of the community. In this case it is clear from what has already been said that both parties recognised the Society as competent to consider matrimonial disputes, but it would be impossible on the evidence in the case to hold that the Society, or its Committee, has power to divorce husband and wife. The practice is to give notice to the parties and to hear them and to refer the dispute to persons skilled in Jewish Law. That was the course followed in this case. A meeting was summoned for May 31, of which defendant had notice. The parties were heard, and the case was referred to five learned men, who were then present. On that point Mr. Raymond's memory appears to be defective. The evidence of the Secretary of the Society, Mr. Reuben, of Ibrahim Moses Samuel who signed the decision or resolution, and of plaintiff, leaves no room for doubt that the five learned men who pronounced the decision were present at the meeting of May 31. I am unable in the face of the evidence to believe defendant's statement that he did not receive fair treatment. On June 7, 1922, the decision was pronounced (Ex. F.) There appears to have been some attempt to settle matters after that date. Finally, as defendant would not accept the decision he was formally ex-communicated.

It is now necessary to consider the facts so stated in the light of the Jewish Law. At the outset a difficulty arises owing to the uncertain state of that law which is due in a measure to historical causes. The subjugation of Judaea in the reign of the Emperor Vespasian brought about the political annihilation of the Jewish nation. From that date no Jewish State has existed and there has been no Government based on Jewish Law which could secure uniformity of practice, and bring about the removal of that which has become obsolete. The Jews are now widely dispersed, and while the principles of modern Judaism have modified many provisions of the Rabbinical Code in order to make them conform to the requirements of the laws of the countries in which the Jews live, the more conservative Jews regard all the norms of the Rabbinical Code as ever binding and unchangeable. The Jews in Bombay come mainly from Baghdad, and it is improbable that they regard the Jewish Law in precisely the same light as the Jews living in England or in America. It is plain that the custom of the community must be considered on points where there is room for doubt. In the present case I have been referred to a work entitled. "The Jewish Law of Marriage and Divorce by the Revd. Dr. Mielziner." It contains, so far as can be judged, a clear and accurate account of the law based upon the original sources which are cited throughout. That law is founded on the Mosaic and Talmudic Law, and it is agreed in this case that in the sixteenth century that law was codified in a work styled "Shulchan Aruch" of which the third part "Eben Ha-Ezer" contains the Matrimonial Law. Translations of portion of this book have been put in by either party and the substance of much of it is reproduced by Mielziner. In addition to these authorities there is the evidence of witnesses as to the customs of the Jews in Bombay.

At the outset the question arises whether the proceedings which I have discussed could bring about a dissolution of the marriage. The decision of the Privy Council in Sasson v. Sasson (10) shows that there may be a Jewish body competent to give a divorce. In that case the divorce was pronounced by the Grand Rabbinat at Alexandria. But in this case I am unable to hold that there has been a divorce. The decision or award (Ex. F) does not purport to have that effect, and the one witness from among those who signed it is emphatic that there has been no divorce. In terms it directs the husband to give a bill of divorcement to his wife, which under the Rabbinical Law was essential to the dissolution of a marriage. How far that is so now I shall consider later. It is further clear that the leaders of the community treated the parties as being still husband and wife. I need not discuss the point further, for Mr. Maneksha wisely conceded that it was difficult to argue that the marriage had been dissolved. I will only point to Mr. Raymond's statement that there are no "Rabbis" in the strict sense of the word in Bombay. What is precisely necessary to constitute a Rabbi is a question which cannot be answered on the materials before me.

It is, therefore, necessary to consider whether plaintiff has made out causes which under the Jewish Law entitle her to claim a divorce. The causes alleged are two: (1) that she was beaten and turned out of the house; and (2) that her husband is living in adultery. The second of these raises the question of the legality of the second marriage, and it is here that the Rabbinical Law is undoubtedly obscure and opposed to the more enlightened practice of modern Judaism. The matter is discussed in Chap. IV of Mielziner's work. Upon that statement of the law it would be difficult to hold that the second marriage was in all times and circumstances invalid. But it is clear from the translations of the "Eben Ha-Ezer," which have been put in (Ex. Z), that this rule is recognised that in every city the custom of which prohibits marrying a second wife a man cannot marry a second wife. This appears to be an expression of the Talmudic Law. "The law of the country is the binding law" (see Mielziner, page 23). Some discussion has arisen as to the correct scope of this rule. It was argued for the defendant that "the law of the country" means the laws enacted or enforced by the Government of the country in which the Jew is for the time being living, while for plaintiff it was suggested that it means the law which the Jews follow by virtue of any local custom. I have no doubt that the former interpretation is correct. That is the light in which Mielziner interprets it. But, it is further argued that the Law of British India makes polygamy lawful, and, therefore, it is lawful to Jews. That argument is based on a fallacy. There is no such thing as "the law of the country" upon this matter in India. In this country there are in force side by side systems of law which are polygamous, monogamous, and even polyandrous. As I have already said there are two systems of law which can conceivably be applied here, the English Law and the law of this particular community. The English Law undoubtedly requires monogamy but it is in no sense the law of the country. In my opinion it is the law of the community which must prevail and that is "the law of the country", being the law which the Courts will apply. The question, therefore, is whether these Jews follow the Rabbinical Law upon this point or whether they are by custom monogamous. Upon that point the evidence is necessarily oral.

(10) (1924) A. C. 1007; 94 L. J. P. C. 13

The witnesses upon the point show no signs of bias, nor have they any visible motive for favouring the plaintiff. Mr. Raymond says second marriages are not recognised in their community. I mean, of course, the taking of a second wife by a husband during the lifetime of his first wife. Mr. Reuben, the Secretary of the Jewish Benevolent Society, gives evidence to the same effect. Saleh Moses Gubbay says that the custom both in Baghdad and in Bombay forbids such marriages. He states that he himself was betrothed in Baghdad and was unable to marry in Bombay while that betrothal was undissolved. (See Mielziner, page 76 as to the binding effect of a betrothal in Jewish Law.) The evidence of Ibrahim Moses Samuel is equally emphatic. Mr. Reuben, Examiner in Hebrew in the Bombay University, states that in three cases a second wife is allowed: (1) where there has been no issue for 10 years; (2) where the first wife is in such a state of health as to prevent access; and (3) adultery. Though this witness belongs to the Beni Israel community, he is no doubt entitled to be considered an expert on Jewish Law. The exceptions which he admits are recognised in very similar terms by the other witnesses. Three cases in which Jews in Bombay have taken a second wife are mentioned in the evidence, but it is not possible to say that they do not fall within one or other of the exceptions. Indeed there is positive evidence that in one at least of these cases the first wife had become insane. In my opinion the evidence of Ibrahim Moses Samuel is correct when he says "we follow the rule laid down by Rabbi Ghersom" The explanation of this statement will be found at page 30 of Mielziner's work. The whole of the Chapter entitled "Monogamy and Polygamy" is instructive upon this matter. Reference may also be made to page 483 of "The Jewish Religion (M. Friedlander)." The author speaks of "The abolition of polygamy by Rabbenu Gershom (eleventh century)" The evidence here is in accordance with the opinion expressed by these authors, and I feel little doubt that the community, with which I am concerned, is generally speaking monogamous. It is unnecessary to consider the exceptions to the rule for this case is plainly not one of them.

The other ground is made out by the evidence in the case. Among "the wife's causes for divorce" Mielziner gives at page 123 as No. 3 "on account of repeated ill-treatment received from her husband, as for beating her, or turning her out of doors, or prohibiting her from visiting her parental home." The Eben-Ha-Ezer is cited as an authority for this proposition.

It would thus appear that under the Jewish Law the plaintiff is entitled to a divorce, and it may be noted that the result would be the same under English Law as it now stands. The question of procedure remains. Under the strict Rabbinical Code a ritual "get" or "bill of divorcement," executed by the husband, would have been necessary, but in modern times this is not insisted upon and a marriage can be dissolved by the Courts of the State. This is clearly recognised by (Friedlander, page 488) and Ch. XVI of Mielziner's work leads to the same conclusion. It will be observed that the award or decision made at the instance of the Jewish Benevolent Society in this case takes the form of a direction to the husband to divorce his wife. The only possible sanction is ex-communication. In this case that has failed and the remedies of the Rabbinical Code are ineffectual. The Court, must in the words of the Privy Council, "administer remedies as nearly approaching to them as the circumstances will allow." The plaintiff prays the Court to dissolve the marriage, and there is, in my opinion, no valid reason why the Court should refuse to do so. I do not know that the practice of the English Courts is of much assistance in determining the powers of this Court. The jurisdiction rests on a different basis, but as a guide to the appropriate order to be made in such a case, that practice is most valuable. It appears that in matrimonial causes between Jews the Courts in England apply the Jewish Laws [Lindo v. Belisario (11)], in order to determine such questions as whether a sufficient cause for divorce exists [see also Sasson v. Sasson (10)], but in granting relief the form of decree customary in cases between Christians is made [Joseph v. Joseph (12)]. There must, therefore, I think be a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, not to be made absolute for a period of three months from this date.

It cannot be doubted that the Court has power to order permanent alimony. The defendant is bound to make provision for his wife after divorce and for his child. Nor can it be doubted that the wife is entitled to the custody of the child. But the nature and amount of this provision cannot be determined unless and until the decree is made absolute. But there is one matter which has been fully argued which may be determined here and now, and that is the wife's claim to be paid the sum specified in the Kethuba. This document is invariably executed at a Jewish marriage. A bound volume is kept at the synagogue containing printed forms in Hebrew and English with blank spaces for the amounts and the names of the parties. The sum in this case is Rs. 25,555. plus "200 silver Zuz." The language of the document is archaic and formal. The history of the Kethuba is given by Mielziner at page 85 of his book. The conclusion of the matter is stated thus (page 89): "As the wife, in our days, is sufficiently protected by the civil laws of ths country, and in many cases also by special marriage settlements made in a more legal form, the Kethuba is generally regarded as an unnecessary, useless formality, and is almost entirely dispensed with." The same view of the Kethuba was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Mozelle Joshua v. Sophie Arakie (13), but the question of the wife's rights on divorce are left undecided in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. The Kethuba is, however, said to be "a survival which is now a mere formality and nothing more." I have already shown that in this case the Kethuba does not represent any real transaction, and I do not believe that the parties intended that it should be acted upon. Therefore the claim based upon it must fail.

In concluding this judgment I must express my obligation to Counsel for the assistance I have received in dealing with a matter which is necessarily difficult in the absence of any cases bearing directly upon the questions in issue. I cannot but feel that in spite of that assistance there is much which I could have wished to deal with more fully than has been possible in the absence of authority. I would finally suggest for the consideration of the Jewish community whether they would not be well-advised to place upon a more satisfactory basis the adjustment of their matrimonial disputes. This could be done either by the establishment of a 'bethdin' such as is found in Jeruselem and Baghdad, and, I believe, in London, or by special legislation similar to the Parsi Marriage Act. The community is enlightened and progressive, and should appreciate the benefit of certainty as to the law and procedure upon these matters which must vitally affect domestic life among them.

One further question remains and that is as to the value of the plaintiff's property in the hands of the defendant. I have given my reasons for holding that defendant has retained this property and there is thus a presumption against him. The evidence of his one witness—a reliable witness no doubt—that plaintiff on one occasion was wearing a valuble ring—is plainly of no value. The plaintiff swears that her jewellery was worth Rs. 3,500. This is by no means improbable in view of the position of the parties. There is no evidence to the contrary. The details of the property not returned are shown by her in Ex. K. The total value is Rs. 4,557-12-0. I accept this figure. No order can, however, be made until the decree is made absolute.

The determination of issue No. 6 must await the confirmation of the decree.

There must be a decree nisi for divorce not to be made absolute until the expiry of three months from this date.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for partition of their 4/5th shares in the plaint properties which form the ancestral properties of themselves and their father, the 4th defendant. The 1st defendant brought a money suit against the 4th defendant in S C. S. No. 1165 of 1908 on the file of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court and attached the defendants' properties and purchased them in Court-auction subject to a usufructuary mortgage in favour of Swaminadha Pathar upon which Rs. 1,000 were due. The only question for decision in this case is whether the 1st defendant in the suit, purchased the interest of the 4th defendant only or that of all his sons also. Both the lower Courts have decided in favour of the former alternative and have given the plaintiffs a decree for partition of their 4/5th share. Whether what the purchaser got at the Court sale was the entire family property or only the 4th defendant's share therein is a 'mixed question of law and fact. It has been so held by this Court in Gnanammal v. Muthusami (1) and by the Privy Council in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (2) and in Somasundara Avalappa Nicker v. Murugappa Chetiyar (3). The statement in Mahabir Pershad v. Moheswar Nath Sahai (4) and in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (5) that it is only a question of fact in each case may be disregarded in the light of later pronouncements. As a Court of Second Appeal I have only to see that the Courts below have rightly applied the law to the facts found by them. A number of cases have been cited in which a similar question had to be decided as to the nature of the interest which passed in a sale or family property. I will not refer to them as Mayne in his Hindu Law, 9th Edition, page 433, has summed up the effect of all these decisions. He says: "The mere fact that the father might have transferred his son's interest affords no presumption that he has done so, and those who assert that he has done so must make out not only that the words in the conveyance are capable of passing the larger interest, but that they are such words as a purchaser might be reasonably expected to require." Then in r. 4 he says: "The fact that the sons have not been made parties to the proceedings in execution is a material element in considering whether the creditor aimed at the larger or was willing to limit himself to the minor remedy."

Both the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge appear from their judgments to have been quite alive to the effect of the rulings on the subject of the sons' liability to discharge debts of their father which are not tainted by illegality or immorality from their shares of the family property.—They have considered the frame of the suit, the terms of the decree, and the sale certificate as well as the conduct of the parties and the character of the debt. The debt was a personal debt of the father due upon a promissory-note as it appears from the judgment (Ex. A) in S. C. S. No. 1165 of 1908. In other proceedings between the parties, it was found that the debt was not incurred for immoral purposes [see Ex. VIII (a)]. The District Munsif came to the conclusion in this suit, "There can be no doubt about the creditor's right to proceed against the family property to recover the debt." But in the present case there are the following significant facts :— At the trial of the suit the defendants were exonerated as no guardian was appointed to represent them. The decree directed payment of Rs. 110 by the 1st defendant alone. In the petition for transmitting the decree for execution, it was noted that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 had been exonerated and that no relief was asked against them. In the execution petition this fact was repeated and the prayer was for attachment of the immoveable property belonging to and enjoyed by the 1st defendant. In the sale proclamation the interest of the judgment-debtor was described as certain survey numbers inherited and enjoyed by the 1st defendant. The sale certificate also contained a note that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 had been exonerated and the Subordinate Judge also relied on the fact that the property was bought for Rs. 75 which is much below its value even after allowing for the encumbrance. The price at which the auction-purchaser managed to secure the property is not, in my opinion, so important as the low upset price, viz., Rs. 50 at which the sale commenced. If there is no competition, a successful bidder naturally will not give more than is sufficient to secure the sale being knocked down in his favour. As against this there is nothing but the mere fact that the sale certificate mentions the survey numbers to be sold without stating that only the interest of the 4th defendant was made the subject of the sale. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the lower Courts were entitled to come to the conclusion that only the father's share in the suit properties was sold and I cannot say that their findings are wrong. I, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

After the sale had been concluded, one of the sons, Doraiswami, died. The Subordinate Judge found that his share must go to the plaintiffs and the 4th defendant. Although the 4th defendant was not originally a party to the suit and did not claim 1/20th share on account of the death of his son, I think that the Appellate Court had power, under O. XLI, r. 33, to make this award in his favour. Appellant will pay the 4th respondent's Vakil's fee and vakalat upon this item.

Application for revision of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Basim, dated the 14th January 1925, in Civil Suit No. 272 of 1924.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise a decree passed by the Sub-Judge, Basim, under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, directing the defendants to put the plaintiff in possession of a house in the town of Basim, and ordering that the plaintiff's costs should be paid by the defendants. The facts of the case may be stated thus. The plaintiff has been in possession of the house as a mortgagee under a possessory mortgrge dated 26th August 1911, executed by one Mahatapkhan and his sons. Defendants are said to have dispossessed the plaintiff in the month of May 1924. The suit was filed on 6th August 1924.

The defence was that the defendants had been in possession of the house for the last 15 years with the permission of one Nasirbee, the daughter of Aslamkhan to whom the house belonged. The defendants were allowed to live free of rent, they keeping the house in good repair. Subsequently the defendants purchased the house from Nasirbee on 6th March 1924 by a registered deed of sale. Defendants contended that the suit is not maintainable as the plaintiff was not in possession of the house within 6 months from the date of the suit.

The case was tried on the following issues:—

"1. Was the plaintiff in possession of the house in suit within 6 months from the date of this suit as a mortgagee in possession under the mortgage bond, dated 26th August 1911 as alleged by him?

2. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?"

The Court found that the plaintiff was in possession as a mortgagee through the mortgagor to whom he had leased the house under a bhadechitthi, dated 28th June 1911; that the plaintiff's evidence shows that he was in possession till the month of May last year, and that the defendants had failed to establish their prior possession.

The contentions raised on behalf of the applicants defendants in this Court are twofold. The first is that under the circumstances it was incumbent on the plaintiff's tenants to bring the suit, and that the plaintiff could not bring it himself. Secondly, that the evidence in the case does not show that the tenants were ejected from possession within 6 months of the filing of the suit.

As regards the first point reliance is placed on Dinkarsha v. Anantsha (1) where the Judicial Commissioner of these Provinces laid down that where a tenant has been ejected by a third party, the landlord is not competent to bring a suit for possession under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. A perusal of the judgment shows that the question of law involved therein was doubtful, and that the learned Judge on the facts of that particular case held that the suit was not maintainable by the landlord. In Sonaton Shome v. Sheikh Helim (2) it was laid down that where the plaintiff was in constructive possession of a plot of land through his tenant and the latter was dispossessed, the plaintiff had no right to bring a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

On the other hand there is authority to the contrary. In Bindubashini Chaudharani v. Srimati Jahnavi Chaudhurani (3) it was held that in the case the ouster of a tenant in actual occupation of the land amounted to the ouster of the immediate landlord to whom rent was to be paid, and that s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not confined in its application to cases in which the plaintiff has been deprived of actual possession. A similar view was held in Nabin Das v. Kailash Chandra Dey (4) a case of a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. And in Akhil Chandra Dey v. Akhil Chandra Biswas (5) it was decided that the ouster of a tenant is an ouster of the landlord for which the landlord can sue under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The same view was maintained in Rathnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar (6) in which the case of Jagannatha Charry v. Rama Rayer (7) was followed. The Oudh Judicial Commissioner held the same view in Nihal Singh v. Raghuraj Bahadur Singh (8). In my opinion a mortgagee in possession through tenants is entitled to invoke the aid of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act on his tenants being ejected from possession by others.'

(7) 28 M. 238.

(8) 32 Ind. Cas. 202; 18 O. C. 353; 3 O. L. J. 588.

As to the second point in the case, it is contended for the applicant that the evidence does not show that the plaintiff's tenants were ousted within 6 months of the filing of the suit. The date of ejectment as given in the plaint is May 1894. The plaintiff examined as a witness states that he does not remember the exact month in which the ouster took place. P. W. No. 3 speaking on the 6th June last states that the tenants were ejected at the end of the rainy season, two months before Diwali, i. e., in August. P. W. No. 5 states that the tenants were ejected in July 1924. I doubt if this Court should interfere in revision on a question of this nature even if wrong. The Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try the case, and if he has made a mistake there is a remedy open to the applicants by a regular suit. It was held in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (9) by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a Court that has decided a suit over which it had jurisdiction cannot, only on the ground that it has arrived at a wrong decision, be said to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It cannot be said that there is no evidence to warrant the decision the lower Court has come to as to the time of dispossession.

There is, moreover, another principle on which I consider that this Court should decline to interfere. It is not the practice of this Court, and the practice of the Court is the law of the Court, to interfere in revision where another remedy is open to the aggrieved party and where no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from their refusal to act: see Ram Kishen Das v. Jai Kishen Das (10), Chidambaram Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (11), Kashinath v. Nana (12). Sir Stanley Ismay applied this principle in Balaram Misar v. Bairagi Mali (13), a case in which a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act had been wrongly dismissed. I must, therefore, decline to find in the applicants' favour on the second contention urged in this application.

The result is that this Rule is discharged with costs. The applicants will pay the non-applicant's costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—In this case an issue was framed: "Are defendants or any of them agriculturists?" After considering the evidence which was led before him on that question at great length, the Judge held that defendants were not agriculturists. He then said: "I must now proceed and frame the remaining issues, and as the case is a complicated one and the Pleaders are not ready I put the case down for framing issues on March 1, 1924."

It appears, however, that the finding on the issue, "Whether the defendants or any of them were agriculturists," was recorded in the form of a decree. Against that an appeal was admitted by this Court. On the face of it the case was covered by the decision of this Court in Dattatraya v. Radhabai (1). The learned Judges, who admitted the appeal, appear to have considered it arguable that the decision in Vamanacharya v. Govind (2) was opposed to the decision in Dattatraya v. Radhabai (1).

We must, therefore, proceed to consider what was decided in each of those cases. In the first case an issue was raised whether the defendant was an agriculturist. The Judge found that the defendant was an agriculturist, and on the plaintiff's application the Court drew up a preliminary decree in terms of the finding on that issue, and against what he called a preliminary decree he appealed to the District Court. The District Judge came to the conclusion that an appeal properly lay from the decree. The appeal came before Mr. Justice Fawcett and myself, when we held that no appeal lay from a finding of the Judge in the Trial Court that the defendant was an agriculturist, and the case would have to go back to the Trial Court to continue the hearing from the point at which it was left off. In the course of my judgment I said: (page 98*):

"The Judge should never accede to an application to draw up in the form of a decree a finding on the question whether a party is an agriculturist or not. Undoubtedly that is an issue which is the first issue to be tried in the case, and a decision may be given on it; but it by no means follows that because that is the first issue to be tried, therefore, it is a preliminary issue on which a decree can be drawn up. The whole case must be decided first before the judgment can be pronounced. There will be then a judgment deciding the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in suit, and then it will rightly be the subject of a decree."

In Vamanacharya v. Govind (2) the Court found the plaintiff to be an agriculturist and ordered accounts to be taken of the suit mortgage. No preliminary decree was drawn up, and it was held that there was no obligation on the unsuccessful party to appeal at that stage. The question before the Appellate Court was an entirely different one from the question now before us. It is true that the Court said that the drawing up of a decree or the omission to do so was conclusive on the question whether the Court had in fact passed a preliminary decree, and apparently the Judges who admitted this appeal thought that it might be argued from those words that provided a decree was drawn up, rightly or wrongly, there was a decree from which an appeal would lie. But in that case the question for decision was whether there had been a preliminary decree when a decree had not been actually drawn up. Mr. Justice Pratt said (page 836*):—

"The finding on the issues as to status and the order of reference to the Commissioner are not a judgment which could be the basis of a decree. A decree involves a conclusive determination of the rights of parties, but it is preliminary when in spite of that conclusive determination the suit is not completely disposed of."

Clearly in the mind of Mr. Justice Pratt that was the test, whether there was a decree or not.

We think then that there could be no appeal against the finding that defendants were not agriculturists, and the case must go back for the trial to continue from the point at which it was left off. It will be open, when there is a proper judgment followed by a decree, for a party dissatisfied with any of the findings of the lower Court to appeal against them.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Coyajee, J.—I agree.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 77—Executor doubting genuineness of Will—Renunciation—Executorship, when may be accepted or renounced—Court's powers to refuse Probate on ground of executor's incapacity.

Until the validity of a Will is established, an executor appointed thereunder is not bound to accept or renounce the executorship.

Where in proceedings for grant of Probate, a person appointed as executor filed a statement doubting the genuineness of the Will but expressed his willingness to act as executor if the Court considered the Will genuine and granted Probate, it cannot be said that he renounced the office of executor.

In the goods of Manick Lall Seal, 35 C. 156 and Sarojini Dasi v. Rajlakshmi Dasi, 60 Ind. Cas. 974; 47 C. 838, relied on.

A Court cannot refuse an executor Probate because it considers him unfit to be executor unless the unfitness is of the nature of legal incapacity, that is, minority or unsoundness of mind.

JUDGMENT.

Wallace, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Madura refusing to grant to the appellant Probate of a Will. The testator named two executors of whom the appellant is one. The other, the respondent, applied for Probate and the ordinary notice went to the appellant who appeared and challenged the genuineness of the Will. The District Judge found the Will genuine, granted Probate to the respondent, but refused it to the appellant, on the ground that by his action in denying the genuineness of the Will, he had to all intents and purposes, renounced his position as executor.

Now, although prior to the Probate proceedings, the appellant had indulged in wild statements that the Will was a forgery, that he was never appointed executor, that the testator had never signed it, that his own attestation which appears on the Will was obtained by fraud, the statement he put into the Probate Court when the proceedings came on was of a milder tenour, and it is that statement alone that the Probate Court was, in our view, entitled to consider. It is open, for example, to an executor to openly assert outside the Court that he is renouncing his executorship; but it is by his statement in the Court that he will stand or fall. See In the goods of Manick Lal Seal (1). Now, in his statement to the Court the appellant merely said that he did not admit the execution and validity of the Will, that it was spurious document brought about by the exercise of undue influence, that, so far as he (appellant) knew, the testator never put his signature to the Will, and that his own attestation was due to his having been deceived by the respondent as to the nature of the document. And he ended up by saying that, if the Court considers the Will genuine and is prepared to grant Probate, he is willing to act as executor. We do not find that this statement is an assertion that the Will is a pure concoction. Whether such a statement would amount to a renunciation we need not here consider. We do not think that the statement amounts to more than this: "I have the gravest reasons for doubting if the Will was a voluntary act of the testator while in a sound disposing state of mind; and, before I accept or renounce, I will wait until the Court decides on its genuineness." It is quite open to an executor to take up such a position. There is direct authority for it in a case of application for letters of administration. See Srojini Dasi v. Rajlakshmi Dasi (2). We are not prepared, therefore, to hold that in this case there was a renunciation.

It is, of course, well settled law that a Court cannot refuse an executor Probate because it considers him unfit to be executor [See Hara Coomar Sircar v. Doorgamani Dasi (3) and Pran Nath Ghose v. Jado Nath Bhattacharji (4)] unles the unfitness is of the nature of legal incapacity, that is, minority or unsoundness of mind.

The District Judge is, therefore, wrong. The testator's wishes must be carried out. The District Judge's order is, therefore, reversed and Probate will be given to the appellant jointly with the respondent. Costs may come out of the estate.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree.

Where a purchaser from a judgment-debtor sees the property, the subject-matter of his purchase, being attached and sold in execution of a decree against his vendor and keeps silent, he is estopped from denying the title of the judgment-debtor at the time of execution sale as against the auction-purchaser. JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the dismissal of a suit for possession of a certain house.

The facts found by the lower Appellate Court are as follows:—On 30th January 1912 a sale-deed was drawn up and registered by which Wasawasingh, father of the first four defendants, purported to sell to Narainsingh, the father of the plaintiff, the house in suit. On the 11th May 1912 Narainsingh executed a document, the contents of which were wrongly held by the lower Appellate Court to be provable, as will be explained presently. In 1917 the house was openly sold in execution of a decree against Wasawasingh and was purchased by Ram Gopal, defendant No. 5. Narainsingh did not raise any objection to the attachment of the house and took no action to assert his own title. The lower Appellate Court holds that he had full knowledge of the execution and sale. The decision of the lower Appellate Court was that although the sale-deed was executed, there was no intention that the title should pass to Narainsingh, that consequently there was no sale, and that, in any case, since Wásawasingh was allowed by Narainsingh to continue as ostensible owner, the execution sale was binding upon Narainsingh on the principles contained in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The finding that there was no intention to transfer the house is based upon several grounds, but the principal one is the contents of the document of the 11th May 1912 already referred to. This document was not produced but secondary evidence of its contents was offered without objection in the shape of a copy of the entry in the deed writers register and the statement of an alleged marginal witness Gurditsingh. I may observe that what is alleged to be the copy is not endorsed as admitted in evide[illegible] the Court below. The copy furthermore has been misread by the learned Additional Judge because it contained a great deal more than a mere statement by Narainsingh that he had no right in the house which had been sold to him by the deed. It stated in fact that Narainsingh, with effect from the date of the document, relinquished or handed back the house to Wasawasingh. This, however, is of no real significance since the secondary evidence could not legally have been admitted at all. It is true that no objection was raised in the Trial Court and that according to a well-known rule of practice when a fact relevant in itself has been wrongly allowed to be proved in a manner not permitted by law, unless the opposite party objects to the evidence at the time when it is offered, he cannot object afterwards. One of the objections, however, raised in appeal to the admission of the secondary evidence was that the document was not shown to have been properly stamped and that under s. 35 of the Stamp Act it was wholly inadmissible. The learned Additional Judge has disposed of this objection by saying that the document had already been admitted in evidence without objection and, therefore, the objection could not be raised in appeal under s. 36 of the Indian Stamp Act. But the document was not admitted in evidence in the Trial Court, it was never produced and has never been produced. Therefore, the reception of secondary evidence was in direct contravention of an imperative prohibition of the law and the fact that there was no objection cannot convert irrelevant evidence into relevant evidence. The principle of acquiescence can only be applied when the secondary evidence has been given of the contents of a document which, if produced itself, could have been admitted under the provisions of the law.

It is unnecessary to remit the case to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision after excluding all consideration of the document dated 11th May 1912 since the dismissal of the suit must be upheld on the alternative ground, namely, that the plaintiff's father Narainsingh stood by and permitted Ramgopal to purchase the house in execution sale. The only argument put forward for the appellants against the contention of estoppel is that the registration of the sale-deed of 1912 was constructive notice to Ram Gopal and hence neither the principles of s. 41 of the Trans[illegible] Property Act nor the provisions of [illegible] of the Indian Evidence Act were of any assistance to him. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, have laid it down in Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (1) that the mere registration of a deed under the Registration Act is not per se constructive notice of the transaction and that constructive notice is a question of fact, to be determined as each case arises, whether in that individual case the omission to search the register taken together with the other facts amounts to such gross negligence as to attract the consequences which result from notice. In the present case we have the facts that Ram Gopal was a purchaser in an execution sale, and that the law provides means by which the public shall be aware of attachment and intention to sell, and also for an inquiry before sale into the absolute title of the judgment-debtor and for public advertisement of the sale. Facilities are also given for third persons to come forward and lodge objections, not only before sale, but also after sale and before confirmation. There is the further fact found by the lower Appellate Court that Narainsingh knew all about attachment and sale and abstained from making any objection. In these circumstances it has been rightly held by the lower Appellate Court that his heirs shall not be permitted to deny against Ram Gopal that Wasawasingh was the owner of the house at the time of the execution sale.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where a decree is passed ex parte, the defendant can, at any stage in the execution proceedings, show that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree and claim instalments

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Darkhast No. 398 of 1924.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. B. Petkar, (with him Mr. T. N. Walavalkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this Darkhast the defendant pleaded that he was entitled to the status of an agriculturist. The Subordinate Judge said: "The contention comes too late and it cannot be recognized in execution now." It has been held by this Court in Rudrappa v. Chanbasappa (1) that where a decree is passed ex parte, the defendant can, in execution proceedings, show that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree and claim instalments under s. 15B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The defendant is, therefore, entitled to prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. Seeing that he is able to rely on that authority the only question we have to decide at present is whether the defendant should be allowed to prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. It is argued that there is a bar to his doing that owing to the fact that there were previous Darkhasts in which the defendant had not claimed that he was an agriculturist. But as far as we know there is no rule of limitation which prevents an agriculturist from claiming to be allowed to prove his status at any stage of the proceedings so that if successful he may ask the Court to apply the provisions of the Act in his favour.

A suit for damages for use and occupation based on an allegation of permissive occupation is a suit of small cause nature and does not come under Art. 31, Sch. II, of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

A small cause suit when transferred to the original side under s. 23 does not remain a small cause suit though it remains of a small cause nature. An appeal, therefore, lies against the decree in such a case, but where the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500, a second appeal is incompetent.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first point for decision is whether on the plaint as laid, this appeal against order lies. We think the claim is founded on an allegation of permissive occupation and is a claim for damages for use and occupation. We do not think the suit comes under Art. 31 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and, therefore, it is a suit of a small cause nature.

The next point taken by appellant is that the transfer of the suit to the original side under s. 23 of the Act, constituted it an original suit and that, therefore, a second appeal lies as if the suit was an ordinary original suit. The answer to that is that the transfer under s. 23 does not and cannot change the nature of the suit and it is the nature of the suit which is the test under s. 102, C. P. C., and O. XLIII, r. (1) and (v). The last point urged is that, if the suit though transferred remains a small cause suit, no first appeal lies. The answer to that is that the suit does not remain a small cause suit though it remains of a small cause nature.

A first appeal is, therefore, valid but under s. 102, a second appeal is barred. In Kollipara Seetapaty v. Kankipaty Subbaya (1) and Abdul Majid v. Bedyadhar Saran Das (2), the suit had not been transferred under s. 23. It was from the beginning a small cause suit, tried on the original side. The decision of the District Munsif was, therefore, the decision of a Court of Small Causes and final under s. 27 and no appeal lay.

We hold that no second appeal lies and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 4, 7—Appeal—Error apparent in face of record, Court incorrectly thinking, whether good ground—Contravention of r. 4, ground of appeal—Court, what to consider.

An appeal against an order granting a review does not lie on the ground that the lower Court was incorrect in thinking that there was a mistake or error apparent on the face of record. Again, an appeal against an order passed in review on the ground that the provisions of r. 4, O. XLVII, C. P. C., had been contravened by the lower Court must be confined to a disregard of those provisions only and not to any other matter on which the granting of review is based.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 3rd March 1925.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that no appeal lies in this case. On the 3rd of March 1925 the learned Subordinate Judge of Budaun reviewed an order of his passed a month earlier. An application was made by a lady to sue as a pauper, and by the first order the lower Court dismissed the application. Subsequently there was an application for review in which it was pointed out that there had been a mistake apparent on the face of the record. The lower Appellate Court accepted this view of the matter, revised its previous order, granted the application for review, and allowed the applicant to sue as a pauper. Under O. XLVII an appeal is strictly limited under r. 7. An order granting an application for review may be objected to only on the ground that it was in contravention of the provisions of r. 2, or in contravention of the provisions of r. 4. There is a third ground of appeal regarding limitation, with which we are not concerned here. The provisions of r. 2 relate to the Court to whom applications for review must be made when the grounds of review show the existence of an error apparent on the face of a decree. Under r. 4 an application for review shall not be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, and when the applicant alleges the discovery of new matter or evidence, the Court must see that there is strict proof of such allegation. In the present case the ground of attack is that the lower Court was incorrect in thinking that there was a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. In such a case no appeal is provided for under O. XLVII. The learned Counsel for the applicant argues that the lower Court had acted in contravention of the provisions of r. 4 by granting the review. In r 4, cl. (2) there are certain provisions with which the Court has to comply on granting a review. In our opinion, the appeal will be confined to a disregard of these provisions only and not to any matter on which the granting of the review is based. In the present case there has been no breach of the provisions of r. 2 or r. 4.

We dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 34 (d), 45—Moneys invested in unapproved security—Realisation from guardian on pain of punishment.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Chingleput, dated the 2nd May 1925, and made in M. P. No. 157 of 1925, in O. P. No. 64 of 1922.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. K. Ramaswami Iyenger, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There can be no doubt that appellant has wilfully disobeyed the orders of the District Court On 10th October 1922 he was directed to invest the minor's money in approved securities. Instead of doing so, he lent it out on pro-notes and did not inform the Court that he has done so until he was called to account over a year later. The excuse that on 11th October 1922 he was not a proper guardian, as he had not given security, carries no weight. The Court then pointed out to him his duty, whether as guardian de facto or as guardian de jure and he has not done his duty. Since then, he has at various times been ordered by the District Court to realise and deposit those moneys in that Court. The earliest of these orders was on 29th October 1924. Admittedly he has taken no steps to realise the money on the pro-notes and is now no nearer doing so than he was then. He pleads that owing to tightness in the money market his promisors cannot pay at present. He has taken no steps to compel them to pay.

Nor is the appropriate remedy for such conduct action under s. 45 (1) which the lower Court has taken. Is it a case to which that section is applicable? The lower Court has brought the case under s. 45 (1) (b) as failure to exhibit accounts in compliance with a requisition under s. 34 (e) and to pay into Court the balance due on those accounts in compliance with a requisition under s. 34 (d) (3). The appellant's contention is that s. 34 (d) is limited to such balance as his accounts show to be in his hands and not moneys invested and in the hands of others. The respondent does not go so far as to contend that s. 34 (d) authorises a Court to compel a guardian peremptorily to realise all investments of the minor's money and produce the cash but he does contend that it authorises the Court to compel such immediate realisation and production of cash or production of the whole cash anyhow by the guardian, whether or no he can at once realise the investments in cases where the investments have been made in defiance of the orders of the Court.

It is clear to our minds that when, say, a guardian's accounts are in the shape of so much invested in approved securities and so much in cash, the balance due from him on those accounts would naturally be the amount of cash in his hands. We are unable to see that the interpretation of that phrase should mean anything different when the investments are in securities but not in approved securities even when the investment was in defiance of the orders of the Court. No more cash than is in the hands of the guardian would have been in his hands if he had obeyed the orders of the Court, and it is only that cash that ought to be in his hands that the Court can at most under s. 34 compel him, on pain of punishment under s. 45 to produce. In other words the Court cannot in this case say to him "if you had obeyed my orders you would have had more cash to produce," because that would not be true. The test, to our minds, is what cash should the guardian have had, if he had followed the Court's directions and it is such cash and such only that the Court can under s. 34 compel him to produce.

Authority on this point is scanty. Our attention has been called to two rulings of the Calcutta High Court Jagannath Panja v. Mahesh Chandra (1) and In re, Nikhrannessa Bibi (2). In both cases the Court proceeded on the accounts filed by the guardians, and called on them to produce only such cash as those accounts showed to be in their hands.

A Bench of the Allahabad High Court has dissented from the Calcutta view in Sita Ram v. Gobindi (3) and laid down that the Court is not bound to accept the balance shown on the guardian's accounts, but may revise it by striking out payments which appear to it improper. The finding of fact in that case was that a sum of Rs. 900 alleged by the guardian to have been spent had not been spent on behalf of the minors, and the High Court, in arriving at the balance of cash which the guardian ought to have had, added that item. The case is not on all fours with the present. Here the investments attacked are for the minor and enure from him. It was the guardian's duty in obedience to the order of the Court dated 11th October 1922 to invest the money now tied up in the pro-notes in approved securities. For this purpose it was unnecessary for the Court to order him on 27th October 1924 to realise the investments and deposit the actual cash, and that order, we have already held, was not an order under s. 34 (e) and (d).

We are given to understand that the promisors of the pro-notes are willing to convert their obligations into first mortgages on immoveable property. If this is true, the intention of the District Court in its order of 11th October 1922 is fulfilled.

We are of opinion that the order under appeal is ultra vires. We, therefore, set it aside. Two months' time from to-day will be given to appellant to have the pro-note replaced by first mortgages. If this is not done the District Court will take steps to remove the appellant from his guardianship and to have the security bond enforced against him and the sureties. We make no order as to costs.

The fine, if paid, should be refunded.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 9th of April 1924, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, Lakhimpur, dated the 1st of September 1923.

Mr. Brojendra Nath Chatterjee and Babu Mohendra Kumar Ghose, for the Appellant.

Dr. Radhabenode Pal and Babu Bhupendra Kishore Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against a decision of the District Judge of Noakhali, dated the 9th April 1921, dismissing an appeal preferred by the judgment-debtor to him and confirming a decision of the Munsif.

The facts are as follows. A rent decree was obtained against the judgment-debtor on the 24th of May 1916. The decree-holder in execution of the decree brought the tenancy to sale on the 7th September 1918. The sale was set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtor on the 1st October 1920 the ground for setting aside the sale being that the sale proclamation had been suppressed. Although the sale had been set aside the decree-holder did not refund the purchase-money paid by the auction-purchaser. No order to this effect was made at this date. Then the decree-holder made a second application on the 20th April 1921 for execution of the rent-decree. It was urged by the judgment-debtor that the application was barred by limitation. But this contention was overruled. On appeal it was held that limitation was no bar but that the application for execution was not maintainable inasmuch as the money had not been refunded by the decree-holder and in the result the application of the 20th April 1921 was dismissed. The learned Judge states, "The execution case is dismissed." But this must clearly apply to the application of the 20th April 1921, alone for in an earlier part of his judgment the learned Judge expressly states that the applicant, that is, the decree-holder, may apply for execution in continuation of his previous application, that is to say, the application of 1918 which, it seems to me by virtue of this order of the District Judge is clearly treated as then pending and undisposed of. On the 5th September 1921 the auction-purchaser applied for refund of the purchase-money paid by him and an order for such a refund was made on the 26th November 1921. But in fact the money was not refunded until the 23rd February 1923. Subsequent to the refund, namely, on the 27th February 1923, the decree-holder again applied for sale of the property in continuation of the previous execution case. It is stated that before the 10th of August 1921 the property was brought to sale by the same decree-holder in execution of another decree and that he purchased it himself. But the facts on this point are not clear and we do not think that we can attach any importance to this sale in the present application.

(2) 80 Ind. Cas. 592; 46 A. 458; 22 A. L. J. 585; A. I. R. 1924 All. 593.

Then to return to the application of the 27th February 1923 the first Court held that it was not barred by limitation, holding that time ran from the date of the refund, that it to say, 23rd February 1923. The lower Appellate Court confirmed this decision and held that the application of the 27th February 1923 was merely in continuation of the first application for execution and that accordingly, it was not time-barred.

Now the case is governed by the special rule of limitation applicable by virtue of Art. 6 of Sch. (III) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that the period of limitation for execution of a decree made between a landlord and a tenant is a period of three years unless the judgment-debtor has prevented the execution by fraud or force. It is accordingly contended before us that the present application is time-barred by virtue of the provisions of Art. 6, more than three years having elapsed since the date of decree now sought to be put into execution. It seems to me, however, that the only question that really arises is whether the present application, that is to say, that of February 1923 can be treated as a continuation of the first application for execution made in 1918. If it can be so treated, then clearly, no question of limitation arises. We have been referred to several cases in support of the contention urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant and noteably to the case of Midnapore Zemindary Company, Limited v. Dina Nath Saha (1). But it seems to me that the ground of that decision was that there had been actual dismissal of the execution case and in the judgment of the Court this is expressly insisted on and it is stated that but for this the application which was held to be barred might have been treated as a contiuation of the original application for execution. Now in the case before us, as I have already indicated, there was apparently no dismissal of the original application for execution. Satisfaction, it is true, was entered after the sale had taken place but the matter was subsequently re-opened and satisfaction was set aside by reason of the application of the judgment-debtor of the 1st October 1920 and accordingly, it seems to me that no special application was necessary to revive the first application which was still pending before the Court until it was finally disposed of and as I have already pointed out the District Judge in passing the order of the 10th August 1921 expressly states that this application is still pending and that an application in continuation thereof could still be made if the money which had been paid was refunded by the decree-holder. For these reasons, therefore, we think that the case is not barred by the provisions of Art. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the lower Appellate Court has rightly held that the application was in continuation of the original application for execution.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

Re SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 282 OF 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Offg. J. C.

In re DEONATH—APPLICANT.

Practice—Reference to Bench—Appeal heard and closed for judgment—Legality.

Though it is open to the Judicial Commissioner under the Bench Rules of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court to order that a particular case be heard by a Bench, such orders will be passed in exceptional circumstances only unless the Additional Judicial Commissioner concerned is of opinion that reference to a Bench is necessary or desirable in the case.

An application for reference to a Bench which is filed after an appeal is heard and closed for judgment, should not be granted as the granting thereof would amount to an expression of opinion of a Judge of co-extensive jurisdiction that the view the Additional Judicial Commissioner might take in the appeal in question is likely to be doubtful or erroneous one, and, therefore, he should desist from passing a judgment.

Application for referring to Bench question of law in Second Appeal No. 282 of 1925 (Bhairo Prasad v. Deonath).

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B. and Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application by the respondent Deonath in Second Appeal No. 282 of 1925 before Hallifax, A. J. C. (Bhairao Prasad appellant v. Deonath respondent). The appeal was apparently heard by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner on the 26th of January last and on the same date the present application was lodged.

In this application it is alleged that a certain question of law arises in the said appeal, which makes it advisable that the matter involved should be referred to a Bench. I am also asked to make measures which would lead to the deferring of the delivery of judgment by the Additional Judicial Commissioner in question.

I may at once say that, even if, on the merits, there had been involved in the appeal in question any matter which prima facie would render the constitution of a Bench advisable for its consideration, the present application obviously comes too late. I have been referred by the learned Counsel for the applicant to the decision in Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (1) where the inherent power of the Court to stay the drawing up of its own order was recognised. Again, in Nand Kishore Singh v. Ram Golam Sahu (2) Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., were of opinion that they were competent to make an order for stay of proceedings in execution in view of an application by the judgment-debtor to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. In Padmabati Dasi v. Rasik Lal Dhar (3) Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J., held that the Court has inherent jurisdiction to re-hear a matter before the order passed by the Court at a previous hearing has been perfected.

I am unable to see that any of these decisions have any real bearing on the matter in issue. Once the individual case or appeal is allotted to the file of any one of the Judges of this Court, such Judge has absolutely equal and co-extensive power with the Judicial Commissioner for the disposal of the case before him. It is, no doubt, true that under the Bench Rules of this Court, it is open to the Judicial Commissioner, in any particular case to order that it should be tried by a Bench. But I may say in this connection that I should, only in a very exceptional case, pass such an order unless the individual Additional Judicial Commissioner concerned was of opinion that reference to a Bench was necessary or desirable.

In the present case, however, the general principles on which I should exercise the power of ordering a Bench, need not be considered, for the present application obviously comes too late. Had this application been made before the appeal had been heard, a different set of considerations would have arisen in connection with its disposal. As the case stands, the appeal in question has already been heard and, for all I know, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner may have delivered judgment before this order is pronounced. Whether he has done so or not, is, however, immaterial. My own view is that I have no power whatever to make the order I am asked to pass in the present case. Were it conceivable that I should pass any such order, the latter would amount to an expression of opinion by myself, sitting as a Single Judge, that the view the Additional Judicial Commissioner might take in the second appeal in question, was likely to be a doubtful or erroneous one and that, therefore, he should desist from passing judgment in the case in order that it might be referred to a Bench.

It seems to me perfectly obvious that I have no such power and that any such order, if passed, would constitute a gross excess of the jurisdiction or powers vested in me. The application is accordingly dismissed without notice to non-applicant.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in Original Suit No. 35 of 1920 (O. S. No. 100 of 1919 on the file of the Sub-Court, Ellore).

This appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections filed by the 3rd respondent came on for hearing on the 30th and 31st October 1924, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgment and decree of the lower Court and the material papers in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Appellants and of the Advocate-General for the 16th Respondent, and of Mr. G. Lakshmanna and Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, and of Messrs. A. Satyanarayana and P. Bapiraju, for the 3rd Respondent, and of Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the 7th Respondent, and the appellants having given up Respondents Nos. 4, 8, 9, 13 and 14 and elected to proceed without them (vide order of Court, dated the 25th August 1921) and the other Respondents Nos. 5, 6, 10, 11, 12 and 15 not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till 13th November 1924, the Court (Spencer and Srinivasa Ayyangar, JJ.,) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Spencer, J.—M. Subbanna executed a Will on September 22, 1914, and died more than two years afterwards on January 5, 1917, leaving no sons but a daughter, a daughter's son and a widow.

He appointed his wife executrix of his Will authorizing her to pay his debts out of the proceeds of 1,000 bags of paddy that he had in store in 1914, to recover sums owed to him by others to sell a certain house and site, to carry out certain charitable and religious dispositions to adopt a son and to manage the adopted son's one-third share of immovable property till he attained majority, etc,, and then follows a generel clause:—"I authorize my wife to conduct all the remaining affairs in my stead." Respondent's Vakil attempted to argue that 1st defendant was only an executrix for a limited purpose (compare s. 35 of Probate and Administration Act) and that the intention of the testator was to empower her to transact only those affairs which he specifically mentioned in the Will. The use of the Telugu words (yavttu) and (tatimma) in this passage is to my mind consistent only with one meaning and that is that the testator intended his wife to be his general executrix. He provided in his Will that his entire immovable property (excluding certain purchases of land which he had dedicated to temple worship) should be divided into three shares and one share given to his daughter's son (2nd plaintiff), one to his adopted son (16th defendant) and one to his widow (1st defendant) for life, and that after her death her share should be divided between his daughter's son and the son adopted by his widow. The genuineness of the Will is not disputed. Owing to the lapse of time between the making of the Will and the testator's death, and the expense of law suits which he engaged in during his life, the paddy mentioned in the Will as a fund for discharging debts was not available to the executrix and she consequently had to sell 23 acres 68 cents. of wet land under Ex. 1 to the 2nd defendant for the purpose of paying certain promissory notes and decree debts left owing by her husband when he died in 1917 and she further entered into a mortgage in favour of the 15th defendant for a similar purpose during the pendency of the present suit which was instituted by deceased's daughter and daughter's son to obtain possession of the properties allotted to them under a family settlement alleged to have been arranged 13 days after the testator's death, or in the alternative to recover their legacies under the Will, unencumbered by the sale, leases and mortgages to 2nd, 3rd, 6th and 15th defendants, respectively, and mesne profits for two years. The Subordinate Judge found for the plaintiffs and accordingly granted them a preliminary decree subject to the condition of their paying to 1st defendant Rs. 1,946 as their share of the debts amounting to Rs, 5,000 for which the testator was liable at the date of his death. The purchaser and the mortgagee (defendants Nos. 2 and 15) from the widow appeal. The argument put forward on their behalf was that, as the estate vested in the executrix from the date of the testator's death by virtue of the Will she could sell or mortgage his property to pay off his debts and could give the purchaser or mortgagee a good title.

As the Will, with which we are concerned, was not executed by a Hindu within the City of Madras and does not relate to immovable property situate within this Court's Original Side jurisdiction, the Hindu Wills Act has no application to it, and consequently it was not made imperative by s. 187 of the Succession Act that the executrix should take out Probate, in order to establish her right to deal with the deceased's estate. Section 179 which speaks of vesting does not apply to the Will of a Hindu but s. 4, which is the corresponding provision of the Probate and Administration Act, applies. Section 12 of that Act states that Probate of a Will when granted establishes the Will from the death of the testator and renders valid all intermediate acts of the executor as such, thus implying that they are not valid until Probate is granted. I take this to mean that the executor of a Hindu Will may do all acts which the Will enjoins or permits him to do without any risk of having his authority to act qua executor questioned, but that if he exceeds his authority and does acts which the Will does not expressly authorize him to do, such as the disposal of immoveable property requiring the permission of Court which can only be given under s. 90 (2), such acts are voidable at the instance of any person interested unless and until the executor obtains Probate or Letters of Administration and gets an order of Court to validate what he has done in the interval between the testator's death and the issue of Probate or Letters of Administration. What acts an executor can under English Law do before obtaining probate are set out in Williams on Executors, Vol. I, at pages 213 to 215. They include the payment of debts owing by the deceased and the disposal of the testator's goods and chattels and real estate. An executor could always sell personalty in order to pay debts, and since 1897 he can sell, lease, or mortgage reality for that purpose (vide pages 693 to 704). His power of disposal is absolute, but as he cannot maintain an action before Probate though he can be sued if he has intermeddled with the estate, it becomes necessary for Probate or Letters of Administration (if he dies first) to be obtained in order to justify his actions as executor.

There appears to be some divergence of opinion between the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in the view taken by them as to the position of the executor of a Hindu or Muhammadan Will who does not take out Probate, Mr. Justice Pugh in Calcutta regarding him as a mere manager for the purpose of paying the debts and distributing the estate [Sakina Bibee v. Mahomed Ishak (1)], and Mr Justice Russell and Mr. Justice Marten in Bombay treating him as an executor in whom the estate vests by virtue of s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act [Narrondas Ramji v. Narrondas Ramji (2) and Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (3).]

So far back as 1878 Markby, J., in Prosunno Chunder Bhuttacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (4), and Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (5) held that the executor of a Hindu Will did not represent the deceased by virtue of the Will until he had obtained probate and the property did not vest in him by his mere appointment as executor in the Will, and Maclean, C. J., in Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6), expressed an opinion that the inclusion of the vesting section under the Chapter relating to the grant of Probate and Letters of Administration was an indication that the vesting followed from the grant of Probate and that till then the executor held the property only as manager. There is also an observation of the Judicial Committee in Administrator General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (7); that prior to the Hindu Wills Act (the case before them being one of a Will made in 1889 by a Hindu resident of Calcutta City) the powers and functions of the executor of a Hindu estate were those of a manager rather than those of an executor of an English Will, that he did not require probate and that probate if obtained would not have vested him with any title to the estate, either real or personal, which he administered. The decision of the same Tribunal in Kurrutulain Bahadur v. Nuzbat-ud dowla Abbas Hossein Khan (8), which by referring to ss. 4, 59 and 90 of the Probate and Administration Act draws a distinction between executors under the Act and other executors who fail to take out probate throws light on this debated question. The Courts of Madras, Bombay and Calcutta seem to be all agreed that the executor of a Hindu Will made in the mofussil derives his title from the Will and that he can perform any of the duties cast on him by the Will without taking out probate [vide Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9), Balakrishnudu v. Narayanasawmy Chetty (10) and Zemindar of Bhadrachalam and Palavancha v. Venkatadri Appa Rao (11)]. Even the learned Judges who decided Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (3), were agreed in thinking that an executor who did not take out probate would be subject to any restriction in the Will as to the disposal of immoveable property. Such a disposal as would interfere with the literal performance of the trusts imposed by the Will on the executor in respect of the specific bequests of immoveable property would not be valid unless the executor obtained probate and obtained the directions of the Court under s. 90 (2). The executor of a Hindu Will has not, in my opinion, the general powers of an executor of an English Will, as there is no section in the Probate and Administration Act giving an executor the wide powers conferred by s. 269 of the Succession Act. In Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9), Sundara Ayyar and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ., observed, "We can see nothing in the Act as it stands to prevent the executor from acting as executor and exercising the powers given to him under the Act without obtaining probate." My learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading, apparently thinks that this observation goes too far and that an executor of a Hindu Will in the mofussil has none of the powers of an executor under the Probate and Administration Act, unless he first takes out probate. This is in effect the Calcutta view. I would not go so far as to say that an executor appointed by Will who does not take out probate is not an executor within the Act, as I think that s. 90, cl. (2), recognizes the existence of two classes of executors (1) those executors who get probate and obtain orders of Court for disposing of immoveable property and (2) those executors who do not do so and are restricted to the terms of the Will. The section speaks of even the former class as having the property vested in them, although probate has not been granted to them.

As the 1st defendant by disposing of 23 acres 68 cents of wet land under Ex. I in favour of the 2nd defendant for a price of Rs 4,500 disabled herself from carrying out the testator's wishes in their entirety as to the division of his immoveable property among his heirs in the manner set out in the Will, and as she did not either before or after the sale validate her act by taking out probate and obtaining permission of the Court to dispose of the testator's immoveable property for discharging his debts, the learned Subordinate Judge was right, in my opinion, in declaring the sale-deed in favour of the 2nd defendant to be not valid and binding on the heirs under the Will. Similarly the mortgage must also have been invalid so far as it interfered with their obtaining a distribution of their shares, but being executed pendente lite the plaintiffs were entitled to ignore it.

I am inclined to treat the 1st defendant as an executrix who has exceeded the limited authority given to her under the Will as regards the disposal of immoveable property and has failed to invest herself with the power that she might have got by taking out probate and applying to the Court to permit her to dispose of that property in a manner not authorized by the Will.

Whether when the assets set apart under the Will were not available for discharging the testator's debt, the 1st defendant, either as executrix without probate or as the manager or person in actual possession of the estate, would have power to sell any portion of it for the necessary purpose of discharging the deceased's debts and could give a good title to the purchaser is a question that has not been argued before us. As the determination of this question will largely depend on the answer to be given to the question of law formulated by my learned brother, I agree to the reference to a Full Bench in the terms proposed in his judgment.

Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.—The main question that arises in this appeal is one of considerable difficulty and at the same time of great general importance. The difficulty of the question, has been immensely increased by the wide divergence in the views, with regard to the question, of the various High Courts in this country.

The daughter and the daughter's son of one Venkatasubbanna, the testator, instituted the suit from which this appeal has arisen. The 1st defendant is the widow of the testator and the 16th defendant is the son adopted by the 1st defendant to her deceased husband, the testator, under a power given to her by his Will. Defendants Nos. 2 to 15 may all be regarded as alienees claiming through the 1st defendant.

The plaintiff's claim was for having these alienations set aside and delivery over to the plaintiffs of certain lands alleged to have been agreed to be given to them under a family arrangement entered into by the 1st defendant, subsequent to the death of the testator, or, in the alternative, for a partition and delivery over to them of their shares in the estate of the deceased according to the terms of the Will. On behalf of the contesting defendants, namely, defendants Nos 1 to 15, it was inter alia pleaded that the 1st defendant was the executrix appointed by the testator and that as such she was entitled to sell and dispose of the property of the deceased testator and that, therefore, the alienations could not be set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below found on a construction of the Will that there was no appointment of the 1st defendant in the Will as general executrix either expressly or by necessary implication. On this finding the lower Court set aside the alienations and holding that the family arrangement set up by the plaintiffs was not proved, gave a decree in their favour for their shares of the properties bequeathed to them under the Will subject, however, to a direction that the plaintiffs should pay to the 1st defendant a fifth share of the total amount of the debts of the testator discharged by the 1st defendant.

The first question, therefore, that arises is whether there is in the Will an appointment of the 1st defendant as executrix by necessary implication. The learned Vakil for the appellants has addressed to us a lengthy argument to show that the lower Court was wrong in holding that there was no such appointment. It seems to me that on a perusal of the entire Will and all its various clauses there can be no doubt whatever of the appointment of the 1st defendant as executrix by the necessary implication. There is no other person to whom the execution of the Will is confided. Wherever the testator thought there was anything to be done by way of carrying out his intentions, he has directed that the same should be done or carried out by the 1st defendant. Thus the debts due to him are directed to be recovered by her. It is she that is authorized to obtain proper documents in respect of lands purchased by him, but the sale-deeds for which had not been obtained by him during his lifetime, and she it is also that is directed to execute deeds of gifts and other documents in respect of certain grants made by him. She is also directed to sell certain properties and utilize the sale-proceeds for the purpose of certain charities. She is also the person that is directed to get the Will registered within three months of his death. Over and above all these, there is about the end of the Will the following sentence: "I authorize my wife to conduct all other affairs in my stead." The other affairs referred to there should necessarily signify and include affairs other than those in respect of which he has given particular directions. It is impossible to regard this sentence as not amounting to a constitution of the 1st defendant as his legal representative and the authority to conduct all other affairs undoubtedly amounts to confiding the execution of the Will to her within the meaning of the definition of "executor." It almost seems to me that even apart from this sentence, the intention may be clearly gathered that she was the person to whom it was the intention of the testator that the execution of the Will should be confided. But this sentence amounts almost to an express appointment. The lower Court was, therefore, clearly wrong in coming to the conclusion that the 1st defendant was not the general executrix appointed by the Will. There was no reason whatever to suppose, as the Subordinate Court seems to have done, that the 1st defendant was appointed an executrix only for certain limited purposes.

The lower Court having arrived at the conclusion that the 1st defendant was not the executrix at all, it became unnecessary for that Court to discuss the question whether if she were executrix what her powers were as such executrix to make the alienations sought to be set aside. This leads me to the consideration of the main question in this appeal, namely, whether an executor appointed by a Will made in the mufassil of the Presidency has vested in him the estate of a testator and has all the powers of an executor as set out in the Probate and Administration Act even though such executor does not obtain Probate of the Will or whether his powers, unless he obtains probate, are only those of a mere manager as held in respect of executors previous to the Probate and Administration Act. It was unnecessary for the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below to consider this question because on his finding that the 1st defendant was not appointed as executrix at all, no such question arises for decision by him. As we have however found that there is an appointment of the 1st defendant as executrix if only by necessary implication, it has become necessary to determine the nature and extent of her powers over the estate of the deceased. If it should be found that even though no probate may be obtained by the executor the estate becomes vested in him from the moment of the death of the testator as indicated in s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act and that he has all the powers of an executor as set out in that Act, then the tests to be applied for the purpose of determining whether or not the alienations made by him would be valid and binding would be entirely different to the tests applicable if the correct view should be that unless and until an executor obtains probate his powers are only those of a mere manager. The present appeal, it seems to me cannot be properly determined without coming to a decision with regard to this main question. If ultimately the view should prevail that the Probate and Administration Act, is merely an enabling Act laying down the procedure for applications for Probate and Letters of Administration and their grant and setting out the consequences that would follow on such grant being made or obtained and that, therefore, an executor of a Will made in the mufassil, of the Presidency has, till he obtains the probate, the powers only of a mere manager as though the Probate and Administration Act had not been passed, then in the view we have taken that the 1st defendant is the properly appointed executrix of the Will the case will have to be remanded to the lower Court for the purpose of determining the question what the powers are of such a mere manager with regard to the disposal of the property of the testator and whether having regard to the nature and extent of such power the particular alienations in this case were within or beyond such powers. If, however, the true view should be held to be that in the case of Wills made in the mufassil the executors have, whether they obtain probate or not, all the powers of the executors as set out in the Act, then the question of the validity of the alienations might require to be determined with reference to the various sections of that Act and the provisions of the Will in question. I may at once state that the case of Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9) is a direct authority for the position contended for by the appellants with regard to the main question of the powers of an executor under the Probate and Administration Act. The learned Judges, Sundara Ayyar and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ., say at page 578* as follows: "But we can see nothing in the Act as it stands to prevent the executor from acting as executor and exercising the powers given to him under the Act without obtaining probate." The reasoning on which the learned Judges proceeded to arrive at that conclusion may be summed up as follows:—(1) There is no provision in the Probate and Administration Act which compels a person appointed as executor under a Will to take out Probate or Letters of Administration; whereas there is such a provision in the Indian Succession Act as incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act. (2) Under s. 4 of the Act, all the property of the deceased vests in the executor as such. (3) Neither the preamble nor the heading of Ch. II in the Act nor s. 12 requires that a different construction should be placed on s. 4. (4) Probate is not necessary to make a person an executor as his title as executor is derived under the Will. (5) Probate is merely the authentic evidence of the Will and not the source of the title of the executor. The learned Judges in coming to that conclusion followed the decisions of the Bombay High Court in the case of Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12) and the case of Mathuradas Lowji v. Goculdas Madhowji (13). The case of Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6) was also cited to their Lordships but has been attempted to be distinguished on a ground which I shall advert to later. It may be convenient here to observe that the view of the Bombay High Court in the said two Bombay cases has been maintained in several recent decisions of that Court. In Narrondas Ramji v. Narrondas Ramji (2). Mr Justice Russell merely follows the earlier Bombay view citing the earlier decisions. In the case of Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (3), two Judges of the Bombay High Court after considering a great deal of the case law on the point reiterate the Bombay view and follow it. In the case of Narrondas Ramji v. Narrondas Ramji (2) Mr. Justice Russell referred to certain observations of Mr. Justice Markby, in the case of Komollochun Dutt v. Nilruttun Mundle (14). Those observations are as follows: "The property vests in the executor by virtue of the Will, not of the probate. The Will gives the property to the executor; the grant of probate is the method which the law specially provides for establishing the Will." That same learned Judge, Mr. Justice Markby, in the case of Prosunno Chunder Bhuttacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (4) states as follows at page 345*: "The executor does not represent the deceased by virtue of the Will until he has obtained probate." In the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (7), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee state as follows: "It is not disputed that the immediate effect of the Act of 1870 was to place a Hindu executor who was in a position, and chose to take advantage of its provisions, on precisely the same footing as the executor of an Anglo Indian testator, in so far as concerns the taking out of probate and the vesting in him of the estate of the deceased. The Will of the late Nundo Lal Mullick was executed in August 1889, and his executors, therefore, on their obtaining probate, became immediately vested, by force of Statute, with the whole estates which belonged to him at the time of his decease." Though in that case their Lordships were not referring to the Probate and Administration Act, they were considering the terms of s. 179 of the Succession Act, which is identical with s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act. In the case of Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6), Chief Justice Maclean and Justice Banerjee, while holding that an executor under a Hindu Will, before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, is not in the same position as an English executor under an English Will, decide that the property does not vest in him, and that he holds it only as manager. The learned Judges referring to the preamble of the Act and the heading of Ch. II of the Act state as follows: "Where the estate is unadministered, if any one desire to come in and prove the Will and get the benefit of the Act in that sense, he may have the opportunity of doing so, and the effect would be that the estate from that time would vest in such executor under s. 4." Again in the case of Sakina Bibee v. Mahomed Ishak (1) Mr. Justice Pugh concludes his discussion of the subject as follows: "It appears to me that in case of a non-probated Will, if I may use the expression, the position must be as it was before the legislation, that is, the Will is a gift from the testator to the legatees, and the executor is merely a manager to carry out the intentions of his testator . . . . In my judgment, therefore, the position of an executor who does not take probate is the same as that of a Hindu or Muhammadan executor before the Succession Act."

In this conflict of view between the various Courts, I am personally inclined to consider that the view taken by the learned Judges in the Calcutta High Court is the correct view. That view is, to my mind, really in accordance with the view of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (7). Considering the question, however, not on the authorities but with reference to the Probate and Administration Act, it has to be noticed that the Act is called "An Act to provide for the grant of Probates of Wills and Letters of Administration to the estates of certain deceased persons." And the preamble runs as follows: "Whereas it is expedient to provide for the grant of Probate of Wills and Letters of Administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act of 1865 does not apply, etc." It is significant that the object of the Act is not stated to be to legislate about Wills or to codify or modify the law relating to Wills. Section 4 of the Act is as follows: "The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such." It is true that, reading the section by itself it would rather seem to indicate that on the death of the testator the executor becomes his legal representative for all purposes and that the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. But it must be remembered that this section refers also to an administrator, and it cannot possibly be pretended that there can be any administrator till Letters of Administration are obtained though the Letters when obtained relate back to the date of the death of the intestate deceased. There is, therefore, no reason to suppose why, in the case of an executor, a similar result should not have been intended. It is, however, significant that s. 4 appears in Ch. II entitled "Of Grant of Probate and Letters of Administration." This heading of the Chapter, therefore, further strengthens the view that both the representative character and the vesting accrue only on probate being taken. Then, we have s 12 which is as follows: "Probate of a Will when granted establishes the Will from the death of the testator, and renders valid all intermediate acts of the executor as such." This makes the meaning of the Legislature, it seems to me, quite clear. It is only the Probate of Will when granted that is said to establish the Will from the death of the testator and renders valid all intermediate acts. The clear implication is that if the probate is not granted or obtained, the Will is not established from the death of the testator and all intermediate acts of the testator will not be rendered valid. In s. 59, it is provided that Probate or Letters of Administration shall have effect over all the property, moveable or immoveable, of the deceased throughout the Province in which the same is (or are) granted, and shall be conclusive as to the representative title against all debtors of the deceased, and all persons holding property which belongs to him. The Legislature after providing in Ch. V regarding the practice in granting and revoking Probates and Letters of Administration proceeds in Ch. VI to enumerate the powers of an executor or administrator. Section 90 of the Act runs as follows: "(1) An executor or administrator has subject to the provisions of this section, power to dispose, as he thinks fit, of all or any of the property for the time being vested in him under s. 4. (2) The power of an executor to dispose of immoveable property so vested in him is subject to any restriction which may be imposed in this behalf by the Will appointing him, unless probate has been granted to him and the Court which granted the probate permits him by an order in writing notwithstanding the restriction, to dispose of any immoveable property specified in the order in a manner permitted by the order." There is no doubt that the clause in sub-s. (2) "unless probate has been granted to him and the Court which granted the probate permits him by an order in writing notwithstanding the restriction, to dispose of any immoveable property specified in the order in a manner permitted by the order" would seem to suggest that even in the absence of probate, the property vests in the executor and that he has power to dispose of immoveable property subject only to any restrictions which may be imposed in that behalf by the Will. There is real difficulty in construing this clause consistently with the other parts of the Act, and for my part, I am inclined to think that it was a case of mere confused expression and that what the Legislature meant to lay down was that if a person appointed executor by a Will should wish to dispose of property contrary to the directions contained in the Will, he should first obtain probate and then apply to the Court and obtain an order from it authorizing him to do so

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Probate and Administration Act is a mere enabling Act and that persons desirous of obtaining the rights created by that Act should first proceed under the Act and clothe themselves with the right by obtaining either Probate or Letters of Administration.

I am confirmed in this view all the more because I cannot possibly imagine that the Legislature virtually altered the law of Wills in the mufassil without expressly saying so or that the Legislature meant to place an executor in the mufassil without probate practically for all purposes in the same position as an executor with probate in Presidency towns.

None of the learned Judges either of this Court or of the Bombay Court who have decided to the contrary have really given any satisfactory explanation either with regard to the preamble of the Act or the heading of Ch. II or the very clear terms of s. 12.

In view, therefore, of the decision in the case of Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9), and the conflict of judicial opinion between the Bombay and the Calcutta High Courts in the same matter, I deem it necessary to refer to a Full Bench the question already propounded, namely, the main question in this appeal, "whether an executor appointed by a Will made in the mufassal of the Presidency has vested in him the estate of a testator and has all the powers of an executor as set out in the Probate and Administration Act even though such executor does not obtain Probate of the Will, or whether his powers, unless he obtains probate, are only those of a mere manager as held in respect of executors previous to the Probate and Administration Act."

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Viyyanna, for Respondent No. 16, Mr. G. Lakshmanna, for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, Messrs. A. Satyanarayana and Mr. P. Bapiraju, for Respondent No. 3 and Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for Respondent No. 7.

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The question raised in this reference is "Whether an executor appointed by a Hindu Will made in the mufassal of the Presidency has vested in him the estate of a testator and has all the powers of an executor as set out in the Probate and Administration Act even though such executor does not obtain Probate of the Will or whether his powers, unless he obtains probate, are only those of a mere manager as held in respect of executors previous to the Probate and Administration Act."

Before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, the estate of a deceased Hindu did not vest in the executor even though he obtained probate, and in cases not governed by the Act, the right of the executor or legatee could be established either by production of probate or by other proof of the Will, probate being only treated as one of the modes by which a Will can be proved in Court, and District Courts had no power to grant Probate or Letters of Administration to Hindu Wills which were not governed by the Hindu Wills Act. Supreme Courts, however, reserved to themselves the power to grant probate but it was recognized that the grant of probate did not of itself confer any additional powers on executors not governed by the Hindu Wills Act. The position of such an executor was merely that of a manager in so far as the powers which were not expressly conferred on him. In Administrator General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (7), their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with rights of Hindu executors prior to the passing of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867 observe. "His powers and functions were not those of an English executor, but rather those of a manager; but he did not require probate, and probate, if obtained, would not have vested him with any title to the estate, either real or personal, which he administered". In view of these observations it is unnecessary to refer in detail to the decisions of the High Courts on the subject. I need only refer to Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (5), Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6), Amulya Charan Seal v. Kali Das Sen (15), and Maniklal Atmaram v. Manchershi Dinsha Coachman (16).

As regards grants of probate and the proof required of a Will not governed by the Hindu Wills Act it was held in Luchmun Bharti v. Dukharam Bharti (17), that before the passing of the Probate and Administration Act, it was not competent to District Courts to grant Probate or Letters of Administration but as pointed out in Krishna Kinkur Roy v. Rai Mohun Roy (18), the passing of the Probate and Administration Act has altered this. It has however been held that there is no obligation cast on a Hindu or Muhammadan executor of Wills not coming under the Hindu Wills Act to take out probate and that he can prove the Will during the course of the suit just as if he was proving any other document requiring proof. Probate was regarded only as one mode of proving a Will. I need only refer to Krishna Kinkur Roy v. Rai Mohon Roy (18), Krishna Kinkur Roy v. Panchuram Mundul (19), Bhagvansang Bharaji v. Bechardas Harjivandas (20), Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12), Sakina Bibee v. Mahomed Ishak (1). The Probate and Administration Bill as originally drafted and introduced in the Council proposed to make the production of Probate or Letters of Administration necessary in all cases where the property exceeded Rs. 1,000; but when the Bill was in the Select Committee this provision was deleted. The result is that the Probate and Administration Act is as it stands a measure purely permissive so far as the necessity for taking out probate is concerned.

The question is whether the Probate and Administration Act is only confined to cases where such permission is availed of and a person applies for Probate or Letters of Administration or whether it applies to all cases. So far as the decided cases are concerned, there is a difference of opinion between the view taken by the Madras and Bombay High Courts on one side and the Calcutta High Court on the other. In Fatma v. Shaik Essa (21), West, J., held that the executor of a Will of a deceased Muhammadan executed after the Probate and Administration Act had come into force could not claim to represent the estate of his testator until he had taken out probate. His view was that all classes of executors with regard to the necessity of taking out probate were on the some footing, that s. 12 of the Act showed clearly that the idea at the bottom of the scheme of the Act was that a Will was not to be considered established until probate had been taken out and that till probate there was no Will "established," that is there was no "Will" at all, exacting recognition of the dispositions made and the authority conferred by it. He held that the Act read as a whole established that probate was necessary in all cases. This view of West, J., was however overruled by Sir Charles Sargent, C J., and Bayley, J. in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12), and it was held that by reason of the omission from the Probate and Administration Act which applies to Hindus and Muhammadans of any section corresponding to s. 187 of the Succession Act which requires the production of Probate or Letters of Administration, a right of suit may be established by a Hindu or Muhammadan without taking out probate. Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., was of opinion that s. 12 of the Probate and Administration Act was merely intended to be a condensed statement of the English Law which regards probate as the authenticated evidence of the Will itself from which the executor derives his title and by virtue of which the property of the testator vests in him from the death of the testator and not as a condition precedent to establishing his claim. In Mathuradas Lowji v. Goculdas Madhowji (13), it was held following the decision in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12), that an executor who has not taken out probate has the powers of alienation which the English Law confers on executors. In Narrondas Ramji v. Narrondas Ramji (2), it was held that the estate of a deceased vested in the executor appointed under the Will even though he did not obtain probate. Russell, J., observed as follows:—"The plaintiffs were his executors and by s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act all his estate vested in the plaintiffs as such." This Court has held s. 4 applicable before probate. [See Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12) approved in Muthuradas Lowji v. Gaculdas Madhowji (13) and in Bai Harkor v. Maneklal Rasikdas (22).] It seems to have been assumed that the effect of s. 4 would have been to vest the property in the executor of a Will made before the passing of the Act, and not governed by the Hindu Law, although probate had not been granted. In Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (3), Marten and Fawcett, JJ., after reviewing the case law on the subject held that the estate vests in the executor under s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act and that he can convey the property by virtue of the power conferred upon him by s. 90 of the Act even though he has not obtained probate. All the authorities are reviewed by the learned Judges in their judgment.

So far as Madras is concerned the view of the Bombay High Court has been accepted as correct. In Ganapati Aiyar v Sivamalai (9), Sundara Ayyar and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ., held that an executor under the Will of a Hindu who has not obtained probate is governed by the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act and can clothe a vendee with full title. Dealing with the argument that the property of the testator would vest in the executor only if he took Probate or Letters of Administration the learned Judges observe "We are unable to uphold this contention. There is no provision in the Probate and Administration Act which requires a person appointed as executor under a Will to take out Probate or Letters of Administration. Section 187 of the Indian Succession Act which provides that no right as legatee or executor under a Will can be enforced unless Probate or Letters of Administration have been taken out has not been enacted in the Probate and Administration Act. It was imported into the Hindu Wills Act, but it was apparently for very good reasons considered undesirable to embody it in the Probate and Administration Act. Under s. 4 of the Act all the property of the deceased vests in the executor as such. Probate is not necessary to make a person an executor. His title is derived under the Will. If s. 187 of the Succession Act had been imported into the Probate and Administration Act, then neither the executor nor any persons claiming as alienees under him would be entitled to enforce any right as executor or alienee. But we can see nothing in the Act as it stands to prevent the executor from acting as executor and exercising the powers given to him under the Act without obtaining probate. This was the view taken in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (12) and Mathuradas Lowji v. Goculdas Madhowji (13)." The learned Judges distinguish Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6), on the ground that it related to the validity of a sale made by an executor under a Hindu Will in the year 1854 long before the Probate and Administration Act was passed and they observed that they could not assume that the learned Judges would have taken the same view in respect to Wills made by a person who died after 1881. In Bala Krishnudu v. Narayanaswamy Chetty (10) Wallis, C. J., held that the estate of a deceased vests in the executor even though probate has not been taken out, and observed as follows:—"The Will is not governed by the Hindu Wills Act and s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act is, therefore, not applicable. Under s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act the estate of the deceased vested in the plaintiff as her executor on her death in January 1914 and there is nothing in that Act to prevent him suing the defendant at once. No doubt if he had omitted to take out probate he could not have obtained a decree without producing a succession certificate, but there is nothing in that Act to prevent his instituting the suit and afterwards obtaining the certificate before decree." In Zemindar of Bhadrachalam & Palavancha v. Venkatadri Appa Rao (11), it was assumed both by Sadasiva Ayyar, and Phillips, JJ., who originally heard the appeal and by the Full Bench that the Probate and Administration Act applied to unprobated Wills in the mufassil to which the Hindu Wills Act did not apply.

A different view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court. In Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6) it was held that an executor under a Hindu Will executed before the Hindu Wills Act came into force is not in the same position, as an English executor under an English Will and that the property does not vest in him but that he holds it only as manager. As pointed out by Sundara Ayyar and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ, in Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9) the Will in question was executed before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act and the Probate and Administration Act; but I have little doubt that there are observations in the judgment which support the view taken that the Probate and Administration Act does not apply to cases where probate has not been granted to the executor. Sir William Maclean, C. J., refers to the preamble of the Act and the fact that s. 4 comes in under Ch. 11 of the Act headed "Of Grant of Probate and Letters of Administration" and observes that this indicates that the vesting was only to follow upon the grant of Probate of the Will in the one case, or grant of Letters of Administration in the other and that the section applies not only to executors but to administrators who obtain Letters of Administration under the Act Banerjee, J., thinks that the provisions of the Act must be taken to be controlled by the preamble of the Act and states that where probate has not been obtained the provisions of the Act would not apply. In Prosunno Chunder Bhuttacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (4), a decree was obtained against a person who was not the proper legal representative. Subsequent to the decree under the Will of the deceased he took out probate and he filed a claim to the property attached in execution of the decree against the defendant in that suit who was only the concubine of the deceased. Markby, J., held that a person who took possession of the estate of a deceased Hindu who had left a Will which was not probated must be treated for some purpose as his legal representative until some other claimant comes forward. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge observes that the executor does not represent the deceased by virtue of the Will until he has obtained probate, that somebody must have represented the deceased and, must represent the deceased and that the person who was in possession of the estate and managed it till probate was obtained might be treated as the person who was representing the estate The same learned Judge, however, in Komollochun Dutt v. Nilruttun Mundle (14) observed "when the probate is granted it operates upon the whole estate, and (by s. 188) it establishes the Will from the death of the testator and renders valid all intermediate acts of the executor as such. The property vests in the executor by virtue of the Will, not of the probate. The Will gives the property to the executor; the grant of probate is the method which the law specially provides for establishing the Will. So long as the probate exists it is effectual for that purpose." The question for determination there however, was whether when once probate was granted it can be set aside by a separate suit and it was held that the only way to set it aside was to apply to the Court which granted the probate to revoke the grant. In Sakina Bibee v. Mahomed Ishak (1) it was held by Pugh, J., following Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath Bosu (6) that the powers conferred by the Probate and Administration Act do not apply to an executor who has not taken out probate and that the powers of the executor under such a Will must be the same as it was before the passing of the Act. The observations of the learned Judge were, however, obiter as the question did not arise for determination.

I may refer to two Calcutta cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council which were referred to in the course of the argument. The first is Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (7). The question in that case was whether a Hindu executor who had obtained probate of a Will can transfer the administration to the Administrator General by virtue of the provisions of the Administrator-General's Act II of 1874. The Will was executed in 1889 after the passing of the Probate and Administration Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that the right conferred by s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act was not confined to any particular class of executors and that the executor under a Hindu Will can take advantage of the provisions of the Act In the course of their judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council, after pointing out that s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1874 is a re-enactment, without verbal alterations of s. 30 of the Administrator General's Act 1867 (Act XXIV of 1867), make the following observation at page 796*: —"It is not disputed that the immediate effect of the Act of 1870 was to place a Hindu executor who was in a position, and chose to take advantage of its provisions, on precisely the same footing as the executor of an Anglo-Indian testator, in so far as concerns the taking out of probate and the vesting in him of the estate of the deceased. The Will of the late Nundo Lal Mullick was executed in August 1889, and his executors, therefore, on their obtaining probate, became immediately vested, by force of Statute, with the whole estates which belonged to him at the time of his decease." The words "the executors, therefore, on their obtaining probate became immediately vested by force of Statute" are relied upon as supporting the view that the powers of an executor only arise on probate being taken. I do not think that we can hold that these observations which were obiter can be taken as an authoritative interpretation of s. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act. The only question for decision was whether a Hindu who obtains Probate of a Will executed after the passing of the Probate and Administration Act was a person who came within the class of persons empowered to transfer the estate to the Administrator-General under s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act. There is great force in the following observations of Sir E. J. Trevelyan in his book The Law relating to Hindu Wills":—"Although it was unnecessary to decide this question, these observations would show that an estate does not vest in an executor until probate. It is submitted that their Lordships have omitted to consider the words 'unless probate has been granted to him,' in s. 90(2) the omission from s. 4 of any reference to probate and the expression of the effects of probate in ss. 12 and 59, which, it is submitted suggest that the powers of an executor are not dependent upon probate." I may also point out that Sir Rowland Wilson in his work on Muhammadan Law is also of opinion that the powers of an executor of a Muhammadan under a Will which is not probated are subject to the provisions of the Act and that without probate he is an executor within the meaning of the probate and Administration Act except where the contrary appears from the context [see page 232, 5th Edition.]

Reference has also been made to Kurrut-ul-ain Bahadur v. Nuzbat-ud-dowla Abbas Hossein Khan, (8). That was a case where a Muhammadan left a Will which under the Muhammadan Law would be invalid to the extent of two-thirds of the estate. The Will was executed in 1893 after the passing of the Probate and Administration Act and the question was what the effect of the probate was as regards two-thirds of the estate which the testator under Muhammadan Law had no power to dispose of. It was held that the grant of probate did not estop the plaintiff from pleading that the Will did not operate on two-thirds of the estate. Their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 130* state that, although the Supreme Courts granted probates of Hindu and Muhammadan Wills, those Courts never applied the English rule as to the necessity for probate to such Wills nor did they attribute to such probates, when granted, the English doctrines as to the operation of probate, and observe as follows: "Under that system a Hindu or Muhammadan executor took no title to property merely as such by virtue of the probate." I do not think this decision throws much light on the question before us.

So far as the legislation in Madras is concerned there are two Regulations which deal with this matter. One is Regulation III of 1802 and s. 16 gave power to executors of Muhammadans and others to take charge of assets and to execute the trusts mentioned in the Will and forbade Courts from interfering except on complaints. This section, however, was repealed so far as Hindus were concerned by Regulation V of 1829 and the preamble states that the provisions of s. 16 of Regulation III of 1802 were contrary to the provisions of Hindu Law and the authorities prevalent—Section 4 of Regulation V of 1829 says that Wills left by Hindus shall have no legal force whatever except so far as their contents may be in conformity with the provisions of the Hindu Law, according to the authorities prevalent in the respective Provinces under this Presidency.

I am of opinion that the view taken by the Bombay High Court and by our own Court in Ganapathi Aiyar v. Sivamalai (9) is correct. As regards the vesting of the estate on the executor before probate is obtained I think the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Soona Mayna Kena Roona Meyappa Chetty v. Soona Navena Suppramanian Chetty (23) are clear. They observe "it is quite clear that an executor derives his title and authority from the Will of his testator and not from any grant of probate. The personal property of the testator, including all rights of action, vests in him upon the testator's death." I think there are many practical difficulties in coming to the opposite conclusion. Section 12 of the Probate and Administration Act says that Probate of a Will when granted establishes the Will from the death of the testator, and renders valid all intermediate acts of the executor as such; so that it will be open to the executor to defer taking out probate and after administering the estate with the limited powers of a manager to apply for probate and clothe himself with rights which are far more extensive and which would have retrospective effect For example, if he sells property before obtaining probate, the sale would not be binding unless there was an express provision in the Will or unless it were necessary and beneficial to the estate within the meaning of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (24) but if he takes out probate the alienation would be valid from the date of death of the testator because under s. 90 unless there is an express prohibition, there is no question of necessity. It is not in every case that a purchaser can apply for Letters of Administration with Will annexed. As the view taken by the Madras High Court has always been that the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act apply to cases where probate has not been obtained and as it would unsettle many titles if a contrary view were held we should not do so unless we are satisfied that the view taken till now is clearly erroneous.

Turning to the Probate and Administration Act, I do not think there is anything in the Act which clearly indicates that it is only applicable to executors who take out probate. Executor is defined generally in s. 3 as a person to whom the execution of the last Will of a deceased person is, by the testator's appointment, confided. Section 4 enacts that the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person, is the legal representative for all purposes and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. No doubt this section comes under Ch. II which is headed "Of grant of Probate and Letters of Administration," but I do not think that this fact has much bearing on the general words of the section nor do I think that the fact that an administrator gets title only from the date of the grant of Letters of Administration throws much light on the question. I think the meaning of the section is that property will vest in both of them but that in the case of an executor it vests from the date of the death of the testator, but by virtue of ss. 14 and 15 an administrator being merely a person to whom the Court confides the management of the estate the property vests in him from the date of the grant of Letters of Administration and not before. I do not think there is much point in the contention that because executors and administrators are both referred to in s. 4 and because an administrator's rights commence from the date of the grant a similar restriction should be placed upon the executor who derives title from the Will of the testator. Section 90, I think, makes the point clear. It distinctly applies to both executors who have taken out probate and those who have not. Clause (1) gives the executor or administrator power to dispose of all or any of the property for the time being vested in him under s. 4 and cl. (2) says that if the Will contains a restriction and the executor wants to sell property he should obtain probate and get the leave of the Court. It is difficult to read s. 90 as not applying to unprobated Wills. It clearly contemplates the vesting of property in the executor who has not obtained probate. It is no doubt true that in the preamble it is stated that it is expedient to provide for the grant of Probat Wills and Letters of Administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act does not apply but I do not think that this fact alone should be taken as conclusive on the question. It seems to me that if the Legislature intended that only Wills which are probated should be governed by this Act, it would have said so in unequivocal terms and in the absence of any such statement I do not think I will be justified in holding that the Act is not applicable to cases where probate has not been obtained. There are several sections in the Act which have nothing to do with probate and which are general in their character and there is no reason why such provisions should not be applied to Hindu Wills of which probate has not been obtained. I think there is great force in the observations of Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa, (12) where the learned Judge observes that the object of the Legislature in enacting the Probate and Administration Act seems to have been to frame an act which would be applicable to all natives of this country whilst leaving the existing law as to those Hindus, to whom the Hindu Wills Act apply untouched.

I would answer the reference by stating that in cases of Hindu Wills to which the Hindu Wills Act does not apply the estate vests in the executor (who accepts office) from the date of the testator's death and that the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act are applicable even though probate has not been obtained.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 21 OF 1925.
December 16, 1925.
Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.

VASANTRAO GOVINDRAO PRABHAKAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
NANABHAI SADANAND—DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Foreclosure—Decree nisi before Transfer of Property Act—Mortgagee allowed possession—Mortgagor's right to demand account and further day for payment—Long silence, effect of.

Before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, it was not the practice of the Bombay High Court to require a mortgagee, who had obtained a decree nisi for foreclosure, upon non-payment of the money due at the time prescribed, to obtain an order for foreclosure absolute as against the person or persons in default; the mortgagee was permitted to foreclose by proceedings in execution of the decree instead of obtaining an order absolute. [p. 101, col. 2.]

As a general rule after an order for foreclosure nisi, the mortgagor can apply for, and in suitable circumstances and on certain conditions obtain an order enlarging the time for redemption; but enlargement of the time is not a matter of course. The power to extend the time is in the discretion of the Court, and in order to entitle himself to such indulgence the mortgagor must apply to the Court with reasonable promptitude. [p. 103, col. 1.]

A mortgagee obtained a decree nisi for foreclosure in 1875. The period allowed to mortgagor for payment and redemption was six months. Soon after the mortgagee got possession of the property under some arrangement with the mortgagor. The mortgagor never took any steps to ask for further accounts, nor did he or those claiming under him ever apply to the Court for enlargement of the time. The mortgagee treated the property as his own and erected costly buildings over it to the knowledge of the mortgagor. After the lapse of 45 years the representatives-in-interest of the mortgagor brought a suit claiming the property:

Held, (1) that the mortgagor acquiesced in the position that the mortgagee was entitled to hold the property as his own and it was no longer necessary for the mortgagee to execute the decree and he became full owner of the property; [p. 103, col. 2.]

(2) that assuming that this was not so, and that the plaint in the suit could be treated as an application for extension of time for payment made in the foreclosure suit of 1875, the delay of 45 years on the part of the mortgagor was fatal to his case. [ibid.]

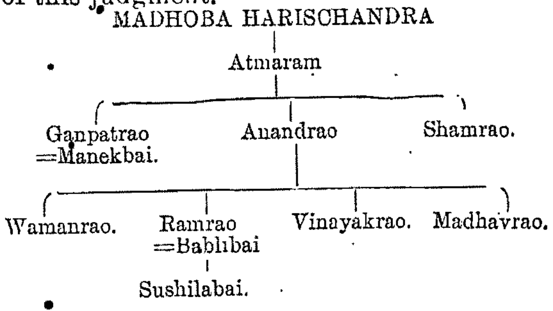
JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs filed this suit for the redemption of two properties, hereinafter called the Girgaon property and the Mahim property respectively, after taking an account of the two mortgages mentioned in the plaint. The following pedigree is necessary for the purposes of this judgment.



The original plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 were Wamanrao, Vinayakrao and Madhavrao, while plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 were the executors of Maneckbai widow of Gunpatrao.

In 1869 Madhoba negotiated with one Shrikrishna Naranj for a loan of Rs. 82,000 to be secured on the Girgaon property. An agreement was arrived at whereby Shrikrishna Naranji was to advance Rs. 82.000 on a deposit of the title deeds of the Girgaon property and Madhoba was to purchase the Mahim property from Shrikrishna for Rs. 50,000. Accordingly the title deeds of the Girgaon property were deposited with Shrikrishna who advanced Rs. 82,000 to Madhoba. Madhoba died on September 19, 1869, leaving a Will dated April 16, 1862, and a codicil thereto dated September 18, 1869.

Probate of the Will and codicil was granted to Atmaram Madhoba as the executor named in Will on January 20, 1870. On March 25, 1870, Atmaram obtained a conveyance of the Mahim property from Shrikrishna, and on the same day Atmaram executed two mortgages one of the Girgaon property and the other of the Girgaon and Mahim properties to secure the sums of Rs. 82,000 and Rs. 50,000 respectively.

On March 4, 1875, Shrikrishna assigned the said two mortgages and all his rights thereunder to his son Sadanand.

Sadanand filed a suit No. 259 of 1875, against Atmaram for the realization of the amounts due on these mortgages, and obtained a decree nisi on July 15, 1875, by which it was directed that the defendant as executor should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 2,39,538-5-8 for debt and interest on the two mortgages with costs and further simple interest on the principal sum of Rs. 2,32,672 at 13 per cent, per annum from the date of the decree till payment, and it was ordered that on the defendant paying the said principal, interest and costs, within six months after the date of the decree, the plaintiff should re-convey the premises comprised in the mortgage-deeds to the defendant free of all incumbrances, but on the defendant failing to pay what should be due for principal, interest and costs by the said time the defendant should from thenceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from the equity of redemption of the said mortgaged premises. In or about the month of November 1875, before the six months prescribed in the decree expired, Atmaram put Sadanand in possession of the Girgaon property. The arrangement under which possession was given is said to have been recorded in a letter of November 29, 1875, written by Atmaram to Sadanand, which is Ex. F to the plaint, though it does not appear to have been proved and put in as an exhibit in the suit. It is alleged in the plaint para. 9 that the Municipality of Bombay was pressing Atmaram to execute some repairs to certain chawls on the Girgaon property and was threatening in default to pull them down. As Atmaram could not comply with the requisition of the Municipality he agreed that Sadanand should enter into possession, and re-build such of the chawls as were required to be re-built, debiting Atmaram with the costs thereof and crediting him with the rents received.

The first defendant Nanabhai Sadanand, son of the mortgagee, in para. 4 of his written statement, denied any knowledge of this arrangement, but he admitted that Sadanand was put into possession of the Girgaon property in December 1875 and that letters were addressed to the tenants to pay rent to Sadanand. He further set up an oral arrangement that Sadanand was to repair and re-build while Atmaram should have a further six months within which to redeem. The plaintiff further alleges that in or about the month of July 1877 Atmaram put Sadanand in possession of the Mahim property as mortgagee in possession but in spite of such possession being given Sadanand filed a Suit No. 869 of 1877 for possession which was dismissed with costs. Atmaram died on July 6, 1893, and Sadanand in or about the year 1910, leaving his son the first defendant as executor of his Will.

The plaintiffs contended that Sadanand not having obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure or for sale in Suit No. 259 of 1875 and having entered into possession of the said property under the arrangement referred to, the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between Atmaram and Sadanand continued to subsist and still subsisted between the plaintiffs as executors of the Will of Manekbai and as administrators de bonis non of the estate of Madhoba and the defendant as executor of Sadanand. Further that execution of the decree nisi had long been time-barred. The plaintiff alleged that Manekbai had an interest in the suit properties but they did not set out in the plaint how that interest was acquired.

However it appears that on June 6, 1878, Anandrao and Ganpatrao, sons of Atmaram, were adjudicated insolvent. When Atmaram died in 1893 the Official Assignee put up for sale the interests of Anandrao and Ganpatrao in the Girgaon property and other properties and sold them to one Major Kirtikar. He died on May 9, 1917, leaving a Will and a codicil. By the codicil he devised the Girgaon property to Manekbai, the widow of Ganpatrao. Her executors, therefore, had no claim upon the Mahim property.

By an order of August 1, 1924, plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 were struck out and added as defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. For some reason or other this order was cancelled on August 2, but the amendment was re-instated by an order of September 24. All these orders were made after the suit was first called on for hearing, and it is curious to note that the plaint was re-declared on August 5, 1924, and October 17, 1924, by one Motiram Kirtikar, constituted attorney for defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Para. 21 of the plaint at page 5 of the printed book should not have been in black ink, as it refers to the order made on September 24.

Then the concise statement which appears at page 9 could not possibly have been the original concise statement, as it in no way corresponds with the plaint as drawn. In para 13 of the plaint the plaintiff said they were applying for letters of administration with the Will and codicil of Madhoba annexed to the estate of Madhoba. These letters were not granted until October 31, 1924, limited to the two properties mentioned in the suit. Now the concise statement recites that the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 pray that it may be declared that the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 as administratrix and administrators of the estate of Madhoba Harichandra were entitled to redeem the properties mentioned in the plaint, while the decree which was eventually passed dismissing the suit recites that the plaintiffs pray that it may be declared that they, as executors of the Will of Manekbai and as administrators de bonis non jointly with defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 of the estate of Madhoba, should be entitled to redeem the suit properties. Then from the record at page 54 it would appear that the hearing commenced on November 10, 1924, although the decree re-cites that it was called on for hearing on several days in July, August and October.

It is necessary to point out all these defects in the record, since in a case of this description where the parties appear to have more than once changed their positions and their characters, unless the record is properly kept confusion is likely to arise.

The first defendant filed a written statement on January 7, 1922, which does not appear to have been amended since. He contended that the decree in the suit of 1875 was not a decree nisi but a final decree, and that in the events which occurred Sadanand became entitled to possession of the Girgaon property at the latest on July 15, 1876, and of the Mahim property on January 15, 1876.

He denied that Sadanand went into possession of the Mahim property as mortgagee, on the contrary the Judge in Suit No. 689 of 1877 held that Sadanand had obtained possession of the Mahim property before suit and on that ground dismissed the suit. He claimed that even if the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875 was not a final decree, any claim to redeem the properties was res judicata by virtue of the decree.

Further, the Mahim property had been handed over to Sadanand in execution of the decree, and had been conveyed by Sadanand in 1882 to one Purshottam Srikrishna. Large sums had been spent on the Girgaon property and in any event the plaintiff could not redeem without an account being taken of such sums. The rule of damdupat had no application.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were allowed to put in a written statement on November 10, 1924, supporting the plaintiffs.

The Judge found on the issues which were raised on the pleadings. (1) That the plaintiffs, as executors of Manekbai were only interested in the Girgaon property. They could not sue to redeem only one of the two (the Judge appears to have forgotten there were two mortgages) properties under the mortgage. They had no interest in the other. (2) That Dattaram Vaidyaram, heir of Purshottam Srikrishna, was a necessary party. (3) That the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875 barred the defendant therein from all equity of redemption in default of payments as therein directed. (4) That Atmaram had no interest in the Girgaon property as from January 15, or July 15, 1876. (5) That the plaintiffs' claim was barred by adverse possession, and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs, executors of the Will of Manekbai, have appealed.

The difficulties in the case have mainly arisen from the fact that Suit No. 259 of 1875 was filed on two separate mortgages, that the decree was passed as if there was one mortgage, and that thereafter the properties in each mortgage were dealt with in different ways. It is admitted that in December 1875, before the redemption period had expired, Sadanand obtained possession of the Girgaon property by arrangement with the mortgagor. Whatever that arrangement may have been, Sadanand continued in possession thereafter as owner. As to the Mahim property Sadanand, in 1877, took out a summons for executing the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875, and on July 23, 1877, a Judge's order was made on the summons that the decree should be executed against Atmaram by ordering delivery to be given to Sadanand. But when the Judge was asked to sign a further order for the purpose of carrying out the previous order, that a warrant should issue to the Sheriff, he declined to sign it and told Sadanand to file a suit for possession. Sadanand then filed the suit already referred to, but as Atmaram in his written statement stated that he was served with a rule or order to show cause why the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875 should not be executed and did not appear to show cause against the rule but thereupon gave up possession to the plaintiff, the suit was dismissed. Sadanand transferred the property by deed of gift in 1882 to Purshottam. The position then is somewhat unorthodox. No objection appears to have been taken to the form of the Suit No. 259 of 1875 which apparently treated the two mortgages as one and sought for one account of what was due on both the mortgages. With regard to one property the decree was executed as if it was a final decree, with regard to the other the mortgagee entered into possession by arrangement with the mortgagor before the time prescribed for paying off the mortgage had expired. Even assuming that the mortgage on the Mahim property had been foreclosed absolutely, the mortgage on the Girgaon property continued to be in existence. It would have been otherwise if Sadanand had entered into possession after the six months fixed in the decree had passed. The Judge was of opinion that the decree was a final one, but I think the most that can be said on that question is, that at the time the decree was passed, it was probably the practice to foreclose by proceedings in execution, instead of obtaining an order absolute. Undoubtedly, the decree was in the form of a decree nisi according to the precedent appearing in Seton which is reproduced in form 3 in Appendix P to the First Schedule of the C. P. C. of 1908. I should prefer form No. 27 annexed to the High Court Rules appearing at page 235 in which it is directed that in default of the defendants paying principal, interest and costs by the time prescribed, the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree absolute for sale.

"Upon non-payment of the amount certified to be due at the time and place prescribed, the mortgagee is entitled to an order for foreclosure absolute as against the person or persons in default. The order is obtained upon motion or summons, and there must be an affidavit made by the mortgagee...of attendance at the prescribed time and place and non-payment of the money; and also an affidavit by the mortgagee...of non-payment since the appointed time."

And note (b) on the same page says:—

"If the order is made on motion, the matter is not mentioned to the Court unless there has been some irregularity preventing the motion from being treated as of course; Counsel hands his brief duly indorsed to the Registrar. But usually it is made on summons in Chambers...whether the proceedings are by writ or summons."

It might be advisable to consider whether this practice should not be prescribed for this Court by rule.

But though it would appear that the form used by this Court in those days for decrees in mortgage suits was the same as was used according to the English practice for decrees nisi, there was no regular practice prescribed for the course to be followed by the mortgagee when default occurred in payment of principal, interest and costs, within the time allowed. It really did not make any difference whether the mortgagee executed his decree, and obtained possession of the mortgaged property, or applied for a final decree, except that an application for execution might be subject to the law of limitation. The question remains, what is the legal position of the parties if the decree is not executed and no order absolute is asked for?

Now ordinarily speaking, if after a decree nisi for foreclosure has been passed and the mortgagee enters before the period for payment of the principal, interest, and costs, has expired, the mortgagee could not foreclose without a further account being taken as he would be liable to account for the rents received. Admittedly, rents were received from the Girgaon property, but the question would arise by what procedure were these accounts to be taken if the mortgagor demanded them.

Presumably, this Court, before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, would be guided by the English practice. Lord Halsbury, in para 532 of Vol. XXI says:—

"The time for redemption will be enlarged if the mortgagee is in possession and receives rents between the date of the master's certificate and the day appointed for payment. Such receipt opens the account, and a fresh certificate must be made and a further day appointed; but after default on the day appointed for payment, the mortgagee receives the rents on his own account and the time is not thereby enlarged."

The fact then that Sadanand entered into possession before the time appointed for payment rendered necessary the issue of a fresh certificate and the appointment of a further day for payment. The next question is, whether the mortgagor's right to bring a redemption suit is barred by the mortgagee obtaining an order nisi for foreclosure. In Hill v. Rowlands (1) an order for foreclosure was made in the common form and a certificate had also been made in the common form appointing the last day of six calender months from the date of the certificate as the time for redemption, on payment of the principal money with interest up to that day and costs. The mortgagor claimed to be allowed to redeem at an earlier date than the date so fixed on payment of the amount found due with interest up to the date of payment only. The application was refused by Romer, J., and on appeal Lindley, L. J., said: "The rights of the parties are settled by the judgment, and the mortgagor cannot redeem before the time fixed by the certificate on payment of a less sum than is named in it."

(1) (1897) 2 Ch. 361; 66 L. J. Ch. 689; 77 L. T. 34; 46 W. R. 26

It would thus appear that the mortgagors' rights are confined to applying in the foreclosure action for an enlargement of the time for payment.

The general principles by which the Court will be guided in entertaining such an application are set out in para 528 of Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI:

"...Enlargement of time is not a matter of course. There must be some reason for it, such as that the security is ample, and that the mortgagor has a reasonable probability of obtaining the money to pay the mortgage debt;...The matters to be taken into consideration include the nature of the estate, whether in reversion or in possession, whether the mortgaged property shows a sufficient margin to protect the mortgagee against loss; and whether the mortgagor's reasonable expectations (of raising the money to pay off the mortgage) have been disappointed."

An application to enlarge the time and take further accounts 45 years after the mortgagee had been put in possession after an order for foreclosure nisi had been made, even though possession was given before the day appointed for payment had arrived, could hardly have been within the contemplation of the learned author. If after a preliminary decree for foreclosure has been passed under the C. P. C. of 1908 the mortgagee enters into possession before the day appointed for payment has arrived, the mortgagor would certainly have a right to demand a fresh account and the appointment of a further day for payment, but if he allowed many years to pass before making his application the Court would probably consider how far by his conduct he could be said to have foreclosed himself.

But in this case there is a decree which at the time it was passed, whatever its form might be, was considered by the Court capable of execution. When the mortgagor put Sadanand into possession of the Girgaon property in December 1875, he had not the means to comply with the Municipality's requisitions for re-building or repairing some of the chawls thereon and he would not have had the slightest expectation of redeeming the mortgaged properties either on the day appointed for payment or six months later. The rents received by the mortgagee between the date of taking possession and the date fixed for re-payment could not have amounted to any great sum. I think it must be considered that Atmaram by taking no further steps to ask for a further account, and for extension of the time for payment, acquiesced in the mortgagee holding the property as his own and induced him to believe that it was no longer necessary either to execute the decree he had obtained or to obtain an order absolute for foreclosure.

Even if it were held that the suit could be re-constituted as an application in the mortgage suit to enlarge the time for redemption, and an order was made to take accounts from December 1875, it is obvious that the amount due to the mortgagees according to the terms of the mortgage would be many lakhs, as the rule of damdupat does not apply to mortgagees in possession, and any possibility of the plaintiffs being able to pay what would be found due may be discarded.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Coyajee, J.—The plaintiffs claimed that they and the 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants are entitled to redeem the two immoveable properties mentioned in the plaint, and which it will be convenient to describe as the Girgaon property and the Mahim property. Madhoba Harischandraji was the original owner of the Girgaon property. In or about the year 1869 Shrikrishna Naranji agreed to advance the sum of Rs. 82,000 on the security of that property, Madhoba agreeing to buy for the sum of Rs. 50,000 the Mahim property which was then owned by Shrikrishna. Accordingly, Shrikrishna advanced the sum of Rs. 82,000 and Madhoba deposited with him the title-deeds of the Girgaon property. In 1869 Madhoba died having by his last Will and codicil appointed his son Atmaram his executor. In January 1870, Probate of the Will and codicil was granted to Atmaram. On March 26, 1870, Atmaram, as executor of Madhoba, obtained a conveyance of the Mahim property from Shrikrishna. On the same day he executed two mortgages, Exs. A and B, in favour of Shrikrishna. Exhibit A was for Rs. 82,000 and comprised the Girgaon property, Ex B was for Rs. 50,000 and comprised both the Mahim property and the Girgaon property. On March 4, 1875, Shrikrishna assigned both the mortgages and his rights thereunder to his son Sadanand.

Sadanand filed Suit No. 259 of 1875 in the High Court against Atmaram for realization of the money due on both the mortgages. On July 15, 1875, a decree was passed in these terms:—

"The said defendant...do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 2,39,538-5-8 for debt and interest (due on the said two Indentures of mortgage...) and the costs of this suit...and further simple interest on the principal sum of Rs. 1,32,672 at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum from the date hereof until payment and this Court doth further order that upon the said defendant paying to the plaintiff the said principal, interest and costs within six calender months after the date of this decree the plaintiff do re-convey the premises comprised in the said mortgage-deeds ...but on the defendant failing to pay to the plaintiff what shall be due for principal, interest and costs as aforesaid by the time aforesaid the defendant doth from thenceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from equity of redemption of in and to the said mortgaged premises."

The parties agree that in or about December 1875 Atmaram gave possession of the Girgaon property to Sadanand; but they differ as to the circumstances under which the transfer of possession took place. The plaintiff's allegations are set out in para. 9 of the plaint; but it may be noted that the letter referred to therein is not proved. As regards the Mahim property, the plaint (para 11) alleges that in the month of July 1877 Atmaram put Sadanand in possession of it as mortgagee. The plaintiffs contend that Sadanand not having obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure in Suit No. 259 of 1875, and having entered into possession of the mortgaged properties under the arrangements above referred to, the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee still subsists between them and the 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants on the one hand and the 1st defendant on the other.

The 1st defendant resisted the claim on the grounds, (1) that the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875 was a final decree; (2) that the claim to redeem the properties was res judicata by reason of that decree; (3) that Atmaram had delivered over the Mahim property to Sadanand in execution of the said decree, and it was in the possession of Dattaram Vidyaram as the heir of Purshottam to whom Sadanand had conveyed it by an indenture dated June 26, 1882; (4) that Sadanand and after him the defendant claim to be in possession of the Girgaon property as owner thereof, and their possession had been adverse and the suit as to that property was barred by the law of limitation; and (5) that Sadanand had expended large sums in erecting substantial buildings on the Girgaon property and those entitled to the equity of redemption, had there been any, were aware that such buildings were being erected and stood by and took no steps to assert any claim to the said property and allowed the said buildings to be erected well knowing that Sadanand claimed to be its owner.

The learned Trial Judge dismissed the suit, holding: (1) that the decree pssed in 1875 was a final decree, it was not superseded by the agreement set up in the plaint, and the mortgagor had no interest left in the suit properties; (2) that the alienee of the Mahim property was a necessary party to the suit; (3) that the claim to redemption was barred by res judicata; and (4) that the plaintiffs had lost their interests, if any, in the said properties by the adverse possession of the 1st defendant.

The 1st defendant has brought this appeal.

The decree was passed in the year 1875, long before the Transfer of Property Act was enacted. The Trial Judge rightly points out that before the year 1880 it was not the practice of this Court to require the mortgagee, upon non-payment of the money due at the time prescribed, to obtain an order for foreclosure absolute as against the person or persons in default; the mortgagee was permitted to foreclose by proceedings in execution of the decree instead of obtaining an order absolute.

In this case, on July 12, 1877, Sadanand took out a summons that the decree made in Suit No. 259 of 1875 be executed against

Atmaram by ordering the delivery of the Mahim property to Sadanand, and an order to that effect was passed on July 23, (Ex. 1). The Chamber Judge, however, refused to sign a warrant for possession, apparently on the ground that the decree contained no order for possession. Sadanand then brought Suit No. 699 of 1877 against Atmaram claiming that he had become absolutely entitled to the properties, and asking for possession of the same (Ex. E.) In his written statement, Atmaram contended that he had given possession of the Girgaon property to Sadanand in pursuance of certain arrangements between the parties, and as regards the Mahim property he stated as follows:—

"8. The defendant continued in possession of the said Mahim property and no steps were taken and no notice given by the plaintiff to the defendant of his intention to get possession thereof until July 12, 1877, when a rule or order signed by a Judge of this Hon'ble Court was served by the plaintiff on the defendant calling upon the defendant to show cause on or before July 23, then instant, why the decree in Suit No. 259 of 1875 aforesaid should not be executed against him by ordering the delivery to the plaintiff or his agent of the said Mahim property...The defendant did not appear to show cause against the said rule or order but thereupon gave up possession to the plaintiff of the Mahim property, who thereupon took possession thereof and has been and still is in possession thereof and of the rents and profits accruing thereat."

It is clear, then, that as regards the Mahim property, the decree passed in 1875 was executed by the mortgagee applying for possession in accordance with the practice then obtaining in this Court. On August 6, 1882, Sadanand conveyed that property to Purshottam Shrikrishnaji (Ex. 4). And it is now in the possession of Purshottam's grandson Dattaram who was examined as a witness in the case but is not joined as a party to these proceedings.

As regards the Girgaon property, Sadanand obtained possession of it by a private arrangement with Atmaram. It is difficult to ascertain the true nature of that arrangement. The rival contentions are set out, respectively, in para. 9 of the plaint and para. 5 of the 1st defendant's written statement. The evidence bearing on the question is meagre and inconclusive. But on such evidence as there is in the case, it would seem that Sadanand entered into possession for the purpose of re-building and repairing some of the chawls; probably also, the time for payment prescribed in the decree was extended by six months. But it is clear that thereafter Atmaram took no steps to ask for further accounts neither he nor those claiming under or through him ever applied to the Court for enlargement of the time; and as the evidence of Nanabhai Sadanand shows, Sadanand held the property as his own and erected costly buildings on it to the knowledge of Atmaram. In the year 1884 Crustnarao Sacaram and another, who were the grandsons of Madhoba Harichandraji, brought Suit No. 428 against Atmaram Madhoba in the High Court for administration of the estate of the said Madhoba: the properties specified in their plaint included the Girgaon property (Ex. 2). In his written statement, Atmaram stated, inter alia, as follows:—

"This defendant says that the debts due by the testator [i. e. Madhoba Harischandra] were considerably in excess of the property left by the testator and that almost all the immoveable properties were encumbered by the testator and could not be and were not redeemed but on the contrary they were sold or taken possession of by the mortgagees in liquidation of their respective claims under decrees of this Hon'ble Court excepting only two lands at Worlee and Batty Fields and garden at Salsette" (Ex. 2).

On the 5th of March 1885, Atmaram made an affidavit in which he stated as follows:—

"In the month of June 1869 the testator mortgaged the oart with ranges or chawls in Girgaum for Rs. 82,000...with Shrikrishna Narayanjee and the said Shrikrishna Narayanjee took possession of the said oart with ranges or chawls in or about the month of December 1875, under a decree of this Hon'ble Court in Suit No. 259 of 1875 for foreclosure" (Ex. 9).

The effect of the evidence adduced in this case is this: the decree of 1875 was capable of enforcement in accordance with the practice then obtaining in this Court; it was enforced as regards possession of the Mahim property; as regards the Girgaon property, Atmaram acquiesced in the position that Sadanand was entitled to hold the property as his own and it was no longer necessary for him to execute the decree. In my opinion, the mortgagee has been holding both the properties as absolute owner for the last 45 years, and this suit must, therefore, fail.

Even if the decree passed in Suit No. 259 of 1875 were regarded as a decree nisi, still the result would be the same. The general rule, no doubt, is that after an order for foreclosure nisi, the mortgagor can apply for, and in suitable circumstances and on certain conditions obtain an order enlarging the time for redemption; but enlargement of the time is not a matter of course (Halsbury, Vol. XXI, s. 528). The power to extend the time is in the discretion of the Court, and in order to entitle himself to such indulgence the mortgagor must apply to the Court with reasonable promptitude. Assuming that it is permissible to treat the plaint in this suit as an application made in the foreclosure suit of 1875, the delay of 45 years on the part of the mortgagor is fatal to his case.

The decree dismissing this suit is, in my opinion, correct, and I agree to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Letter posted under registered cover—Note of refusal by postman—Presumption.

Where a letter under a registered cover is proved to have been posted and bears a note by the postman that the addressee refused to take it, the presumption is that he did refuse to take it.

Jogendro Chunder Ghose v. Dwarka Nath Karmokar, 15 C. 681; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1038, Durga Nath Pramanik v. Rajendra Nath Saha, 20 Ind. Cas. 363; 17 C. W. N. 1073 and Girish Chandra Ghose v. Kishore Mohan Das, 54 Ind. Cas. 5; 23 C. W. N. 319, followed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 25th May 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 23rd February 1925.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit by a landlord against his tenant for ejectment and to recover rent was dismissed by the Trial Court but has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

The only question on which this second appeal by the defendant was admitted was whether he was liable to pay rent for ten months at the enhanced rate charged by the plaintiff. His plea was that he was not, because no previous notice for enhancement of rent had been given to him as required by the terms of the lease under which he had rented the house. The plaintiff produced a notice sent by him to the defendent by post in a registered cover, but returned by the postman with the note that the addressee refused to receive it. The posting of the notice having been proved by the evidence of the plaintiff, the presumption under s. 114 of the Evidence Act, as held in Jogendro Chunder Ghose v. Dwarka Nath Karmokar (1), Durga Nath Pramanik v. Rajendra Nath Saha (2) and Girish Chandra Ghose v. Kishore Mohan Das (3) was that the defendant did refuse to receive it. The plaintiff, therefore, did send notice to the defendant and the appeal must fail. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Valuation of injunction accepted by District Judge—Interference in revision.

The High Court will not interfere in revision with a valuation given by the plaintiff to a suit for injunction which the District Judge found to be a reasonable one.

Application for revision of an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 6th June

Messrs. L. N. Singh and Sarjoo Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. Dayal and Adit Narain Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that partition proceedings between the parties were taken before a Revenue Court, and, on the 5th December 1923, the Revenue Officer determined the share of the parties and directed the Batwara to proceed. The value of the entire property, it seems, is about Rs. 12,000.

The opposite party was dissatisfied with the decision of the Revenue Court as to the shares to which he was entitled in the shamilat lands in the various tauzis, and he instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Aurangabad, praying for a declaration that the shares in the shamilat in the various tauzis were equal between the various parties, and that the order of the Partition Deputy Collector was erroneous. He prayed that an injunction might issue restraining the defendants to that suit from proceeding with the partition. He valued the suit for purposes of Court-fee at Rs. 150. Before the Munsif exception was taken by the present petitioners to the valuation stated in the plaint. The learned Munsif, after looking into the value of the tauzis involved in the suit, came to the conclusion that their value was more than Rs. 3,000 and, therefore, he held that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit and returned the plaint to be presented to the Subordinate Judge. The opposite party then appealed to the District Judge who held that under s. 7, sub-s. (iv), cl. (c) of the Court Fees Act, the suit was within the jurisdiction of the Munsif, for it was open to the plaintiff to value the injunction at such value as he pleased. He held that the valuation of Rs. 150 was a reasonable valuation.

Before me it is contended that, considering the value of the properties, the valuation of Rs. 150 was too small and was an altogether arbitrary valuation, and that on this ground it is open to this Court to interfere.

The question that arises is whether this Court can interfere in the present case. The District Judge had jurisdiction to decide the matter and he has found that the valuation placed on the suit by the plaintiff was a reasonable valuation. If I found that the valuation was altogether arbitrary and unreasonable, I might interfere, but on the finding of the learned District Judge that the valuation was not unreasonable, he having considered the matter, I cannot see that I can interfere in the case at all.

The application must be rejected. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Compromise of suit on behalf of minor—Benefit of minor—Matters to be considered by Court in sanctioning compromise.

How far a Judge should go into the facts and the law of each case before he makes up his mind to sanction a compromise on behalf of minors must depend on the circumstances of each case and where the Judge exercises his discretion in a judicial manner it is not one which can be afterwards called in question in subsequent proceedings. [p. 107, col. 2.]

It is not practicable to lay down a definite or hard and fast rule as to what particular materials a Judge may call for before he is satisfied that the compromise is one for the benefit of the minors. It must be left to his discretion and that discretion may vary in different cases. [p. 109, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Judge is entitled to rely upon the opinion of the Counsel at least in part, that the compromise is for the benefit of minors. [p. 107, col. 2; p. 108, col. 1.]

There is no authority for the proposition that a Judge is bound to gauge the chances of success of the minors and weigh against them the chances of the opposite party and sanction only if the chances of the minors appear to him slender. [p. 112, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Shah.

Mr. Engineer, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Shah dismissing the suit of the minor plaintiffs, who sought to set aside a compromise decree passed in four suits by Mr. Justice Fawcett on December 13, 1922. The plaintiffs are the minor sons of Gordhandas, defendant No. 2, and were concerned in disputes between Gordhandas and his sons on the one hand and his brother Kissondas on the other hand as to various assets in which his father Tribhovandas and his grandfather Sir Mangaldas had been interested. One main point of controversy was whether these assets were ancestral or self-acquired. Sir Mangaldas died on March 9, 1890, and Tribhovandas on April 5, 1920. It is material to observe that Kissondas was born in Sir Managaldas's lifetime, but that Gordhandas was not born until after the death of Sir Mangaldas, and further that the eldest son of Gordhandas was born in 1914. Kissondas has no son.

Sir Mangaldas had two other sons, Purshottamdas and Jagmohandas, but for the purposes of the present case it is sufficient to say that their interests have been otherwise provided for, and that we are solely concerned with Tribhovandas and his branch. Similarly two deceased sons of Tribhovandas, namely, Jamnadas, who died in 1907, and Amindas, who died in infancy, may be mentioned and passed by.

The parties are all Hindus, and the papers before us show a melancholy record of family disputes and litigation extending over some 40 years, namely, from the agreement of June 2.), 1881, Ex A, which Sir Mangaldas entered into with his sons Tribhovandas and Purshottamdas down to December 13, 1922, when the above compromise was approved by Mr. Justice Fawcett, on behalf of the infant sons of Gordhandas in the four suits to which I have alluded.

In the earlier part of Tribhovandas's lifetime the parties had been at least four times up to the Court of Appeal, and the various decisions of that Court will be found in Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Sir Mangaldas Nathuboy (1), Yorke Smith v. Tribhovandas Mangaldas (2) and Tribhovandas Mangaldas v. Yorke Smith (3) and Ex. L. In the latter part of Tribhovandas's lifetime there appears to have been a comparative lull, but on his death in 1920 disputes broke out again, and by 1922 four suits were filed, namely, two by Gordhandas and two by Kissondas: Those four suits are (1) Suit No. 3386 of 1920 relating to what is known as the Charni Road Property, (2) Suit No. 663 of 1921 relating to what is known as the Worli Property, (3) Suit No. 2017 of 1921 for the administration of the estate of Tribhovandas, and (4) Suit No. 1354 of 1922 relating to the Girgaum Property Nos. 1 and 2 were brought by Gordhandas and Nos. 3 and 4 by Kissondas.

On December 12, 1922, the first three of these suits were on the Board for hearing. The first of them, viz.; Suit No. 3389 of 1920 relating to the Charni Road property was opened by Mr. Coltman, Counsel for the plaintiff Gordhandas and was continued the next day, December 13. The parties then proceeded to negotiate, and the Judge was asked to retire. The negotiations resulted in provisional terms being arrived at, and accordingly the Judge returned to Court. These terms related not only to the three suits then on Board, but also to the fourth Suit No. 1354 of 1922 relating to the Girgaum property. It was accordingly arranged that the fourth suit should be forthwith placed on Board, and also that the three infant sons of Gordhandas should be added as parties and should appear by their father Gordhandas as their guardian ad litem.

That was done, and thereupon Sir Thomas Strangman, who led Mr. Coltman and Mr. Setalved of Gordhandas and his sons, explained the proposed compromise to the Court. I may mention here that Kissondas was represented by the Advocate-General (Mr. Kanga), who led Mr. B. J. Desai and Mr. Taraporewala. Mr. Kanga has acted and Mr. Taraporewala is acting as a Judge of this High Court. Sir Thomas Strangman had been Advocate-General for over 12 years and while he was in Bombay had been practically in every case of importance on the Original Side of this High Court for many years past. Accordingly, in my opinion, Mr. Justice Fawcett had every right to depend on the ability, fairness, and experience of, the Counsel before him.

The terms of the compromise will be found in Ex. 9, and the Judge's notes of what took place are Ex. 11. It is common ground that the Girgaum property was the most valuable of the properties, and with reference to that the Judge's notes of what

(2) 19 B. 401; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 270.
(3) 21 B. 349; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 236.

Sir Thomas Strangman stated are in part as follows:—

"Question is whether it is joint property or not. Point also of limitation arises. Girgaum property is the most valuble... Gordhandas is satisfied with consent terms and I as Counsel am also. Litigation would probably last 10 years, and Gordhandas runs risk of getting nothing out of Girgaum property, if limitation point good, and would at most get one-third of Worli property which I think is exceedingly small as against one-fourth he gets of Girgaum property. So I have no hesitation in saying the terms are for benefit of the minors."

Then, after the Judge had questioned Gordhandas and Kissondas, the former of whom stated that he considered the terms beneficial to the minors, the Judge's note concludes as follows:—

"In view of the above I think it is for the benefit of the minor sons that the litigation, which is bound to be very costly should be settled, and the terms seem to me to be reasonable and good for the interests of Gordhandas and his sons. Any affidavit as to decree being for their benefit is dispensed with."

"I, therefore, sanction the compromise. Consent decree in terms signed by Counsel and handed in."

"By consent the four suits are consolidated and one decree to issne accordingly."

Now before us Mr. Coltman, the Counsel for the infants, does not contend that this compromise was not for their benefit. He told us he did not propose to argue that point. The real question was whether the essential conditions for obtaining the Court's sanction to a compromise were in fact satisfied. or as he put it to us in reply, " Was the settled law on this point given effect to? That is the whole point in the case. Must you put before the Court all material facts? Does O. XXXII, r. 7, mean that the Court is to apply its own mind or may it delegate its authority to Counsel?" It was accordingly argued that material documents were not before Mr. Justice Fawcett: that he was not in a position to exercise his own discretion: and that apart from that the compromise was left vague and unenforceable by reason of the appointment of an arbitrator without a time limit for making his award, and also in the non-joinder of the mortgagees of Kissondas.

Counsel concentrated his attack on the fourth suit, which dealt with the valuable Girgaum property. So far as the other three suits were concerned he advanced no special arguments to us against the validity of the compromise apart, of course, from his general arguments affecting all four suits. But in his reply he did refer to a difficulty about a right of passage in connection with the Charni Road Property, which appears to have arisen when proceedings were taken before the arbitrator in pursuance of the terms of the consent decree. I can understand Counsel taking this course, because it is clear that as regards the first three suits, they were all before the Court. Counsel had got their briefs, and as far as the Charni Road Property was concerned, the case had been opened and a witness examined and many details placed before the Court as appears from Judge's notes. It could not, therefore, be contended that Counsel, at any rate, was not in full possession of the material facts of the case. And as regards the Charni Road Property the Judge had by the second day of the trial obtained sufficient acquaintance with the case to have, at any rate, a clear idea as to what the important points in the controversy were. I accordingly do not propose to go into any detail as regards those particular properties. It is sufficient to say that as regards the Charni Road Property Gordhandas had advanced certain moneys to his father Tribhovandas under an alleged agreement, but had not obtained the particular lease, which he claimed to be entitled to under the arrangement with his father, and that in particular a proposed document had not in fact been executed before Tribhovandas's death.

As regards the Worli Properties Kissondas claimed those as survivor under an agreement that had been entered into between him and Tribhovandas, On the other hand Gordhandas claimed to be entitled to one-half of the two-thirds share, which passed under that agreement to Tribhovandas.

The third suit was for the administration of the estate of Tribhovandas. A compromise would only tend to prevent the necessity of costly enquiries extending probably over many years.

I may here mention a most importan clause in the consent terms Ex. 9, viz., cl. 9, which runs 'Any property coming to Gordhandas under this decree of whatever nature shall as between himself and his sons be joint property.' So there was no question of there being any contest between Gordhandas and his sons with reference to any property he was acquiring under the compromise. The general effect of the terms was that as regards the first three suits Gordhandas and his sons took the Charni Road Property and Kissondas took the Worli Property subject to an arrangement about certain mortgages, and the Receiver in the third suit was discharged.

Returning to the Girgaum property, the subject of the fourth suit, the compromise provided that it was to be divided between Kissondas and Gordhandas in the proportion of 3 to 1. It was argued that before the Judge could properly sanction the compromise as being for the benefit of the infants, it was his duty to go into the whole history of the family dispute for the past 40 years including all the documents in the case, and that in particular he was not entitled to rely on the statement of Counsel for Gordhandas and the infants that there was a point of limitation in their way of which the Counsel took a serious view.

In the first place I entirely decline to hold that Mr. Justice Fawcett's note of what was said represents everything that Sir Thomas Strangman said to him on the point of limitation. To my mind that would be making a most unfair use of the learned Judge's notes, and nonetheless so because the evidence shows that Counsel took about three-fourths of an hour to explain the matter to the Judge and to obtain his sanction. Indeed I do not think it is seriously contended that that is all Sir Thomas Strangman said on the point, but if it is, then I reject the contention. Next as to the point that it was obligatory on the Judge to investigate the past history and all the documents, I may observe that the appeal paper book before us runs to 419 printed pages. In my judgment that argument is equally unfounded. I think the true rule is that how far the Judge should go into the facts and the law of each case before he makes up his mind to sanction a compromise on behalf of minors must depend on the circumstances each case, and that provided he exercises his discretion in a judicial manner, it is not one which can be afterwards called in question in subsequent proceedings. I again repeat that there the learned Judge had several of the leading Counsel in Bombay before him. Further, Sir Thomas Strangman had had all the details of this case before him for many months. It is shown in the evidence that Gordhandas proposed to bring a suit in respect of this very Girgaum property, but that he had been anticipated in this respect by Kissondas's suit. But if Gordhandas had eventually brought his suit, or had made a counter-claim in Kissondas's suit, then the infant children of Gordhandas would necessarily have been parties, as indeed is pleaded in Gordhandas' written statement in Kissondas' suit.

Certain authorities were cited to us by Counsel for the minors to support the proposition which he asked us to adopt, but to my mind they fall far short of the length to which he asks us to go. In Sakinabai v. Shirinibai (4) which was a case before the Privy Council, I agree that the following portion of the head-note is entirely wrong and misleading, viz., "the Courts in India should ordinarily accept as sufficient the assurance of the minor's Counsel that the compromise which is proposed is for his benefit." Their Lordships of the Privy Council never decided anything of the sort. But it is noteworthy that in that case there was a compromise of an appeal to their Lordships, and the Board relied not only on the oral statement of Mr. Kenworthy Brown, the Counsel for the minor in the Privy Council, but they also relied on the certificate of Mr. Kanga and Mr. Taraporewala, who were the Counsel for the minor in the Court below that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor. I may mention that the two latter Counsel were the same as those who appeared for Kissondas in the present proceedings. Their Lordships in that particular case sanctioned the compromise. There is nothing there, so far as I can see, to support the case for the present plaintiffs. On the contrary it shows that the Court is entitled to rely on the opinion of Counsel. I do not mean exclusively rely, but to base their opinion in part at any rate on the opinion of Counsel that the compromise is for the benefit of the infants.

Then in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (5) Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Chandavarkar held that the lower Court had not before it the materials necessary to enable it to arrive at a judicial conclusion with respect to the compromise. If that was the case here I quite follow that the case would be an authority in point. But in the case cited, no sanction at all had been given to the compromise, nor did the Court have before it the materials on which it could give its sanction. I fail to see, therefore, that that case is of any assistance to us in the present case.

Bibi Solomon v. Abdool Azeez (6), a decision of Sir Richard Garth and Mr. Justice Pontifex, was also cited. The clue to that decision will be found at page 696*, where the Court pointed out that after the compromise had been sanctioned by the Court, the executors who had obtained this sanction suddenly discovered that property of at least the value of three lacs, and possibly of nine lacs, belonging to the estate in question had not been mentioned in the application for Probate or in the petition for the Court's approval. The Court, therefore, held that the compromise was entered into by the parties and sanctioned by the Court under a serious misapprehension of material facts; and that this misapprehension was caused either by the actual fraud of, or at any rate by a culpable neglect of duty, of the executors, sufficient, as the Court thought, to amount to fraud in the view of a Court of Equity (see page 705*). There is, however, nothing of that sort in the present case.

If one turns to Brooke v. Lord Mostyn (7) it will be found that Lord Justice Turner states the English Law as follows (page 416†):—

"It is to be considered, then, what are the circumstances which will furnish sufficient ground for impeaching a compromise made under the order of the Court, and I think they must be such as to amount to fraud in the party claiming the benefit of the compromise, meaning by fraud not moral fraud, but what in the eye of this Court is considered as amounting to fraud. A compromise of doubtful rights between adult parties cannot, as I conceive, be set aside on any other ground. If there be no fraud, and equal knowledge on both sides, the compromise cannot be disturbed, but if there is knowledge on one side which is withheld, the compromise cannot stand, because the withholding of the knowledge amounts in the view of a Court of Equity to fraud. The rule which applies between adults seems to me to be not less applicable to compromises by the Court on behalf of infants. The orders of the Court cannot be set aside on grounds less strong than those which would be required to set aside the transaction between competent parties. Whether the grounds which would be sufficient to set aside a compromise between competent parties would in all cases be sufficient to set it aside when sanctioned by this Court, I do not think it necessary for us in this case to determine."

In that particular case the Lords Justices set aside the particular compromise, which had been sanctioned on behalf of an infant, on the ground that material facts as to the value of the property were not laid before the Master in Chancery. On the facts that decision was reversed in the House of Lords [Mostyn v. Brooke (8),] where the report expressly states that the reversal did not affect the law as laid down by the Lords Justices.

I do not think it necessary for us to say that what Lord Justice Turner's judgment states is also the law of this Court. It may be that he has stated the law rather too widely against those who are interested in setting aside a compromise. It is accordingly unnecessary for the respondents in the present case to rely on that judgment of Lord Justice Turner as being entirely correct in the broad principles which it lays down.

Then there is another case of Rameswar Pershad Singh v. Ram Bahadur Singh (9), in the Privy Council, the head note of which begins as follows:—

"In this case the appellant sued to set aside a compromise and decree in accordance therewith in a former suit, which had been made on his behalf by the adult members of a joint family, of which he was an infant member, and for other reliefs. The High Court held that under the circumstances the compromise was valid and binding, and on appeal the Judicial Committee were of opinion that he could not obtain the other relief prayed for without first setting aside the compromise, and held that there were no grounds for setting it aside."

In delivering their Lordships' judgment Lord Macnaghten said (page 71*):—

"The suit in which it (the compromise) was made had progressed up to a certain stage; it had been opened on behalf of the plaintiff; witnesses had been examined, and the Court knew very much more about the question in dispute than the Court generally does know when it is asked to confirm a compromise of pending litigation. The infant had no separate interest; the adult members of the family, who were presumably competent to judge of their own interests, had taken part in this compromise and assented to it, and the Court pronounced that it was for the benefit of the infant, who was made a party for the purpose of binding his interest, such as it was. It seems to their Lordships hopeless now to attempt to set it aside."

There are, of course, distinctions of fact between that case and this, but it is important to note that an Equity Judge of such great experience and eminence as Lord Macnaghten was aware that in many cases where the Court sanctions a compromise, it necessarily does not know as much about the questions in dispute as if they had been argued in whole or in part before it. This to my mind exposes one of the fallacies of the appellant's arguments, for what he really asks us to do is to lay down a rule of practice, which is nowhere to be found in any Statute or decided authority, but which if carried out would inflict hardships on many litigants in this Court and would cause serious difficulties in the way of compromising suits.

We have on the Original Side a large number of suits in which minors are engaged. There are, for instance, a large number of suits in which Marwadi Hindu trading firms are engaged, and in which it frequently happens that minors are technically parties to what is a mere commercial transaction, e. g., for the sale of cotton or piecegoods. Supposing then there is a dispute between two trading firms with minors on either side and after prolonged negotiations between the adult parties these hard headed business-men arrive at a certain figure by way of compromise of their respective claims is it seriously to be supposed that the Court is bound to refuse to sanction the compromise unless it is taken through all the books and documents and hears the rival arguments based on all the material facts. I unhesitatingly say that this is a proposition which is wholly untenable. Nor again is it practicable to lay down a definite or hard and fast rule as to what particular materials a Judge may call for before he is satisfied that the compromise is one for the benefit of the minors. It must be left to his discretion, and that discretion may vary in different cases and it may even vary as regards the practice of different Judges.

Without going further into the case, the result, in my opinion, is that there is nothing wrong in law in the course which Mr. Justice Fawcett took. There is no such rule as Counsel for the appellants has contended, and under all the circumstances of the case the learned Judge was entitled to rely on the statement of Counsel as to this point of limitation and that in Counsel's opinion it was in the interests of the father and his infant sons that the compromise should be sanctioned.

* * * *

I also wish to mention one other matter. To those familiar with Chancery practice it may seem strange that the Judge did not require the infants to obtain the consent of the Judge in Chambers to the compromise. In England I do not recollect any express clause in the Annual Practice corresponding to O. XXXII, r. 7, here. But in, say, a contested witness action which is provisionally settled it is not unusual for a Chancery Judge to give an adjournment in order to enable the terms to be approved in Chambers on behalf of the infants. In normal cases that application would go not before that particular Judge, but before the Judge who was taking Chamber business. And there is this good reason for that course, namely, that a Judge who is trying a suit between A and B may be prejudiced in the eventual determination of that suit, if half way through he is asked to approve a compromise on behalf of the minors and is told quite frankly what the difficulties of their own particular legal situation are. Moreover, Counsel for the infant may at times be embarrassed in telling the Court frankly in the presence of his opponents exactly what his weak points are. It follows that if the compromise is not approved by the Judge on behalf of the minors, their position may conceivably be prejudiced in the subsequent proceedings in the case.

But I also wish to say that it is not the general practice in this High Court to send a case to Chambers so far as the infants are concerned. One reason may be, as I have already mentioned, that the suits in which infants are involved are numerous and that litigation is as expensive or more expensive, particularly as regards Counsel fees now-a-days, than is the case in England. Accordingly, to send perhaps two or three sets of minors to the Chamber Judge to obtain his consent would in many cases be a hardship to the parties. Moreover, we have the express provisions of the Code in O. XXXII, r. 7, which at any rate contemplate that the Judge hearing the case shall have jurisdiction to sanction a compromise on behalf of the infants. Further, in Mofussil Courts there might be no other Judge for the infant to go to obtain sanction. I may even go further as illustrating a different opinion at to the practice on this point. In a case, which was before me as Trial Judge, I was asked informally by a Registrar of this Court, who had been appointed guardian ad litem and who proposed to compromise the suit, whether he should make his application to myself as Trial Judge or whether he should take it to the Chamber Judge. As the amount involved was substantial, and I felt I might be embarrassed in the subsequent hearing of the trial if I refused to sanction the compromise, I advised him to go to the Chamber Judge, and he did so. But the Chamber Judge of the day, who, I think, was the Chief Justice, took a different view of the matter and I think it was only because the guardian ad litem had gone on my advice that he escaped paying the costs of the application in Chambers.

I also wish to say that in a large number of cases I have sanctioned compromises on behalf of infants where practically the same course has been adopted as was taken by Mr. Justice Fawcett in the present case. It is a common occurrence for litigants to compromise not only the one or more suits before a Judge, but also pending suits as well. In that event it is common practice to have all the suits placed on Board. Moreover, I consider myself entitled to rely on the assurance of Counsel for the minors not exclusively, but sufficiently, at any rate to enable me to rest assured that the proposed compromise is in the best interests of the infants. What particular explanations I require, and what details I go into depends very largely on the particular case.

I only refer to all this not because we are not familar with the practice in this particular Court, but because it is conceivable that to those who are not familar with our practice, some of the matters that have taken place may require explanation. As far as I can see, what happened here was really normal every day practice, and there was nothing really exceptional except the value of the property and the complexity of the disputes and the fondness for litigation shown by the family.

If, however, it is material to go into the past history of the case I agree with the conclusion which Mr. Justice Shah arrived at page 124, namely :—

"I have examined the materials with a view to see whether there is anything therein which would clearly show that if they had been placed before the learned Judge he could not have come to the conclusion that the compromise was for the benefit of the minors. On the materials, which have been placed before me, there is nothing so far as I can see to show that the learned Judge could not have come to the conclusion at which he arrived."

My opinion is that Mr. Justice Fawcett rightly satisfied himself that the compromise was for the benefit of the minors. And as regards the suggestion that before the compromise was sanctioned there should have been a formal valuation of the property, it may be pointed out that these properties had been in the family for years and that as regards the Girgaum property it was to be divided by fractions and not by value. It seems to me, therefore, there is nothing in that point either.

In the result I would dismiss the appeal and dismiss it with costs.

Madgavkar, J.—This an appeal by the minor plaintiffs, represented in this suit by their mother, against the dismissal of their claim to avoid a compromise decree against them and their father, defendant-respondent No. 2 Gordhandas, appointed guardian ad litem by the Court in Suit No. 1354 of 1922 and sanctioned under O. XXXII, r. 7 of the C. P. C. The compromise had been effected by Gordhandas and his brother Kissondas the contesting defendant in respect of this suit and three other pending suits between them.

The salient facts regarding the family disputes to the estates of their ancestor Sir Mangaldas during his lifetime and afterwards as to whether the properties particularly the Girgaum property, were ancestral or self-acquired, the subject-matter of the suit in which the minors were added as parties, are detailed in the judgment appealed against. The appellants rely on six grounds to avoid the compromise.

Firstly, the interests of the minors were not identical with the interest of Gordhandas, their father. And there was even a conflict particularly as regards the question of limitation, and Gordhandas was guilty of gross negligence in not putting this distinction forward expressly before the Judge who santioned the compromise and in not placing before him the essential materials recited in para. 62 of the plaint, particularly the Will of Sir Mangaldas, the agreement of 1881, and other documents bearing on the question of the nature of the property and on limitation.

Secondly in consequence of the absence of these materials, the learned Judge was not in a position to bring his mind to bear on the essential questions, before he could sanction the compromise. Reliance is placed on certain observations in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (5).

Thirdly, the reference to arbitration being a part of the compromise decree, the compromise is void because the Court did not fix the time for the making of the award under Sch. II para. 3 of the C. P. C.

Fourthly, the mortgagees, defendants-respondents Nos. 4, 5 and 6 were not parties to the compromise and only ratified it two years afterwards before Shah, J., in the present suit.

Fifthly, Gordhandas's Solicitor, Mr. Captain, who was conversant with the matter and the interests of Gordhandas, was away and the interests of the minors were not placed before the Court.

And, lastly, the compromise was hastily effected and hastily sanctioned.

The third ground is new. On the other grounds the Trial Court upheld the contentions of the defendant-respondent No. 1 Kissondas, that the interests of Gordhandas and the minors were identical and that all necessary and sufficient materials were placed before the Court when Fawcett, J., considered and sanctioned the compromise, and no gross negligence was proved on the part of Gordhandas or his legal advisers. It was argued further for the respondents in this Court that the question of the validity of the reference was never raised in the lower Court and has not even found a place in the grounds of appeal and is merely due to Counsel's ingenuity in argument.

Order XXXII, r. 7, nowhere prescribes the materials necessary for the Court before it can sanction a compromise. And it is even doubtful if an appeal exists against such a sanction: Rakhal Moni Dassi v. Adwyta Prosad Roy (10). No decided case has been brought to our notice laying down such rules in respect of the necessary materials. All that the law requires is, firstly, that there should be a compromise, secondly, that the Court should be in possession of its terms, thirdly, that the Court should bring its mind to bear on the terms from the point of view of the minors and judge if it is for their benefit, and, lastly, that it should grant or withhold its sanction. Clearly if the terms of the compromise are not before the Court, it is impossible for the Court to apply its mind to grant or withhold the sanction the law requires. This, and no further is, I think, the extent of the decision in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (5).

In that case the compromise itself and its terms were not at all before the Court, as they were in the present case. That case is, therefore, of no avail to the appellants.

In the present case the compromise in terms was before the Court. Counsel on both sides laid before it the facts they thought necessary. The Court applied its mind and sanctioned it. It is conceded by both sides in this appeal that it is not for this Court now to consider for itself whether the compromise was or was not for the benefit of the minors. But for the appellants it is argued that it was impossible for the Court to decide whether it was or was not for the benefit of the minors without the materials in para. 62 of their plaint.

This impossibility, is not a psychological impossibility since Fawcett, J., was able to arrive at the conclusion he did. And, therefore, it appears to me that the contention of the appellants amounts, in fact to this, that, if these materials had been placed before Fawcett, J., then he would or might have arrived at a different conclusion.

(10) 30 C. 613; 7 C. W. N. 419.

The considerations, however, in deciding the question of sanction are entirely different from the considerations in deciding the issues and the reliefs in a contested suit. It is of the essence of a compromise that each party gives up some portion of his claim. How much or how little of the claim is right is a matter which the Court is usually not in a position to judge, least of all at an early stage of the case. No authority is shown for the proposition, and, speaking for myself, I cannot agree that before sanction the Judge is in law bound to guage the chances of success of the minors, and—a necessary corrollary—weigh against them the chances of the opposite party and sanction only if the chances of the minors appear to him slender.

I say so not only because such a process, whether one calls it guess-work or speculation or nice calculation of probabilities, appears to me foreign, almost repellent, to the judicial mind, but also because it is in fact impossible, unless the Judge calls upon the parties not only for some, but for all, the main data on both sides such as the evidence not only documentary but also oral, and then finally tries to arrive without argument at a rough and hasty, conjectural quasi-judgment on the merits of the case. From the arguments here, the course suggested by the appellants in the present case could hardly have occupied less than two days. And if I may judge by the result on my own mind, speaking with all humility and without disrespect to Counsel on either side, it would not, I think, have advanced further the issue as to sanction or benefit of the minors, much less the question whether the Girgaum property was ancestral or joint or the question of limitation.

If among the materials in para. 62 of the plaint there had been one or two documents or facts, so decisive in favour of the present ancestral character of the Girgaum property, and Gordhandas had deliberately omitted or even perhaps failed to bring them to the notice of the Court, when it considered the question of sanction, then possibly it might have been a plausible contention for the appellants that Gordhandas' action fell within the rule of culpable or wilful negligence tantamount to fraud or misrepresentation on material facts, which alone in law would enable the minors to avoid the compromise sanctioned.

For these, I think, are the only grounds laid down by the Courts in England and in India. It was expressly laid down in Brooke v. Lord Mostyn (7) that a compromise can be set aside only if there has been conduct amounting to fraud. This case was followed in India in Bibee Solomon v. Abdool Azeez (6) where gross and deliberate omission with regard to the value of the property materially affected the sanction. But it has been held that a compromise of a doubtful right is a sufficient foundation for an agreement amongst the members of a family and is binding on them: Rameshwar Pershad Singh v. Lachmi Prosad Singh (11) distinguishing the case above, and confirmed in appeal by the Privy Council: Rameswar Pershad Singh v. Ram Bahadur Singh (9).

Into the general powers of a joint Hindu father acting for his minor sons, it is not necessary to enter in detail. But ordinarily, a bona fide compromise or reference by him in regard to joint family property is binding on the minors: Ujagar Singh v. Pitam Singh (12) confirming the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Pitam Singh v. Ujagar Singh (13). A Hindu father and the joint family Manager can refer to arbitration on a question of joint property partition: Jagan Nath v. Mannu Lal (14); and the minors are bound: Balaji v. Nana (15) and Dwarka Das v. Krishan Kishore (16).

At the same time it must be conceded in favour of the appellants that when a joint father is appointed guardian ad litem his powers as the managing member relating to the minor's interest are controlled by O. XXXII, r. 7, and that agreement by compromise on behalf of the minors infants must be sanctioned: Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (17). As regards the consent of Counsel, the case referred to for the appellants, Sakinabai v. Shirinbai (4) was subsequently considered by the Privy Council in Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Kailash Chandra Pal (18) which laid down that it was only in rare cases such as Sakinabai's case (4) that leave to withdraw for a minor would be given on Counsel's certificate; usually a certificate from the High Court will be required that the agreement is for the benefit of the minors.

In the present case I am quite unable to see any conflict of interest between the minors and their father. It appears to me that the minors were added as parties pro majore cautela to place the matter beyond doubt, and perhaps in view of Gordhandas' written statement that they were necessary parties.

With regard to the question of limitation, the position is far from clear. The difficulties appear to me to be the same as in the question of the ancestral or the self-acquired character of the property. When adverse possession in favour of Kissondas and as against Gordhandas arose and time began to run against him, and how far that possession was adverse to the minors also by reason of Gordhandas being the joint family father and the Manager, are questions on which I for one am not able to form an opinion one way or the other. Nor am I able to say that this outstanding fact was not mentioned before Fawcett, J., or that all necessary documents were not laid by Sir Thomas Strangman before him. The materials alleged to be not before the Court as mentioned in para. 62 of the plaint are detailed in the judgment of Shah, J., and have been referred to by my learned brother in his judgment just delivered, together with the history of the litigation between the parties and their ancestors. It is clear that the records and proceedings in all the three suits were before Fawcett, J., and he was equally well aware of the fact that in the fourth suit in regard to the Girgaum property Gordhandas and his sons claimed a half share, on the ground that it was ancestral property. It is clear to me that unless he was prepared to go into the merits, if not in all four suits, at least in the fourth suit, the materials mentioned in para. 62 of the plaint had small bearing on the question of sanction. The terms of the compromise were before him. He knew that apart from the admitted half share of Kissondas, each party in fact gave up half his claim by virtue of the compromise. He knew how old, complex and bitter the dispute was. He knew the delay, expense and uncertainty of the final result and he knew that the Girgaum property was of far greater value than the other properties. He knew the identity of interests of Gordhandas and the minor. He knew that this deplorable litigation was wasting the substance of Sir Mangaldas, lowering the reputation of his family, keeping alive the most bitter feelings among the brothers, and that negotiations had been going on for years. And he had the assurance from the eminent Counsel that the compromise was in the interests of Gordhandas and his sons. Last, but not least, he had the fact before him of the consent of Gordhandas, a man of adult age, a graduate, perfectly conversant with his family affairs and perfectly able to judge how far, if at all, the compromise was beneficial to himself and his sons. It was not alleged then, and is not alleged now, that Gordhandas has been lacking as a father. In my opinion these materials were ample before Fawcett, J., to enable him to decide the question of sanction and to decline to prolong this litigation between the brothers. To say that these materials were not sufficient is, I repeat, in fact, to invite Fawcett, J., either to form a hasty and immature judgment on the merits on insufficient materials or to a decision after contest on the merits, which might have occupied not days but weeks, if the question of limitation or the nature of the joint family property was at all to be gone into. In my opinion on negligence—much less gross negligence—least of all misrepresentation or fraud, on the part of Gordhandas, is proved in the materials or the sanction obtained.

As regards the Solicitor, it is clear that in the absence of Mr. Captain, his partners Mr. Merchant and Mr. Vaidya, who advised Gordhandas, were perfectly able to act in the matter. For all practical purposes I am unable, I confess, to distinguish the present suit from an ill-advised attempt by Gordhandas himself to resile from the compromise decree under colour of the name of his wife and children.

This disposes, I think, of the main contentions in the suit.

The next contention is as to the reference. In my opinion the reference is perfectly separable from the main part of the decree and would not affect the main question as to the portion of the Girgaum property awarded to Gordhandas and the minors, as is clear from the decree, which only refers 'any question arising as to the carrying out of the terms of this decree and any disputes not covered by this decree arising out of any of the above suits'. This reference to arbitration and the arbitrators' award necessitated no further appeal to the Court to embody in its judgment and decree under Sch. II, para 16; and if so, it does not follow on the ratio decidendi in Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudurani Bhagwant Kuar (19) that the reference was necessarily bad. It would rather fall under O. XXIII, r. 3, of the C. P. C., as an adjustment which the Court was competent to grant: Manilal Motilal v. Gokaldas Rowji (20). This contention of the appellants, therefore, fails.

The remaining contentions may briefly be disposed of. The mortgagees ratified the agreement later and the delay is not shown to have prejudiced the minors in any way and it is not, therefore, a ground which would enable the minors to avoid the decree.

With the question of the speed of the compromise, my learned brother with his large experience of the Chancery Division and of the Original Side of this Court has already dealt. Speaking for myself, the question of speed of the sanction in Court is not necessarily a test of the speed of the actual compromise. In this case, the record shows that negotiations had been going on or at least had been in the air, for years, and had been attempted by Sir Thomas Strangman since a long time before. Further, as far as the minors were concerned, they were only added to the fourth suit at the last stage, and there was no necessity whatever for Fawcett, J., further to deliberate under the circumstances.

In the result, therefore, without reiterating what had been said by Shah, J., and by my learned brother. I agree that the appeal has no merits and must be dismissed with costs.

Marten, J.—In the special circumstances of this case, we think that the trustees are entitled to a separate set of costs from those of the respondent Kissondas.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 648 OF 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway and Mr. Justice Fforde.

LACHI AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

SURJA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alienation—Necessity—Purchasing of house to live in.

Where the only house which a man possessed is sold in an execution sale and he is in imminent danger of being turned out and it is not easy to rent a house, the buying of a house to live in is a legal necessity.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th January 1922, confirming that of the First Class Sub-Judge, Karnal, dated the 8th November 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Balwant Rai and Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen in the following circumstances. On the 16th February 1921 one Chelu, a jat of Karnal, sold 39 bighas to 10 biswas of land to Lachhi Ram and Banu Mal, sons of Telu Mal, for Rs. 6,000. On the 26th April 1921, Surja, one of Chelu's reversioners instituted a suit for the usual declaration to the effect that the sale would not be binding on him on the ground that it had been effected without consideration and necessity. The vendees claimed that there had been necessity for the sale and that full consideration had passed. They also pleaded that the property was not ancestral.

The Courts below have held that the property was ancestral, by which conclusion we are bound, and further that the whole consideration passed and that out of it all but a sum of Rs. 2,115 was for necessity. Accordingly the sale was transformed into a mortgage charging a sum of Rs. 3,885 on the property, and Surja was granted a decree accordingly.

In this second appeal, before us, Mr. Shamair Chand has urged that the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below that the balance of the consideration which had been advanced to Chelu for the purpose of purchasing a house and with which a house had actually been purchased was not for necessity. No direct authority has been brought to our notice on this point. It appears that Telu Mal, the father of the vendees, had held the ancestral house belonging to Chelu on mortgage. He had obtained a decree on this mortgage and had brought the house to sale, the auction sale taking place in October 1919, and the sale had been confirmed. It is obvious that Chelu had done his level best for as long a period as he could. It is equally clear that he was being pressed to vacate for he actually did surrender possession of his house to the auction-purchaser on the 25th February 1921. In order to have a house to live in he entered into an arrangement by which he bought a house on the 13th February 1921 and in order to obtain the funds necessary to pay for it sold the land in question on the 16th February 1921. The vendees are non-agriculturists and the sale had, therefore, to be sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner.

The point for determination is whether in this case it was necessary for Chelu to part with ancestral property in order to purchase a house to live in. The Courts below have held that it was not necessary for Chelu to purchase "another house." The use of the words "another house" by the learned District Judge indicates that the learned District Judge was under the impression that Chelu was the owner at least of one house other than the one purchased whereas that is not the case. His ancestral house had already been sold in execution of the decree as already pointed out and his ejectment from that ancestral house was imminent. He is an old man of 80 without any son and accustomed to live in a house of substantial dimensions which is evident from the fact that his ancestral house which was sold realized a sum of Rs. 2,000. There is no evidence on the record to show that any houses were available in this village to be rented and as a rule it is not easy to rent a house in a village. I would also point out that in the Court below the respondents' Counsel appears to have admitted that a house to live in was a necessity, his argument being that it was not necessary to buy one. As already stated there is nothing to show that a house could be rented, and in the special circumstances of this case, I think that the purchasing of this house by Chelu must be regarded as a necessity.

I would, therefore, accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, cl. 10—Award—Notice of filing of award, absence of—Revision.

The omission to give notice to the parties that the award has been filed by the arbitrators is a serious irregularity furnishing good ground for revision.

Rangasami v. Muttusami, 11 M. 144; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 100 and Chatarbuj Das v. Ganesh Ram, 20 A. 474; A. W. N. (1898) 132; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 664, followed.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Petitioners.

Babu Biraj Mohun Majumdar, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this petition has arisen and the Rule has been granted are as follows:—On the 29th of August 1923 the plaintiffs brought a suit against a number of persons and on the 11th June the case by consent of parties was referred to arbitration. Certain time was allowed to the arbitrators to submit their report. On the 16th July they asked for further time and time was extended till the 9th of August. On the 7th August apparently the arbitrators filed their award and on the 9th August 1924 the following order was recorded by the Court "The arbitrators filed their award on the 7th August 1924. Put up on the 20th August for objections if any". When the case was put up on the 20th August the plaintiffs asked for further time to file objections. The Munsif refused to grant any further time and disposed of the case on the 21st August.

The plaintiffs have moved this Court and the first ground which was taken and which, in my opinion, is sufficient to dispose of this Rule is that no notice of the filing of the award was given to the parties. Schedule II, cl. 10 of the C. P. C. provides "where an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them ; and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties." As far as can be seen from the order-sheet in this case the notice required by cl. 10 was never given. The order of the 9th August noting that the arbitrators filed their award on the 7th August and directing that the case be put up on the 20th August for objections if any was not signed by the Pleaders. There is nothing to show that they were aware that this arbitration award had been filed.

This question of giving notice of the filing of the arbitration award has been considered in several cases to which our attention has been drawn. The first case is the case of Rangasami v. Muttusami (1). In that case a District Munsif passed a decree in the terms of an award without giving notice of the filing of the award to the parties and the learned Judges held that in doing so he acted with material irregularity. The same point was considered in the case of Chatarbuj Das v. Ganesh Ram (2). There the learned Judges held that it was a good ground for revision of a decree based upon an award filed in Court that no notice of the filing of the award was given by the Court to the parties as required by s. 516 of the C. P. C. (which corresponds to Sch. II, cl. 10 of the present Code) even though the applicant in revision might have received information aliunde that the award had been filed. This case is even stronger than the Madras case to which I have already referred. It, therefore, seems to me that the learned Munsif in omitting to give notice of the filing of the award to the parties has committed a serious irregularity.

The learned Munsif's order, therefore, will be set aside and the case will be sent back to him to be dealt with after giving due notice under cl. 10, Sch. II, C. P. C., of the filing of the award to the parties and allowing proper time for filing objection, if any, which they desire to make.

In the circumstances of this case there will be no order as to costs.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

BHASKAR BALVANT KULKARNI—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII r. 5—High Court—Attachment before judgment—Property outside jurisdiction—Procedure—Practice.

Where the property of the defendant sought to be attached is outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court, the proper course to follow is to transmit the order for attachment before judgment to the Court in whose jurisdiction the property is situated with a request that that Court should levy the attachment.

The practice of appointing plaintiff's Solicitor's clerk as a special bailiff to levy such attachment is not a proper one and must be stopped.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit to recover on a promissory note signed by the defendant on May 11, 1925. The promissory note recites an agreement previously arrived at on May 9, between two parties Bhaskar Balvant Kulkarni and the plaintiff. It would appear from the recitals in that agreement that the parties were transacting certain business in grocery at Nagar and Bombay, and the agreement was effected in order to settle the responsibilities between the parties. In consequence of that agreement the promissory note in suit was signed. An application was made to the Court by the plaintiff for an order against the defendant for attachment before judgment on the ground that the defendant was about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that might be passed against him.

Whether, as a matter of fact, a defendant has brought himself within the provisions of O. XXXVIII, r. 5, is always a difficult question for a Court to decide on affidavits. Considering the joint interest which the parties previously had, and the fact that the documents show that an arrangement was arrived at for the dissolution of those interests, it is difficult to say on the materials before us that the plaintiff has proved sufficient facts to enable this Court to make an order for attachment before judgment which has already been refused by the Chamber Judge.

It is not suggested that the defendant has any property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court. It appears, however, that when an ex parte order was obtained by the plaintiff for attachment before judgment of the defendant's property, outside the local limits, the attachment was effected by a clerk in the plaintiff's attorney's office, who was appointed as a special bailiff for that purpose. That clerk had levied the attachment without even furnishing the usual returns to the Sheriff's office stating particulars of the attachment levied or the inventory of the goods attached. We are told that when an attachment before judgment is ordered of property outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court, it has been the practice for the plaintiff to obtain an order in Chambers appointing his Solicitor's clerk a special bailiff for the purpose of levying attachment. We think that such a practice is entirely wrong and must be stopped. If the property of the defendant sought to be attached is outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court, the proper course for the Court to follow is to transmit the order for attachment before judgment to the Court in whose jurisdiction the property is stated with a request that that Court should levy the attachment.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, proceedings for setting aside, whether case—Application barred by time—Jurisdiction.

Proceedings for setting aside an ex parte decree, since they involve the reversal of a final order and decree are themselves a case within the meaning of s. 115, C. P. C.

When a Court in effect decides that an application is time-barred and in spite of its decision refers to that application, which is one for which the law does not permit it to extend time, as within time and proceeds to decide it in favour of the applicant, the Court illegally assumes jurisdiction which it does not possess.

Petition for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Fazilka, District Ferozepore, dated the 7th July 1925.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioner.

Lala Parkash Chander for Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order setting aside an ex parte decree. The ex parte decree was passed on the 4th April 1924 and the application to set it aside was made on the 15th January 1925. On receiving the application the Court struck an issue "Is the judgment-debtor's application dated the 15th January 1925 for setting aside the ex parte decree within time."

The suit was instituted on the 20th February 1924 and the Court distinctly holds that on the 26th February, the petitioner-defendant refused to take summons in Fazilka hospital. The Court decided that there was no regular service of summons but that the defendant had knowledge of the suit. It proceeded in its order to observe that in such a case the judgment-debtor had thirty days time from the date on which he had knowledge of the decree to apply for an order setting it aside. The learned Subordinate Judge went on to discuss certain evidence and then recorded as follows: "In view of the above facts and the parties' evidence it is difficult to say with certainty as to when the judgment debtor had knowledge of the decree. Hence the application of the judgment-debtor is within time and there are sufficient grounds for setting aside the decree."

Preliminary objections are taken before me, firstly, that the order is not one deciding a case within the meaning of s. 115 of the C. P. C. in view of the decision by the Full Bench of this Court in Firm Lal Chand-Mangal Sen v. Firm Behari Lal-Mehr Chand (1) and, secondly, that an erroneous decision on a point of law, that is to say a point of limitation is not one which comes within the scope of s. 115. Both these points are covered by my decision in Piroj Shah & Co. v. Mian Qarib Shah (Civil Revision No. 429 of 1925, decided on the 8th of December 1925), and I adhere to what I said there. When an ex parte decree is passed, the suit is terminated and it remains terminated until the proceedings on the application to set aside the decree come to an end. There is no suit pending, either when the application is presented or when the order disposing of it is passed and the proceedings since they involve the reversal of a final order and decree are themselves a case.

As regards the second preliminary objection, when a Court in effect decides that an application is time-barred and in spite of its decision refers to that application, which is one for which the law does not permit it to extend time as within time and proceeds to decide it in favour of the applicant the Court is guilty of much more than an erroneous decision of law. It illegally assumes jurisdiction which it does not possess. To view the case otherwise would be to admit that the express provisions of the Law of Limitation may be qualified or relaxed at the pleasure of a Court. In the present case the issue framed by the Court shows that it appreciated properly that the onus lay on the petitioner of proving that his application was presented within 30 days of his having knowledge of the decree. That onus lay the more heavily upon him when it was found that he had knowledge of the suit. The Court nowhere says erroneously that the onus of proof in regard to knowledge of the decree was on the decree-holder and indeed if it had said this there is authority in the case printed as Firm of Sughru Mal-Harcharan Das v. Firm of Sham Lal-Gokal Chand (2) for this Court to interfere on revision. The situation is that there has been no decision that the petition is within time and any decision, that there has been amounts to one that it is time-barred. Hence the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to accept it and to set aside the decree.

I accept the revision with costs and set aside the order of the lower Court.

Mesne profits—Trespassers
A trespasser actually cultivating the land is bound to pay mesne profits on produce basis.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 15th of May 1923, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court of that place, dated the 17th of December 1921.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal and Babu Purna Chandra Chandra, for the Appellant.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit and Babu Surendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ascertainment of mesne profits. The facts appear to be these: The plaintiff is the landlord. He had let out the land to a certain raiyat who paid money rent to him. The plaintiff in execution of a money-decree of his own against his raiyat purchased the raiyati himself. When he went to take possession he was resisted by the defendants who were subsequently found to be trespassers.

The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff mesne profits on the basis of fair and reasonable rent. This decision was upheld in appeal. The plaintiff appeals to this Court and he contends that he is entitled to wasilat on the basis of the produce of the land. He argues that the defendants were in possession of the land actually cultivating it and that he is entitled to the profits which the defendants actually received from the cultivation of his land or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom.

This contention of the appellant seems to me to be well-founded. Mesne profits are defined in the C. P. C., as those profits which the persons in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits. Now, it is admitted that the defendants were in actual possession cultivating the property as raiyats. Therefore the plaintiff is entitled to recover from them the mesne profits what is described as a produce basis, namely, the actual profits that they might by cultivation of the land have received.

The decrees of the lower Courts must be set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance to determine what were the actual profits that the defendants realized by cultivation of the land or might have realized with due diligence and to assess mesne profits on this basis as provided in cl. 12 of s. 2 of the C. P. C.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court.

Ghose, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 46—Precept, issue of—Security, acceptance of, by Court to which precept is issued—Jurisdiction—Estoppel.

It is not beyond the jurisdiction of the Court to which a precept has been issued to accept security offered by the judgment-debtor for payment of the decretal amount by a particular date and stay execution till then.

Where a security has been so offered to and accepted by the Court, judgment-debtor and surety are both estopped from challenging the jurisdiction of the Court to do so.

Bunwari Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan, 1 Ind. Cas. 48; 5 P. L. R. 1909; 4 P. W. R. 1909 and Nawabzada Muhammad Akbar Khan v. Dya Nath, 200 P. R. 1889, referred to.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Simla, dated the 14th August 1925.

Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand and Lala Sohan Lal Kapur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the order appealed against and are briefly as below:—

A precept under s. 46, C. P. C. having been issued to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class at Simla, for attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor Ram Chand, the latter applied to that Court for stay of execution for one month and ten days offering to furnish security for payment of the decretal amount and promising to pay it within the said period. This was agreed to and the Court accepted the security of Rai Sahib Puran Mal. But instead of making payment, which the judgment-debtor had promised to do, he obtained an order from the High Court for stay of execution. This was, however, withdrawn later and the decree was then transferred to the Court at Simla for execution and the decree-holder proceeded to execute it against the surety. The latter raised the objections that the Court had no authority to take security but could only attach the property specified in the precept and that in any case the security lapsed after two months.

These objections having been overruled the surety appeals to this Court. There can be no doubt that a Court to which a precept is issued derives its authority from that precept and has no power to do anything not authorized thereby, but it must be presumed to have inherent powers to deal with all matters that may incidentally arise in connection with proceedings for attachment. Now, it is clear that an Executing Court must stay its hands and drop all proceedings if the judgment-debtor should deposit the decretal amount, and by analogy the Court to which a precept is issued for attachment of property should do the same under the same circumstances. It cannot, therefore, be said that the Court to which a precept is issued has no jurisdiction to accept money or security. But even if it be assumed for the sake of argument that the Court acted without jurisdiction, the judgment-debtor and the surety are both estopped from raising the objection, and cannot be allowed to challenge the validity of an arrangement brought about by themselves. They mean to play a trick on the Court as well as the decree-holder, and this they cannot be suffered to do. See Bunwari Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1) and Nawabzada Muhammad Akbar Khan v. Dya Nath (2).

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff against a judgment and decree of the First Additional District Judge of Dacca, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge. It is unnecessary to state the facts of the suit in detail. The facts relevant for the purpose of the appeal may be shortly stated thus—the defendant obtained a decree for possession of certain immoveable properties in which an order had been made under the old C. P. C. for ascertainment of mesne profits in the Execution Department. When an application was made for attachment before judgment in the matter of ascertainment of mesne profits in the execution proceedings a claim was preferred by the plaintiff which was dismissed on the 28th of February 1914. The execution case was then dismissed on the 22nd of January 1915. The defendant-respondent ultimately succeeded in obtaining an order from the Appellate Court allowing their right to prosecute the application for ascertainment of mesne profits in 1918. The property appears to have been attached again by the defendant and another claim was preferred by the plaintiff which was dismissed on the 2nd of August 1921. The plaintiff then brought the suit on the 4th August 1921 under the provisions of r. 63, O. XXI, C. P. C.

Both the Courts below have held that the suit is barred by limitation as not having been brought within one year from the 28th February 1914 when the plaintiffs' claim was first rejected.

It seems to me that when the execution case was dismissed on the 22nd January 1915 the result of which was that the property was released from attachment it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to bring a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C. in order to set aside the order rejecting his claim. When a fresh attachment was made after the decision of the Appellate Court it was open to the plaintiff to prefer a fresh claim as was done in the present case; and the suit having been brought within the period of limitation after the order of the 2nd August 1921 the suit is not barred. It is unnecessary to discuss the questions raised in this appeal in detail as these questions have been fully discussed in the case of Najimunnessa Bibi v. Nacharaddin Sardar (1).

The judgments and decrees of the lower Courts must, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back for trial on the merits to the Court of first instance. Costs of this hearing as well as the costs of the Courts below will abide the result of the final decision.

No order is necessary in the Rule.

The period of limitation for an appeal or application against a decree runs from the date of the decree and not from the date when the decree is signed.

Pandu v. Rajeshwar, 78 Ind. Cas. 996; 20 N. L. R. 131; A. I. R. 1924 Nag. 271, explained.

In the Central Provinces a judgment cannot be said to have not been "pronounced" within O. XX, r. 1, C. P. C., simply because it is not read out entirely by the Court.

An applicant filing an application beyond time, under a mistaken view that it is within time, cannot ask for extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act, where even according to his own mistaken view he has filed it on the very last possible day.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. A. V. Khare and Mr. W. B. Pendharkar appear for the applicants, and Mr. Yusuf Sharif and Mr. G. G. Hatvalne for the opposite party. The application was filed one hundred and twenty five days after the date of the decree, the period allowed being ninety days only. Mr. Khare states that he was misled by the ruling in Pandu v. Rajeshwar (1) into thinking the period allowed ran from the date on which the decree was signed. If that were correct the application would be regarded as filed on the ninetieth day. The admittedly incorrect statement of the law appears only in the head-note of that case, not in the judgment. As for s. 5 of the Limitation Act, the filing of the application on the very last possible day, even according to the mistaken view taken by the applicant's Pleader, makes any appeal to that hopeless. Mr. Khare further argues that the judgment has never yet been "pronounced," which word he suggests as meaning a reading out of the whole judgment by the Court. If that is so there is at present no judgment or decree against which to appeal, but anyhow we cannot give to the word "pronounce" a meaning different to that it has been given in all the Courts of the C. P. and the applicants must pay all the costs. The Pleader's fee will be Rs. 15 in this and in each of the other five applications connected with it.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen in the following circumstances:—One Gokal Chand leased a certain house at Kohala to the firm of Jamita Mal-Sant Ram for a period of one year commencing on the 25th July 1923 and terminating on the 24th July 1924 at an annual rental of Rs. 150. The premises leased were destroyed by fire and it appears that within a few days Mir Zaman and others claiming to be the owners of the site entered into possession of the same and erected thereon what appear to have been certain ephemeral structures. Gokal Chand took action under s. 145, Cr. P. C., and was referred to the Civil Courts for further relief. It appears, however, that the original tenants were permitted by order of the Magistrate to retain possession of the site and to erect buildings thereon. This order was passed on the 17th June 1924. For reasons known to themselves the defendant-firm on the 18th June 1924 entered into an agreement with Mir Zaman and others apparently recognizing them as the owners of the site and agreeing to pay them a sum of Rs. 15 per annum as ground rent for the site on which they, the defendant-firm, were erecting their new building. Subsequently on the 26th August 1924, that is to say, after the term of the lease had terminated, Gokal Chand issued a notice to the defendant-firm calling upon them to vacate their permises or in default to pay a certain sum of money as rent. As this notice was not complied with Gokal Chand instituted a suit for ejectment from the shop and for the recovery of Rs. 155 against the said firm of Jamita Mal-Sant Ram.

Various pleas were raised and issues were settled the first of which was whether the relation of landlord and tenant ceased after the shop was burnt. The Trial Court held that the relationship of landlord and tenant had come to an end on the 15th May 1924 and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

On appeal by the plaintiff to the District Judge it was held that the relationship of landlord and tenant had not ceased and that, therefore, the suit could proceed and the cause was remanded accordingly. Against this order of remand the defendant-firm have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Bhagat, while Mr. Hargopal has addressed me on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that having regard to the provisions of s. 108 (b) (e), the tenancy had come to an end when the premises were destroyed and that, therefore, s. 65 of the Contract Act came into operation and the lease became void. It was further contended that inasmuch as Mir Zaman and his companions had claimed to be paramount owners of the site and had entered into possession thereof, that fact also terminated the lease. Finally it was urged that if any notice was necessary to terminate the lease, the fact that the appellant-firm had attorned to Mir Zaman and his companions was sufficient to convey to the plaintiff, the determination of the defendant-firm to regard the lease as ended. Now, the lower Appellate Court has come to a definite finding that Mir Zaman, etc., have not been shown to have been the paramount owners. That is a finding of fact which it is impossible for me to examine and in these circumstances, it appears to me that this point must be decided against the appellant.

Mr. Bhagat relied on Kunhayen Haji v. Mayan (1), Tayawa v. Gurshidappa (2) and Dharm Narain v. Labh Singh (3). On the other side Mr. Hargopal cited Dhuramsey Soonderdas v. Ahmedbhai Hubibbhoy (4), Nowrang Singh v. Janardan Kishorilal Singh (5) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Rangasami Aiyangar (6). Now with the principles enunciated in these authorities I have no quarrel. What has been therein laid down is very aptly put by Mr. Justice Mukerji in Nowrang Singh v. Janardan Kishorilal Singh (5) where it was held that upon a true construction of s. 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, an unauthorised act of a co-lessee would not absolve the other lessee from the liability of paying rent in accordance with the lease and further, that the covenant implied in the Transfer of Property Act protected the lessee against all disturbance by the lessor whether lawful or not save under a right of re-entry but as against other persons it protects the lessee only against lawful disturbance.

In the present case, it has not been found that there was any lawful disturbance. It has further been found that although the lessee's possession was disturbed for a few days he got back into possession before the term of the lease came to an end. It was the duty of the lessee at the termination of the lease peaceably to surrender the premises leased to him. Instead of doing so he entered into an agreement with persons, who must (or for the purpose of this case at present) be regarded as trespassers, and have been holding over since the termination of the lease.

So far as the question of the exercise of the option to terminate the lease is concerned, it has been found by the learned District Judge, that this option was never exercised, a finding which I regard as one of fact.

In these circumstances I hold that this appeal must fail and I dismiss it with costs accordingly.

Where a party is properly impleaded as one of the defendants in a case and the case as against would proceed to judgment but for the fact that the plaintiff elects to abandon part of his case and the suit is in consequence dismissed as against that defendant, the party is a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 47, C. P. C. [p. 123, col. 2.]

But where a defendant has been improperly joined as a party, the proper procedure is to strike out the name of the defendant under O. I, r. 10, C. P. C., and not to dismiss the suit as against him. [ibid.]

Held, (1) that the substance and not the form of the order must be regarded; [p. 124, col. 1.]

(2) that since the defendant was not an unnecessary party to the suit, the order was really one of dismissal as against him, although the words "strike off" were inappropriately used; [ibid.]

(3) that the order amounted to a decree which not having been appealed against became final and a subsequent suit against the same defendant was not maintainable. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Dindigul, in A. S. No. 12 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Dindigul, in O. S. No. 1380 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul confirming in part the decree of the District Munsif of Dindigul. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that certain property in the hands of the 1st and 2nd defendants belonged to a debtor of his, Subbaraya Iyer. The 2nd defendant was Subbaraya Aiyar's widow and the 1st defendant was his brother. The suit was brought in consequence of the allowance of a claim petition in favour of the brother, the 1st defendant. Exhibt B is the judgment in O. S. No. 598 of 1917 in which the same plaintiff sued to recover from the widow and the brother certain money due on dealings and promissory notes. The District Munsif in the fourth paragraph of his judgment states as follows:—"By consent I strike off the 2nd defendant's name. Plaintiff will pay by consent half of his costs".

The point raised in second appeal is whether the 2nd defendant is in spite of that procedure a party to the suit under s. 47 (Explanation). If he is, the present suit is barred and the proper remedy would be by way of appeal under that section. For the respondent stress has been laid on the form of words used by the learned District Munsif, namely, that the 2nd defendant's name was "struck off." It is admittedly a form of words more appropriate to striking off a misjoined plaintiff or defendant than applicable to the case of a party against whom the plaintiff does not wish to proceed further, as is the fact in the present case. It is well-known that the state of the law was uncertain until the Legislature enacted the Explanation to s. 47 whereby the Madras view as contained in E. G. Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (1) was affirmed as against the view of certain other High Courts. In that case it was held that when a party defendant is exonerated from a suit, i.e., the suit is dismissed against him and a decree passed against a co-defendant and in execution of that property belonging to and in possession of the exonerated defendant is attached and sold, the latter is not entitled to maintain a suit, but the question of his claim to and recovery of possession of the property is a question falling under s. 244 now s. 47 of the Code. The case of Gangadhara Ramarao v. Surya Rao (2) shows that the substance of the order and not the form of it is to be regarded. In that case a preliminary objection was taken against the maintainability of the appeal as the learned Subordinate Judge had struck out the name of the 1st defendant under O. I, r. 10 (2) and removed him from the record. It was contended that that being so no appeal was provided, but Mr. Justice Seshagiri Iyer says: "In my opinion this is an adjudication determining the rights of the plaintiffs to bring a suit of this nature, and his order is a 'decree' as defined in s. 2 (2), C. P. C.................................Consequently where a substantial claim has been adjudicated upon and where the party's name has been struck out not on the ground that a suit against him would not lie and where a substantial relief claimed in the suit has been ordered to be deleted, I am of opinion that the Court has 'conclusively adjudicated the rights of the parties with regard to a matter in controversy' and that, therefore, the order of the Subordinate Judge is a decree." The important part for the present purpose of the judgment is that we are to regard the substance of the order and not the form. It is quite clear that if the learned District Munsif in the suit of 1917 had said he dismissed the suit as against the 2nd defendant the case would have been perfectly plain, and s. 47 would have applied. The trouble has arisen because he has employed the words "struck off". The authoritative case on the subject is Vaddadi Sannamma v. Kobuganti Radhabhayi (3). There the Full Bench held that where a party has been properly impleaded as one of the defendants in the case and it is not contended in the present case that the 2nd defendant was improperly impleaded, the case as against him would have proceeded to judgment but for the fact that the plaintiff elected to abandon part of his case and the suit was in consequence dismissed as against this defendant, he is a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 47. The learned Chief Justice expressed the opinion that under O. I, r. 10 (2) the proper course would be for the Court to exercise the power which it now has of ordering at any stage of the proceedings the name of a defendant improperly joined to be struck out instead of dismissing the suit against him. That will, following the decision in E. G. Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (1), have the effect of taking him out of the operation of s. 47 which ought not to apply to him seeing that he has no real connection with the suit. Therefore, the opinion of the Full Bench is that striking out under O. I, r. 10 (2) is the proper procedure to be employed in the case of misjoinder. In any other case the proper course is dismissal. This would appear to be also the opinion of the learned Judges who decided the case reported in Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (4) that where a party sets up a paramount title in a mortgage suit to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee and has been exonerated from the suit on the ground of misjoinder, he does not remain a party to the suit for the purpose of s. 47.

The lower Courts here have dealt with this question in what may be described as a perfunctory manner. The issue is distinctly raised as No. 6 in the suit. The learned District Munsif says: "As stated in the latter Full Bench ruling Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radhabhayi (3) the 1st defendant's name should be deemed to have been struck off from the record though erroneously retained in the cause title in the decree, and as such the 1st defendant cannot be said under s. 47 to be a person against whom a suit has been dismissed." This opinion has not been attempted to be supported by the learned Counsel for the respondent and it is, in my opinion, an entire misreading of the result of the Full Bench case in Vaddadi Sannamma v. Koduganti Radhabhayi (3). It does, however, furnish one possibly useful item, and that is, that in spite of the 2nd defendant's name being struck off, his name was retained in the cause title in the decree that was finally drawn up so that if, as insisted by the learned Counsel for the respondent, one is to insist on the importance of the form, this would seem to show that the 2nd defendant's name had in fact not been struck off. The learned Subordinate Judge deals with the point in an even more perfunctory manner. He says: "The failure to strike off his name is not a ground for holding that he is still a party to the suit", referring to the alleged mistake of continuing the 1st defendant's name in the cause title of the decree. In my opinion, following the Full Bench ruling in Vaddadi Sannamma v. Coduganti Radhabhai (3) there can be other conclusion than that what the learned District Munsif really led in the original suit was to dismiss it as against the 2nd defendant. By an unhappily or mistaken use of language he used the expression "strike off" in the judgment which is I think appropriate only to the case of misjoinder of parties, or causes of action. I, therefore, am of opinion that the suit is incompetent throughout. The second appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout. The memorandum of objections is dismissed without costs.

Lala Balwant Rai, for Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Amin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court held that the resadbandi or chowkidara papers relied on by the plaintiff were not admissible in evidence and, it is argued in this second appeal that the papers were public documents and were admissible in evidence as such under s. 35 of the Indian Evidence Act. But there is nothing on the record to show that these documents were prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or by any other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country. Next it is argued that the documents having once been admitted in evidence the lower Appellate Court was not competent to exclude them from evidence. This point was not taken in the grounds of appeal and possesses no force. If a document is once admitted in evidence on the understanding that it is a public document, it loses all evidential value when it is discovered that it is not a public document.

No other point is raised. The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Pre-emption suit—Pre-emption price exceeding Court's jurisdiction—Decree.

Where in a suit for pre-emption regarding revenue paying land the value for jurisdiction, i. e., 30 times the proportionate land revenue does not exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, but the amount payable by the pre-emptor exceeds its jurisdiction it can hear the suit but cannot pass a decree. However, if such a suit is transferred to another Court which has jurisdiction to pass the decree, the latter will pass the decree and not dismiss the suit on the ground that the first Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Arshad Ali v. Zorawar Singh, 92 Ind. Cas. 986; 8 L. L. J. 60, followed.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand, Sagar Chand and Lala Harish Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a pre-emption suit by the son of Anwar Ali for pre-emption of 1 bigha 11 biswas sold by Anwar Ali to Bichha Lal and Sher Singh on the 9th of November, 1917. The suit was instituted on the 27th of August, 1918.

Except that here there is no question of improvements or of the full sale price in the deed not having been paid, the circumstances are precisely similar to those of Civil Appeal No. 1014 of 1922, [Arshad Ali v. Zorawar Singh (1)] decided to-day. Here too the plaintiff claimed to pre-empt for a small amount and fixed the value of the suit for Court-fee and jurisdiction on the proportionate land revenue of the plot sold. The lower Court held that the sale-price entered in the deed, namely, Rs. 1,758 had been paid but dismissed the suit because it had been instituted in the Munsif's Court which had no jurisdiction to hear it. As in the other appeal, we hold that at any rate the value for jurisdiction was 30 times the proportionate land revenue and that the question of Court-fee need not be decided since the lower Court, acting under s. 149 of the C. P. C., permitted the plaintiff to make up the fee to the amount held by it to be correct. As regards jurisdiction, the lower Court was wrong in overlooking the Explanation to r. 1 (b), pages 93 and 94. Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Vol. III and the Munsif, in whose Court the suit was instituted, had jurisdiction to hear it, although, as pointed out in Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (2), he had not jurisdiction to pass a decree. It may be observed that Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (2) has not been altogether understood by the lower Court, for it does not lay down that when the money to be paid in a pre-emption suit exceeds the Court's jurisdiction, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, but, merely that the decree must be passed by a superior Court, as has been done in the present case. There was no reason why the plaintiff, whose right of pre-emption was otherwise admitted, should not have been given a decree by the Court of the Junior Subordinate Judge to whom the suit was transferred by order of the District Judge.

We accept the appeal with costs and grant the plaintiff a decree for possession by pre-emption on payment of Rs. 1,758 on or before a date three months from the date of the decree.

The decree is to be drawn up in accordance with O. XX, r. 14 (1). We direct further that in the Courts below parties shall bear their own costs since the plaintiff failed there conspicuously in respect of the pre-emptive price.

JUDGMENT.

In A. A. O. No. 234 of 1923.

The application to the District Munsif in the case was by the insolvent and was presumably under s. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920. The District Munsif dismissed it on the short ground that it was not an application by the Official Receiver. The insolvent went up to the District Judge, who purporting to exercise the power of an Insolvency Court and presumably with a view of ensuring that the Executing Court acted properly under s. 52, set aside the execution sale. Neither before the District Munsif nor before the District Judge was there any prayer by the applicant to hand over the property to the Receiver. It is difficult to see how the case could come under s. 52 at all.

Further whether the term "Receiver" used in s. 52, is restricted to a Receiver, appointed after the adjudication, or will apply to an interim Receiver appointed under s. 20, and whether the application under that section is restricted to one by the Receiver or may be made by the insolvent or any one else, both of which points raise questions of difficulty which it is not necessary to answer in this case, it is perfectly clear to us that an application under s. 52 to the Executing Court to deliver property to the Receiver can only be a valid application if the Receiver has been clothed by the Insolvency Court with powers to take possession of the insolvent's property. To hold otherwise would open the way, e.g., for such a delivery of the insolvent's property to an interim Receiver in the teeth of a refusal by the Court to confer on him powers to take delivery. In the present case the interim Receiver was not clothed with powers to take possession of the insolvent's property. In this view the District Munsif's order was correct; the District Judge had no jurisdiction to interfere (1), because there was no request before him that the property was to be delivered to the Receiver and (2), because the Receiver was not authorised to take delivery. The order must be set aside and the District Munsif's order restored with costs.

In A. A. A. O. No. 2 of 1924.

It follows that the sale should have been confirmed by the District Munsif, as no valid application to stop it had been put in before him within 30 days of the sale.

We allow the appeal. The appellant will get his costs in the two lower Courts and not in this Court.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken that the finding of the learned District Judge that Sanghoi is not a town but a village, is a question of fact which cannot be raised in second appeal. It was laid down in Mahmud v. Jumma (1), that it was most doubtful if the question whether a place was a town or a village could be raised on second appeal. This was followed in Dewan Chand v. Nizam Din (2). There the question was whether the land was urban immoveable property or village immoveable property so that it had to be decided whether the place was a town or a village. The learned Judge who decided that case followed the Division Bench ruling Mahmud v. Jumma (1). In Mansa Ram v. Joti (3) it was held that the question whether the place was a town or a village was a question of law. The attention of the Judge, who decided that case, however, was not directed to the remarks in Mahmud v. Jumma (1). It seems to me that the question is clearly one of fact and that the authorities are on the whole in favour of this view. I hold, therefore, that this question cannot be raised in second appeal.

Income Tax Officer is the sole arbiter on the question of the possibility of deducing the income, profits and gains from the method of accounting employed and an assessee is not entitled to challenge his opinion.

The proper stage for questioning the competency to issue a mandamus under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act, is the date of hearing the application and the question cannot be agitated after an order has been passed on the application.

Trikamjee Jiwan Das v. Commissioner of Income Tax, 86 Ind. Cas. 170; 4 Pat. 224; (1925) Pat. 17; A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 352, followed.

Petition, under s. 66 (3) of Act XI of 1922, praying that the Income Tax Commissioner may be required to draw up a statement of the petitioners' case and to refer it to the High Court for decision.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, Government Advocate, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In accordance with a direction given by this Court under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act (XI of 1922) the Commissioner of Income Tax has referred two questions of law for decision. He has at the same time doubted the competency of this Court to issue the mandamus under s. 66 (3) on the ground that the Act applicable to the case is the Act of 1913 and not that of 1922, but this is a point which should have been taken at the hearing of the application made under the said section and in agreement with the view taken in Trikamjee Jiwan Das v. Commissioner of Income Tax (1) we hold that the order passed on the application cannot now be questioned.

The first point referred to us is whether in view of the undertaking given by the Income Tax Officer in the course of the assessment for the year 1920-21 the petitioners are entitled to receive credit in the assessment of 1921-22 for any loss which they are proved to have sustained in the sugar business in 1919-20. The learned Commissioner urges that the Income Tax Officer did not in fact give an undertaking that any loss sustained by the petitioners in their business in 1919-20 would be taken into account in the assessment for 1921-22, but only recommended that this should be done. However, this may be, we find that the Assistant Commissioner in his order of the 8th Novembar 1922 in the appeal against the assessment found that the alleged loss had not been proved, inasmuch as it was impossible to check the profit and loss statements because weights were not stated therein. On that finding no credit can be given to the petitioners for any losses for the year 1919-20.

The second point referred is whether an assessee is entitled to challenge the correctness of the opinion of the Income Tax Officer that the method of accounting employed is such that the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom. We think it was clearly intended by the proviso to s. 13 of the Act that the Income Tax Officer should be the sole arbiter on the question of the possibility of deducing the income, profits and gains from the method of accounting employed.

We accordingly answer both the points in the negative and direct that the petitioners shall pay the costs of the reference.

R. L. Answered negatively.

Punjab Excise Act (I of 1914), s. 61 (1), offence under—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562, application of.

In an offence under the Excise Act it is necessary to impose a sentence which would have a deterrent effect and a mere sentence of fine will not do.

Emperor v. Sujan Singh, 35 Ind. Cas. 486; 19 P. R. 1916 Cr.; 41 P. W. R. 1916 Cr.; 144 P. L. R. 1916; 17 Cr L. J. 310, followed.

Ordinarily a person convicted under s. 61 (1), Punjab Excise Act, is not entitled to the benefit of s. 562, Cr. P. C., though the section is not only applicable to offences under the Penal Code but also to offences punishable under a special or a local Act.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, with his No. 222 J. of the 23rd June 1925.

Mr. Govind Ram, for the Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is ample evidence on the record to prove the fact that on the night between the 14th and 15th of February, 1925, the accused Piara Singh was found distilling illicit liquor in his field; and it is common ground that a distilling apparatus, a large quantity of lahan and two bottles containing illicit liquor were recovered from the field The Courts below have concurred in holding that Piara Singh is guilty of an offence described in cl. (a) of s. 61, sub-s. (1) of the Punjab Excise Act I of 1914; and I have no hesitation in endorsing their conclusion.

The Trial Magistrate has sentenced the convict to a fine of Rs. 200, but the learned Sessions Judge considers the sentence to be inadequate, and has submitted the record to this Court under s. 438, Cr. P. C., with a recommendation that the sentence be enhanced. In awarding punishment for an offence under the Excise Act the Courts must always bear in mind that illicit distillation implies a good deal of preparation and results not only in the loss of excise revenue, but also in drunkenness. Judicial experience also shows that the offence often escapes detection, and, as laid down in Emperor v. Sujan Singh (1), it is necessary to impose a sentence which would have a deterrent effect. That this was the intention of the Legislature is clear from the fact that the maximum term of imprisonment for manufacturing illicit liquor was raised in 1914 from four months to one year; and has recently been further enhanced to two years, vide s. 2 of the Punjab Excise (Amendment) Act, II of 1925.

In view of the large profits derived from illicit distillation and the fact that the crime is not always detected, I do not think that the sentence of a mere fine can have any deterrent effect. Nor do I consider that the principle embodied in s. 562, Cr. P. C., which, as amended by Act XVIII of 1923 applies not only to persons who are convicted of an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code but also to those who are found guilty of an offence punishable under a special or a local Act, can be reasonably invoked by a person convicted of an offence like the present which, as I have already observed, not only implies previous preparation but often escapes detection. It cannot be urged on behalf of such a convict that he had succumbed to a sudden temptation, and that the Court should, therefore, exercise its discretion under the section in his favour and give him another chance. It is not desirable to lay down a hard and fast rule, and exceptional circumstances may outweigh these considerations and warrant the application of the rule enacted by the said section. Such cases are, however, rare and ordinarily a person convicted under s. 61 (1) of the Excise Act is not entitled to the benefit of s. 562, Cr. P. C.

Having regard to the principles enunciated above I am of opinion that the sentence awarded by the Magistrate is manifestly inadequate. While dismissing the application for revision preferred by the convict I accept the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge so far as to impose upon the convict a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 6 months in addition to the fine inflicted by the Magistrate.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562—*Lambardar pocketting money received as water rate—Sentence.

Where the accused, a lambardar, is convicted for pockctting the water rate money received by him as an agent of the Government from the complainant a landowner, the case is not a fit one to be dealt with under s. 562, Cr. P. C.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, with his No. 713-M, dated the 31st August 1925.

FACTS.—Sohan Singh accused is the lambardar of the village Lopoki and Vir Singh complainant is a landowner of that village. Rupees 46-6-0 was due on a water rate from Vir Singh who paid the said amount to lambardar obtaining from him receipt Ex. PA. The complainant is illiterate and was satisfied with the receipt as it was given to him. The lambardar, however, pocketted that money and did not credit it into the Government Treasury. On the other hand sometime later he applied for a warrant to realize the amount from Vir Singh through Tahsil. On warrant being issued Vir Singh had to pay the abiana second time. He then lodged a complaint against the accused under s. 420, Indian Penal Code The accused denied the receipt PA as well as the receipt of the money alleged to have been paid by the complainant on the said receipt (Ex. PA). The complainant, however, proved by the evidence of several witnesses that he had really paid the amount to the accused on the first occasion and that the accused cleverly did not sign the receipt, Ex. PA, given by him. Other receipts admittedly given by the accused to other persons were produced and the opinion of the Government Examiner of Questioned Documents Mr. Brewster was obtained. The expert also supported the prosecution. The Magistrate finding that the accused had really received the abiana on the first occasion and given the receipt Ex. PA, convicted the accused under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, but sentenced him under s. 562, Cr. P. C., to furnish two securities for Rs. 3,000 for two years.

The complainant has filed a petition of revision, and urges that the offence really falls under s. 409, Indian Penal Code, and that the complainant has suffered a lot and paid Rs. 200 as fee to the hand-writing expert, that the sentence awarded is too mild, and that the accused should be given substantial punishment, and out of the fine, complainant should be awarded reasonable compensation.

GROUNDS.—The accused has filed no appeal against his conviction and having gone through the file, I find the facts as stated above to be fully proved by the evidence on the record. The conviction of the accused is amply justified. I also think the proper section applicable is 409, Indian Penal Code, and not 420, Indian Penal Code. The accused is an agent of the Government and was given abiana in that capacity and he misappropriated the amount. In any case, the sentence under s. 562 is certainly ridiculous in a case like this. The accused is said to be an old man of 62 years with a good previous record and that may be a good ground for not sending him to Jail, but that is no reason why he should not be fined substantially for having committed such a serious offence and so boldly, especially as the Magistrate himself remarks that his attitude in this case from the beginning to the end had been very unsatisfactory. It is recommended, therefore, that the conviction may be altered to one under s. 409, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence enhanced to a fine of Rs. 300 or in default the accused to undergo simple imprisonment for 6 months. It may be further ordered that out of the fine, if realized Rs. 200 may be paid to the complainant as a compensation under s. 545, Cr. P. C.

Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Government Advocate, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The facts are given in the report by the learned Sessions Judge. The case was obviously one not suited for the application of s. 562, Cr. P. C. The Crown is represented and the learned Counsel appearing does not press for any greater sentence than that recommended by the learned Sessions Judge. A sentence of imprisonment, however, is obligatory under the law for an offence either under s. 409 or under s 420, Indian Penal Code.

Since the accused was not charged under s. 409, Indian Penal Code, I maintain the conviction under s. 420, Indian Penal Code, and sentence the accused to pay a fine of Rs. 300 and undergo one day's simple imprisonment. In default of payment of the fine the accused shall undergo 6 months, rigorous imprisonment. Rupees 200 of the fine to be paid to the complainant as compensation as recommended by the learned Sessions Judge.

Mr. I. C. Chopra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner Tara Singh has been convicted under s. 216, Indian Penal Code, of having harboured an absconder Dhara Singh, and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

The evidence on the record shows that Tara Singh was found sleeping at his threshing floor on the same charpoy with Dhara Singh, and that, when questioned by the Head Constable as to who his companion was, he replied that he was his guest and nephew. The question is whether these facts amount to "harbouring" within the meaning of s. 216-B.

Now, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Husain Bakhsh (1), that the words "or assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension" as used in that section must be taken to indicate some method ejusdem generis with those that have been specified in the section, and that giving false information to the Police does not amount to harbouring within the meaning of the section. This view has, however, been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court and other Courts, vide, inter alia, Muchi Mian v. Emperor (2) and Akbar Ali v. Emperor (3). I consider that when a person gives false information to the Police with respect to a proclaimed offender, or warns him of the approach of the Police, in order that the said offender may make good his escape, he is guilty of the offence of harbouring him.

For the aforesaid reasons I hold that the petitioner has been rightly convicted. He has, however, been released on bail, and I accordingly accept the application for revision so far as to reduce the period of imprisonment to that already undergone.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439 (4)—Murder trial—Conviction under s. 323, Penal Code—Revision—High Court's power to record conviction and sentence under s. 325.

P. C., from recording the conviction and sentence under s. 325, Penal Code, inasmuch as there was no acquittal under s. 325.

Criminal revision from an order of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 26th October 1925.

Mr. H. Cecil Desanges, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On an application made by a relation of a deceased person a learned Judge of this Court issued notice to four persons to show cause why the sentence passed on them by the learned Sessions Judge of Fatehpur should not be enhanced. The four men have been convicted of an offence under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code and the maximum sentence has been passed. The question, therefore, will arise of an alteration in the conviction if the sentence has to be enhanced.

The facts as found by the learned Judge are that one Maiku was attacked with lathis by these four men and extensive injuries were caused to him. He died immediately after and at the post mortem examination it was found that his ribs had been broken. According to the medical witness death was due to rupture of the spleen resulting from the fracture of the ribs. The spleen was not enlarged. The learned Judge acquitted the accused persons of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code but did not consider whether an offence under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code was committed or not.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate pointed out that under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. this Court was precluded from converting the finding of acquittal under s. 302 into one of conviction as there was no Government appeal. This has been laid down by a Bench of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Sheo Darshan Singh (1) and in a judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Nand Ram v. Khazan (2). In the present case, however, we do not propose to alter the acquittal under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code to one of conviction under that section. The injuries were caused not on the head or neck but on the lower portion of the body and it appears likely that the accused persons had not the intention of causing death. There is also no evidence that the injuries intended to be inflicted were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The medical witness has not stated that fracture of the ribs in the ordinary course would lead to a rupture of the spleen.

The question at issue is whether upon the facts disclosed and found by the lower Court a conviction under s. 325 should be recorded or not. There has been no acquittal of the accused persons of an offence of causing grievous hurt, so we are of opinion that we are not precluded from convicting the accused persons of that offence by reason of cl. (4) of s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. It is certain that Maiku's ribs were fractured during the beating given to him by the accused persons and it ought to make no difference whethar the ribs were fractured by lathi blows or by Maiku being knocked down on the ground. The extensive marks of injuries found on Maiku's person at the time of the post mortem examination leave no doubt that the intention of the accused persons was to cause grievous hurt. There is no suggestion made on the part of the defence that the ribs were not fractured during this particular beating. The defence that Maiku was beaten two days earlier and died from the effects of the injuries received then has been negatived by the medical evidence which is to the effect that the injuries were such as to result in death immediately after they were received. After such injuries the injured person could not have survived for two days.

We do not agree with the observation of the learned Judge:—"It cannot be presumed that the accused Nos. 2 to 5 caused the fracture of the ribs." When there is no evidence or suggestion that the ribs were fractured otherwise than during this particular beating, the presumption is that they were fractured by the act of the accused persons even though they may not have been fractured as the direct result of lathi blows.

In the result we alter the conviction to one under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code and enhance the sentence in each case to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

JUDGMENT.—The principles upon which the District Magistrate's powers to direct further enquiry under s. 437, Code of Criminal Procedure, are to be exercised are laid down in Emperor v. Kiru (1). Such further enquiry should only be ordered in exceptional cases and for good reasons shown. Originally when a man is discharged under circumstances which make the order of the discharge equivalent to one of the acquittal no further proceedings should be taken against him under s. 437, and speaking generally further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete.

In the present case the Magistrate's order of discharge is one which deals with the prosecution evidence very exhaustively and is certainly equivalent to one of acquittal. The case is not an exceptional one. It is one of very common occurrence, a cattle theft case where the actual theft was not witnessed. Such cases in the experience of every Magistrate are exceedingly difficult to unravel and the evidence is often unsatisfactory. The learned Additional District Magistrate has not regarded the order of discharge as manifestly perverse or foolish and it was not based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete. All that the Additional District Magistrate was prepared to hold was that the reasons given by the Trial Magistrate for disbelieving Ahmad and Sajjawal were not cogent.

Dr. Sir Mian Muhammad Shafi, KT., and Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. M. Mackay, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—Kanshi son of Phule, Ram Gopal son of Data Ram and Mai Dhan son of Lajje, Banias of Mauza Pinahana in the Sonepat Tehsil of the Rohtak District, have been convicted of having caused the death of one Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram, grievous hurt to one Santu and simple hurt to one Asa Ram, and have been awarded various terms of imprisonment and Mai Dhan and Ram Gopal have also been directed to pay fines. Against their convictions and sentences they have preferred this appeal to this Court. The relatives of the deceased Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram have also moved this Court under s. 439, Cr. P. C., praying that the convictions of the three persons named should be under s 302, Indian Penal Code, and appropriate sentences awarded.

The facts are simple. It appears that on the 24th April 1925 at about 9 A. M. a boy named Ram Govind, aged 12 years, had a quarrel with a lad named Moti of about 15 or 16 years of age outside a shivala. Ram Govind abused Moti who struck Ram Gobind and twisted his finger. This was witnessed by Santu (P. W. No. 12), a young man aged about 22, who was related to Ram Govind. Santu slapped Moti. This incident was witnessed by the three appellants who were at Ram Gopal appellant's shop a few paces from the shivala. These three proceeded to assault Santu in revenge for his having slapped Moti. Ram Gopal was armed with a gandas; Kanshi with a hatchet and Mai Dhan with a khunta or pole forming part of a bullock-cart—all three formidable weapons. According to the evidence, Mai Dhan was the first to hit Santu inflicting an injury on his head; Kanshi struck him a violent blow on his chest with a hatchet cutting his sternum and actually damaging the lung. Santu fell and was struck by Ram Gopal on the calf of his leg with the gandas inflicting an injury 8" long 2¼" wide and deep to the bone. In the meantime Asa Ram, father of Ram Gobind, appeared on the scene and was assaulted in his turn by Kanshi with a hatchet and Mai Dhan with a khunta. Asa Ram was not armed. Immediately behind him came Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram who received a violent blow on the head delivered by Kanshi with a hatchet. Ram Gopal was felled to the ground and died. Immediately behind him came Ratan at whom Ram Gopal appellant aimed a blow with a gandas. Ratan managed to catch hold of the gandas and kept hold of it in spite of being hit by Kanshi with a hatchet. Babaria (P. W. No. 8), a Jat, arrived on the scene and took hold of his gandas. Other people then arrived and the incident came to an end, the parties being separated. The matter was reported at 5-30 P. M. on the same day, the Police Station being 13 miles distant.

It has been urged that there was delay in making the report, but having regard to the circumstances I do not think that there is anything sinister in the time that elapsed. It has to be borne in mind that an attempt to make a report on the part of the other side was made even at a later time on the same day.

It has been urged that there was no previous enmity between the parties who are Banias by caste and that the whole affair was sudden and unpremeditated. Although one of the appellants has attempted to show in his statement that there was some previous ill-feeling, I think it may be accepted that the relations between the parties were not such as to supply any adequate motive for violence of this nature. It may be accepted that the occurrence took place suddenly and was due to the quarrel between Ram Govind and Moti.

An attempt was made by the defence to prove that there was a general fight between two factions but the evidence led, which was read to us by Sir Muhammad Shafi, has only to be referred to to show how utterly absurd this theory is. While attempting to establish the innocence of the appellants, non of the witnesses makes any attempt to account for the injuries inflicted upon Santu, Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram or Asa Ram. I would, therefore, hold in agreement with the learned Sessions Judge that the story told by the prosecution as detailed is substantially accurate.

It remains to consider what offence or offences the appellants have committed. With regard to Kanshi, there can be no doubt that he is responsible for the grievous hurt caused to Santu, and the death of Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram. The learned Sessions Judge, in disagreement with the assessors, has found that the act of Kashi in connection with the death of Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram constituted an offence under the second part of s. 304, Indian Penal Code, and for that offence Kanshi has been awarded ten years' rigorous imprisonment. He has also been convicted of having caused grievous hurt to Santu and Asa Ram and for the first offence has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and for the second to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the sentences to run consecutively. I would note here that the assessors, who were four in number, were unanimously of opinion that all the appellants were guilty of murder and causing grievous hurt with an instrument used for cutting—section 326, Indian Penal Code. Now, as far as Kanshi's act in connection with the killing of Ram Gopal son of Ghasi Ram is concerned, the onus is on Kanshi to show that his act fell within one of the Exceptions to s. 300. It has been urged that inasmuch as the offence committed was entirely unpremeditated and was the result of a sudden quarrel, it fell within the 4th Exception to s. 300. That Exception runs as follows:—

"Culpable homicide is not murder if it is committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and without the offender's having taken undue advantage or acted in a cruel or unusual manner."

It may be granted that in the present case culpable homicide was committed without premiditation and in a sudden fight and also in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, but it seems to me that when a man uses a hatchet on another unarmed man and strikes him a blow on the head with that hatchet splitting his skull while he was under no reasonable apprehension of injury to himself, cannot claim the protection that this Exception affords. In my judgment the offence committed by Kanshi in killing Ram Gopal falls within the purview of s. 302, Indian Penal Code, and I would, therefore, alter his conviction to one under that section and sentence him to transportation for life. I would also maintain his conviction under s 326 in respect of the injuries caused to Santu and Asa

Ram, but do not think it necessary to pass any separate sentence for those offences.

Ram Gopal appellant has been found guilty of having caused simple hurt to Santu with a sharp edged weapon an offence under s. 324. In my judgment his attack on Santu falls within the purview of s. 326, Indian Penal Code. As stated above, all the three appellants came together from Ram Gopal appellant's house or shop with a view to assaulting Santu in revenge for his having slapped Moti. Of these three persons two of whom one was Ram Gopal, were armed with formidable sharp edged weapons while the third was armed with a heavy pole. All three used the weapons that they were armed with on Santu and having regard to the provisions of s. 34, Indian Penal Code, I consider that they all had the intention of causing at least grievous hurt to Santu. Grievous hurt was actually caused. I would, therefore, alter the conviction of Ram Gopal to one under s. 326 and sentence him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The fine however is set aside and if paid will be refunded. In the case of Mai Dhan he has been found guilty of having caused simple hurt to Santu and Asa Ram. In my opinion his case is on the same footing as that of Ram Gopal so far as the attack on Santu is concerned, and I would, therefore, alter his conviction to one under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him for that offence to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. I do not think it necessary to inflict any separate sentence on him for the offence committed in regard to Asa Ram, and I would, therefore, direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Before concluding I would note that it has been urged at the Bar that this Court has no power under s. 439 (4) to enhance the sentence as the decision of the learned Sessions Judge amounted to an acquittal on the more serious charges. In this connection attention was drawn to Emperor v. Shivaputraya Durdundaya (1). That authority no doubt supports the contention but the contrary view was taken by the Madras High Court in Kambam Bali Reddy v. Emperor (2) and by this Court in Bhola v. Emperor (3) which I think is the correct view for me to follow.

Fforde, J.—I agree. I must confess I have some doubts whether sub-cl. (4) of s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. does not prohibit a Court from convicting in revision on a charge upon which the Trial Court has in effect acquitted an accused. Being bound, however, by the unanimous current of decisions of this Court it would serve no useful purpose to express my views upon this question.

MUNICIPAL BOARD, ETAWAH—OPPOSITE PARTY.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 307 (b)—Order of continuing fine when can be passed.

It is not legal for a Magistrate to pass an order of continuing fine in a trial for an unauthorised construction. Such an order can be passed only on a separate trial if the accused fails to remove the unauthorised construction after his original trial.

Criminal reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Etawah, dated the 7th of December 1925.

Mr. Sailanath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred by the Additional Sessions Judge of Mainpuri on the ground that an order of continuing fine purporting to be passed under s 307 (b) of the U. P Municipalities Act is illegal. The Magistrate convicted the accused of constructing a culvert without the permission of the Municipal Board and fined him Rs. 20. At the same time he ordered the accused to remove the culvert and directed that if he failed to do so he would have to pay a daily fine of Re. 1 so long as it was not removed. The learned Magistrate in his explanation justifies the order as covered by s. 307 (b). The provisions of this section are constantly misunderstood by Magistrates in spite of their effect having been pointed out more than once by this Court. Section 307 (b) says that the offender shall be liable on conviction before a Magistrate to a daily fine for every day after the date of the first conviction during which the offender is proved to have persisted in the offence. This clearly implies that there must be a separate prosecution and a separate conviction after the accused has failed to comply with the order and has rendered himself liable to a continuing fine. A Magistrate cannot at the time of the original conviction pass an order in respect of a future offence. This was already laid down by this Court in Amir Hasan Khan v. Emperor (1) and again in Kashmiri Lal v. Emperor (2). I accordingly accept the reference and set aside that part of the Magistrate's order which imposes a daily fine on the accused.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304II— Lethal blow—Knowledge of likelihood of causing death—Presumption.

When a person chooses to lay about with a lath, it being a lethal weapon, with all the force at his command, it must be presumed that he knew he was likely to cause death.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 27th October 1925.

Mr. Balkishan for Diwan Chaman Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Din Dyal Kapur, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal Ghulam Muhammad and Nur Muhammad, sons of Mahmud, have been convicted under s. 304, Part II, Indian Penal Code for causing the death of Sardara and have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for ten years each.

The facts as found by the learned Sessions Judge on the evidence led in the case seem to be that Ghulam Muhammad and Nur Muhammad were leading some bullocks and happened to pass by the threshing-floor of the complainants. It is amply proved on the record that there were various grounds for enmity between the party of the complainants and of the appellants. The result was that owing to certain circumstances which have not been proved at all a fight seems to have occurred between Ghulam Muhammad and Nur Muhammad on one side and Raja and Sardara on the other. Barkhurdar, who made the First Information Report, at first mentioned four persons as having taken part in the fight and having caused the death of Sardara and injuries to Raja and Jafar. Subsequently he seems to have implicated nine more persons. Twelve persons were challaned in all of whom ten have been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge and two, Ghulam Muhammad and Nur Muhammad, have been convicted. The names of these men are mentioned in the First Information Report and there seems no reasan to doubt, especially as both have injuries on their persons, that they were present in the fight. It is equally clear that Sardara and Raja were also present in the fight that took place. According to the prosecution evidence—and there is no defence evidence in the case at all—Jafar, who also received injuries, ran away before the fight, in which Sardara was killed, began. The learned Sessions Judge has found from this evidence that Jafar received his injuries at the hands of persons other than the appellants. Be this as it may, the result is that Sardara received five injuries two of which were fatal; one being a blow on the head with a lathi which fractured the skull, and another being a blow on the back which ruptured the spleen. Raja received twenty injuries in all two of which were grievous. The finding, therefore, of the learned Sessions Judge at any rate is correct to this extent that Ghulam Muhammad and Nur Muhammad laid about them with all the force at their command with lathis. Now, a lathi is a lethal weapon and, if a person chooses to lay about with a lethal weapon with all the force at his command, it must be presumed that he knew he was likely to cause death. I, therefore, consider that the conviction under s. 304, Part II, is, in the circumstances of this case, justifiable. At the same time I do not consider that this is a case in which the maximum sentence need be inflicted, because, though there is no direct evidence on the record to prove this, the circumstances seem to point to the complainants having in all probability been the aggressors, and I, therefore, accept the appeal so far as to reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for five years in the case of each appellant.

J. 967, followed.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ambala, with his No. 1332G of 13th October 1925.

FACTS.—On 17th March 1923, Rajab Ali Darogha of the Notified Area Committee, Kharar reported that Karta Râm and Chajju Ram had built two qadamchas of stairs in a public street without getting permission. Upon this a notice was issued to them by the Committee on 31st March 1923 to demolish within a month. The notice was not complied with. Upon this the Committee lodged a complaint under s. 219 of Act III of 1911 against these persons. The Tahsildar who tried the case convicted the accused and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each and a penalty of Rs. 160. From this order the accused appealed to T. B. Deeks Esquire, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Rupar, who accepted the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and holding that the prosecution was of a malicious nature awarded Rs. 10 compensation to the accused. The Notified Area Committee filed a revision from this order praying that the award of compensation be set aside.

GROUNDS.—Under s. 250, Cr. P. C., compensation can be awarded only by the Magistrate by whom the case was heard. That such powers cannot be exercised by Courts of Appeal is clear by the rulings of the various High Courts [vide Balli Pande v. Chittan (1), In re, Pitambar Dwarkadas (2), and Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda (3).] The last is a Full Bench ruling and discusses in full clause (d) of s. 423. The order awarding a compensation does not necessarily follow or arise out of an order of discharge or acquittal and it is not per se an order "Consequential or incidential thereto." There is no ruling of our own Hon'ble High Court on the point, at least none has been brought to my notice but s. 250 itself is very clear.

It is recommended that the order of T. B. Deeks, Esquire dated the 16th February 1924 awarding compensation to the accused be set aside.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—This is a reference under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. made by the learned Sessions Judge of Ambala in the following circumstances:—

The Notified Area Committee of Kharar instituted a case against Karta Ram and Chajju Ram under s. 219 of Act III of 1911. The Trying Magistrate found the accused persons guilty and sentenced them to certain fines. An appeal by them to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Rupar, who had appellate powers, resulted in their acquittal and in an order under s. 250, Cr. P. C., directing the Notified Area Committee as complainant to pay to each of the persons proceeded against a sum of Rs. 5 by way of compensation. The Notified Area Committee moved the learned Sessions Judge on the revision side who has sent this case up with the recommendation that the order for compensation should be set aside as illegal.

In addition to the authorities quoted in the order of reference there is the case of Chedi v. Ram Lal (4) in which it was held that under the provisions of s. 250, Cr. P. C., it is only the Trying Magistrate who, if he discharges an accused person, can order compensation to be paid. The phraseology of s. 250, Cr. P. C., seems to me to be perfectly clear on this point.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with s. 30 powers at Sargodha, dated the 30th August 1923.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted under ss. 304/149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Unfortunately a great deal of evidence recorded has been illegally admitted. Two medical witnesses were called for the purpose of proving the nature of the injuries received by the deceased. Instead of giving their evidence orally as they were bound in law to do, they were allowed to prove statements made at the trial of other accused persons in the absence of the present appellant. Such a mode of giving evidence is illegal for three reasons. One is that the witness has not been examined and given his evidence orally; the second is that the statement which he purports to put in evidence is not admissible under these circumstances, and thirdly, it is given in the absence of the accused. The medical evidence, therefore, is not legally before me and must be ignored. The witnesses as to the circumstances of the offence of which the appellant has been convicted have, however, proved that the appellant took a prominent part in attacking the deceased though he did not strike the first blow which felled him and which probably caused his death. A number of witnesses have deposed to an active participation by the appellant in the fracas in question and their veracity has not been impeached, the defence of the appellant being that he was not present at all on the occasion in question. Unfortunately the Magistrate, who tried the case, at the conclusion of the oral testimony of the prosecution witnesses allowed a statement made by these witnesses in a trial to which the appellant was not a party and at which he was not present, to be brought upon the record. This procedure is entirely illegal. Were there no evidence upon the record which would enable me to come to a clear finding independently of the testimony which has been illegally introduced, I should be compelled to set the present conviction aside. There is, however, as I have already said, a great deal of evidence which conclusively proves the guilt of the accused of the offence with which he has been charged. As he does not, however, appear to have struck the blow which caused the death of the deceased, and as the fracas in question appears to have been an affray in which the friends of the deceased appear to have taken a very active (though possibly not an illegal) part, inasmuch as it appears from the investigation of the record that a number of the assailant party received injuries varying in severity, I am inclined to consider that the sentence inflicted in this case is too severe. Accordingly while upholding the conviction I reduce the sentence to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment and omit the solitary confinement. Otherwise the appeal stands dismissed.

A complainant should not be burdened with costs for an adjournment occasioned by his failure to produce evidence when one of the accused also happens to be absent on that day.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Hoshiapur, with his No. 3601 dated the 26th December 1925.

FACTS.—The complainants-petitioners were ordered to pay Rs. 30 as compensation to the accused on an adjournment of the case to the 30th of September, 1925 by Sardar Gurdial Singh, Magistrate First Class, on the 3rd of September, 1925. It appears from the record that on the 3rd of September 1925 all the accused were not present, and that the Court could not in any case have proceeded. The facts are fully discussed in my order dated the 3rd of December, 1925; which is appended in original.

GROUNDS.—That as the adjournment was not due to the default of complainants-petitioners, the order for the payment of compensation should not have been passed.

Mr. N. C. Pandit, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—There can be no doubt that the complainants had committed default in producing their evidence, and that the Trial Magistrate would have been justified in ordering them to pay costs of the adjournment, had it not been for the fact that one of the accused was not present on the date in question, and that an adjournment was necessary in order to procure the attendance of the absent accused.

In these circumstances I set aside the order directing the complainants to pay Rs. 30 to the accused as costs of the adjournment.

To disbelieve defence story on the ground that it is nowhere mentioned in the Police zimnis amounts to using the zimnis in such a way as to strengthen the case for prosecution and it is against the provisions of the Cr. P. C. [p. 141, col. 2.]

If a man comes home and finds a person actually misbehaving with a relation of his, there is a provocation grave and sudden and his blood can hardly be expected to cool down in the course of a few seconds. [ibid.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 7th September 1925.

Diwan Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Harrison, J.—Dini sweeper has been found guilty in this case under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, of murdering Jowala Singh, Jat, by striking him on the head with a gandhali. The facts as found by the Sessions Judge are that this sweeper returned unexpectedly to the house, where he and his brother lived, and there found Jowala Singh with Musammat Har Kaur, his brother's wife. Jowala Singh ran away pursued by Dini, but was caught after he had run 50 karams, or about 90 yards, was struck down with a gandhali and then killed by blows on the head. The Sessions Judge has considered the question of provocation and has come to the conclusion that there was no such grave and sudden provocation as would bring the offence within the purview of the first Exception to s. 300.

The defence put forward was that the deceased died in consequence of his falling against a tree while being pursued by Dini, and we agree with the Sessions Judge in finding that this is wholly untrue, more than one blow having been struck on his head. We disagree from the Sessions Judge's finding that the weapon used was a gandhali. It is true that the evidence for the prosecution is to this effect, but it is contradicted by the medical evidence. We accept that medical evidence, which is very clear on the subject and find that the death was caused by blows with a blunt weapen and that the introduction of the gandhali is a piece of malicious exaggeration. The witnesses for the prosecution who are all Jat Sikhs, have told a story about a long standing intrigue between Jowala Singh and this sweeper woman and as suggesting further enmity the father of the deceased, Thulla Singh, P. W. No. 11, has asked us to believe that on one occasion his son who was apparently in the habit of gambling with Dini was struck by him; on a second he struck Dini, and he, Thulla Singh, went as a peacemaker and tendered Rs. 40 as blood money, which was accepted by the sweeper. This fable is a good indication of the bitter and unthinking animosity which is entertained by the witnesses for the prosecution. There is no evidence regarding the previous intimacy of Jowala Singh with this woman beyond the very vague assertion made by these interested witnesses. Their story of what happened on the fatal day is that Jowala Singh was driving his cattle home, that without any excuse or provocation of any sort Dini, advanced to meet him, and that without putting up any sort of fight he ran away was overtaken and killed. This story has not been believed by the learned Sessions Judge. On the other hand the story put forward by the defence has also been disbelieved, namely, that Dini came and found Jowala Singh actually having intercourse with his brother's wife. The reason the Sessions Judge has given for disbelieving this story is that it is no where mentioned in the zimnis. This reason amounts to making use of the zimnis in such a way as to strengthen the case for the prosecution and to show that the rival story told by the defence is untrue, a course forbidden by the provisions of the Cr. P. C. A further reason for finding that the Exception does not apply is that the chase is described as long, and presumably the hot blood of Dini should have cooled down during the long chase. The distance was 50 karams, or less than 100 yards, and if a man comes home and finds a person actually misbehaving with his relation, his blood can hardly be expected to have cooled in the course of 15 or 20 seconds.

After taking everything into account we are of opinion that it is sufficiently established that this sweeper Dini was filled with sudden rage brought about by grave and sudden provocation, that he lost his self-control and that his act in killing Jowala Singh amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

We accept the appeal in so far as to alter the conviction to one under s. 304-1, and reduce the sentence to seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

Fforde, J.—I agree.

EMPEROR THROUGH AMRITSAR POLICE —RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 109—Attempt to avoid Police patrol—Security.

An attempt to avoid a Police patrol cannot bring the case of a shop keeper residing in a town within the ambit of s. 109, Cr. P. C.

Petition, for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Amritsar, dated the 28th July 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 15th June 1925.

Mr. Devi Dayal and Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Even on the facts found, the petitioner should not have been ordered to find security under s. 109, Cr. P. C. He is a resident and shopkeeper at Amritsar and an attempt to avoid a Police patrol does not bring a person within the ambit of s. 109, Cr. P. C.

I accept the petition and discharge the petitioner from his security.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 323, 334—Blow, striking of, under provocation—Offence.

It is not correct to say that a person who strikes a blow under provocation commits no offence.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Sheikhupura, with his No. 111/12 of 1925.

FACTS.—Two constables, Bahadur Singh and Pir Shah, went to Chak No. 117 R. B. (accused's village) to see whether the people were performing ward and watch duties in the village and discovered that it was not done. They took Khazan Singh with them and went to the house of the accused's father the village chaukidar. They shouted the chaukidar to come out. His son, the accused, obeyed, but when he came out, Bahadur Singh and the accused exchanged abusive language. The accused struck Bahadur Singh with a stick. The accused was sent up to take his trial under s. 332, Indian Penal Code. The Trial Magistrate disbelieved the prosecution version that Bahadur Singh was in uniform at the time, and under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, sentenced the accused to a fine of Rs. 25 or in default to undergo one month's simple imprisonment.

GROUNDS.—Two foot constables, Bhadur Singh and Pir Shah, had gone to the accused's village to see whether the people were performing ward and watch duties. They discovered that no one was patrolling the village. They went to the house of the accused's father, who is a chaukidar of the village. It is alleged that the accused came out and after abusing the constables gave Bahadur Singh a blow of his dang which hurt Bahadur Singh.

Three witnesses have been produced in support of this story. Fazla, Wasawa Singh and Khazan Singh lambardar. Fazla and Wasawa Singh saw nothing Khazan Singh says that Bahadur Singh abused the accused and the latter struck him. This shows that even if we believe the statement of this witness, no offence has been committed because the accused struck the blow under provocation. The prosecution have entirely failed to establish any case against the accused, and he deserves acquittal.

Lala Prakash Chand, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The learned District Magistrate is in error when he says that no offence is committed by an accused person who strikes a blow under provocation. The maximum fine payable under s. 334, Indian Penal Code, is Rs. 500 and the present petitioner has been fined Rs. 25 only.

The only two witnesses who profess to have seen the incident do not establish in the accused's favour that he acted under grave and sudden provocation and the accused's story about the constable being injured by being pushed against the door is absurd.

I see no ground for interference, and dismiss the petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 520—Scope.

An order by an Appellate Court under s. 520, Cr. P. C., staying or modifying, altering or annulling an order of a Subordinate Court can be made only when the order of the subordinate Court is one relating to property and made under ss. 517, 518 or 519, Cr. P. C.

Petition for revision of an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th September 1925, reversing that of the Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, dated the 31st March 1925.

Lala Parkash Chandra, for Mr. D. N. Mehra, for the Petitioner.

Bakhshi Sain Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition concerns a child Musammat Iqbal Begam or Ghulam Fatima. Three persons, Khalil Shah, Musammat Mehr Bibi and Musammat Janat Bibi were prosecuted under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, at the instance of Siraj Din, who alleged that the girl was his daughter and had been kidnapped by the accused persons. The Magistrate who tried the case found, firstly, that Musammat Ghulam Fatima was the daughter of Siraj Din and had been kidnapped some 3½ years before the case; secondly, that Khalil Shah and Musammat Mehr Bibi were innocent persons who in good faith had received the child from the third accused Musammat Janat Bibi; and thirdly, that Musammat Janat Bibi was not proved to have kidnapped the child but that she had not been able to account for her possession of the child and that she had not come by her honestly On these findings, Khalil Shah and Musammat Mehr Bibi were discharged and Musammat Janat Bibi was acquitted, and an order was passed that the child should be returned to her parents Siraj Din and Musammat Rahim Bibi.

Khalil Shah and Musammat Mehr Bibi appealed to the Sessions Judge against the order making over the child to Siraj Din and Musammat Rahim Bibi, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge accepted the appeal and set aside the order as being without jurisdiction. Siraj Din has come to this Court with a petition for revision.

The first objection to the lower Appellate Court's order is that it itself was passed without jurisdiction, and this is quite clear. The learned Additional Sessions Judge purported to act under s. 520, but that section, on his own showing, did not apply, since the order was not one relating to property and was not passed under s. 517, 518 or 519 of the Cr. P. C. I accept the petition and set aside the order of the Additional Sessions Judge.

The question remains whether I should interfere on revision with the order of the Magistrate, but in the circumstances, I am not prepared to do so. The order was passed on the 31st March 1925 and was carried into effect immediately. The learned Session Judges's order for restoration to Khalil Shah has not been executed and there is no allegation made on behalf of Khalil Shah, who is represented before me by Counsel that the girl is being ill-treated or suffering in any way from the fact that she is in the custody of Siraj Din and his wife who claim to be her parents. Khalil Shah must in the circumstances be left to assert any rights that he may claim by an application to a Civil Court for guardianship or by such other proceedings in a Civil Court as he may be advised to institute.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 112, 115—Copy of order not sent with notice—Notice, defective—Effect.

Where it appears that the person proceeded against under s. 110, Cr. P. C., was sufficiently informed as to the allegation against him an order passed against him on such proceedings cannot be set aside on the sole ground that the provisions of ss. 112 and 115 of the Code were not strictly complied with.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No. 461-J of 2nd November 1925.

FACTS.—The applicant, Daya Ram lambardar of village Sagri, has been restricted for one year to his village under the Habitual Offenders' Act by order of the Revenue Assistant (Magistrate, First Class) Karnal. He appealed to the District Magistrate but the appeal was rejected by order dated 10th August 1925. He has now applied to this Court for revision.

GROUNDS.—The only ground for revision in which I see any force is that the notice forming the basis of the proceedings under s. 110, Cr. P. C., is defective and not valid. The substance of the charge against the applicant in the notice is given below:—

"Adi sarqa maweshi us ki shohrat kharab hai marduman us ki adat se khaif hain aur sangin jaraim karne ka adi hai-wala mal sarqa wa naqab zan waghaira hai."

The words "wala mal sarqa" are unintelligible and convey no meaning at this place. This notice should have been accompanied with a copy of the order passed by the Magistrate when starting the proceedings, as required by s. 115 of the Cr. P. C, but no such copy seems to have accompanied this notice when it was served upon the applicant. In the order dated 21st of July 1924 on which this notice was issued there is no mention of cattle lifting; while in the notice the words "sarqa maweshi" indicate that he is charged also with theft of cattle. The order is very vague and indefinite and does not comply with the provisions of s. 112 of the Cr. P. C. What the contents of the order should be is described in detail in In re Kutti Goundan (1) which is cited by the applicant's Counsel. The Magistrate's non-compliance with the law contained in ss. 112 and 115 of the Cr. P. C. vitiates the trial.

The proceedings are, therefore, submitted to the High Court for revision with a recommendation that the order restricting the applicant be set aside and a new trial ordered after issue of a proper notice.

Lala Parkash Chand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Crown.

ORDER.—It seems to me clear that Daya Ram was sufficiently informed as to what the allegation against him was, and I decline to interfere. Let the records be returned.

MOHNA—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 345—Compromise with some of several accused—Effect on others.

The compounding of an offence with some of the accused does not effect the acquittal of the rest.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Amritsar, with his No. 252, dated the 19th January 1926.

GROUNDS.—Harnam Singh, Tahal Singh, Chanchal Singh and Sunder Singh were convicted of an offence under ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code. Mohna was an absconder in this case. On appeal in the Sessions Court a compromise under s. 345 Cr. P. C., was permitted by the Sessions Judge, between the injured party Bakshish Singh and the four convict-appellants. This compromise did not include and was not made with Mohna, absconder. The four appellants were acquitted. After this Mohna surrendered himself and was put on his trial. The Magistrate has acquitted him on the strength of Chandra Kumar Das v. Emperor (1). This ruling is out of date. A compromise only involves the acquittal of those with whom the compromise is made. The Magistrate's order is since the revision of the Cr. P. C. by Act XVIII of 1923 absolutely wrong in law.

ORDER.—The compounding of an offence with one or more of several accused persons has not the effect of acquittal in respect of the remaining accused between whom and the complainant no composition has been arrived at. This was the view adopted by this Court, and the matter has now been set at rest by the amendment of s. 345, Cr. P. C., by the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

I accordingly accept the recommendation made by the District Magistrate and setting the order of the Court of first instance direct that the accused be tried in accordance with law.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal—Copy of decree essential—Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 26—District Judge's award, whether decree—Two appeals against same decree—Decree filed only in one appeal, whether sufficient for other appeal.

As under s. 26 of the Land Acquisition Act the award of a District Judge contains both a decree and a judgment and as it is essential that a copy of the decree appealed against should accompany memorandum of appeal, an appeal against the award is not properly filed without this memorandum. Therefore, where two appeals are filed by the same Vakil on the same day and from the same award of a District Judge, it is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. XLI, r. 1, C. P. C., if instead of filing a copy of the award with the memorandum of each appeal it is filed only with one of them and a note is made on the other to the effect that the award has been filed with the other appeal.

Rijan Thakur v. Charitar Thakur, 69 Ind. Cas. 686; 1 Pat. 670; A. I. R. 1992 Pat. 580; 4 P. L. T. 290, referred to.

Dr. Sir Mian Muhammad Shafi, Kt., and Mr. Rafi, for the Appellant.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals by the same appellants as in Civil Appeals Nos. 2939 and 2940 of 1922 disposed of by us to-day.

They are from an award of the District Judge upon a reference by the Collector under the Land Acquisition Act, and relate to a subsequent acquisition of land made in pursuance of the notification dated the 23rd of February 1922.

The land in dispute in the present appeals is situated between that in dispute in the other appeals and Waris Road. The land of Hakim Muhammad Sharif in the present case is only 7/8ths of 1 kanal 3 marlas, in other words about 1 kanal; that of Sayad Mubarak Ali Shah is about 11 kanals. The appellants have been awarded Rs. 2,000 per kanal whereas Bashir Ahmad, whose land is immediately on Waris Road, has been awarded Rs. 2,500 per kanal. As regards the appeal of Sayad Mubarak Ali Shah, a preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Government Advocate to the effect that no copy of the award of the District Judge has been filed along with the appeal. Under s. 26 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended in 1921, the award of a District Judge shall be deemed to be a decree and the reasons for the award to be a judgment, within the meaning of the C. P. C. The award of the District Judge, therefore, from which these appeals have been brought contains both the decree and the judgment. In O. XLI, r. 1 of the C. P. C., it is laid down that "Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his Pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf. The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the Appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded." It is, therefore, essential that a copy of the decree appealed from shall accompany the memorandum of appeal. It cannot be dispensed with whereas a copy of the judgment may be dispensed with if the Court so directs.

The answer to this objection by Mr. Rafi, on behalf of Mubarak Ali Shah, is that both his appeal and that of Hakim Muhammad Sharif were filed on the same day by the same Vakil and that to Sayad Mubarak Ali Shah's appeal the following note was appended: "a copy of the lower Court's order and of award of the Acquisition Officer has been filed with the appeal in re Hakim Muhammad Sharif v. Secretary of State, filed to-day." He, therefore, urges that there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of O. XLI, r. 1, of the C. P. C.

In Rijan Thakur v. Charitar Thakur (1) separate appeals were preferred by different appellants from the same decision and it was held that each must be accompanied by a copy of the judgment unless the High Court dispensed with it. There was nothing said in that case about the High Court having any power to dispense with a copy of the decree. The case reported as Muhammad Din v. Zeb-un-Nisa (2) was one in which the Court held that, "the appeal had not been properly filed within the provisions of O XLI, r. 1 of the C. P. C., as the memorandum of appeal was not accompanied by a copy of the decree." A similar case was that reported as Qasim Ali Khan v. Bhagwanta Kuar (3).

(1) 69 Ind. Cas. 686; 1 Pat. 670; A. I. R. 1922 Pat 580; 4 P. L. T. 290

(2) 77 Ind. Cas. 541; 3 L. 215; A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 390

The references were no doubt heard together and disposed of by one judgment, but they were separate references under the Land Acquisition Act and the appeals were quite distinct. It was absolutely essential that a copy of the decree should accompany each memorandum of appeal, and the Appellate Court has, in our opinion, no power to dispense with such a copy. We, therefore, consider that the objection to Sayad Mubarak Ali Shah's appeal has force and that there is no properly filed appeal before the Court.

As regards Hakim Muhammad Sharif's appeal, we have mentioned already that the plot of land is only 1 kanal in area and it is quite unsuitable as a building site. Moreover, in the other case, he has been awarded compensation for severance from land, there acquired from his other land. We, therefore, do not consider that he is entitled to anything more than he has been awarded and we dismiss both the appeals with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 38, 41—Decree transferred for execution—Re-call by Court transferring.

A Court can make an order withdrawing its own decree which it has transferred to another Court for execution. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Mirza.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On September 10, 1925, an order was made in Chambers on the application of the Official Assignee, in whom had vested by virtue of an order made under s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, all the estate and property of a certain insolvent Mulchand Ratanchand, that the Prothonotary should withdraw without execution the decree of the High Court in Suit No. 1755 of 1922 in favour of one Chandulal Hathibhai against the insolvent, dated June 13, 1922, which had been transmitted by this Court for execution to the Political Agent at Sadra in Mahikantha Agency on June 5, 1923.

The decree-holder then filed an application that this ex parte order should be vacated, and the Judge after hearing arguments directed that the order should be vacated, and that the Official Assignee should pay the applicant's costs.

We cannot agree with that order. The property of an insolvent, who has been adjudicated under an order of this Court under s. 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, vests in the Official Assignee wherever it may be situated. It is an entirely different question, with which this Court is not at present concerned, whether the Official Assignee will be able to get possession of the property so vested in him if it is situated outside British India. The fact remains that according to the law of this country in which the insolvency petition rests, all the insolvent's property belongs to the Official Assignee. But whether the property vests or not, it is perfectly clear that under s. 53 of the Act this Court was entitled, and was bound, on the application of the Official Assignee, to withdraw any attachment already levied by it on the insolvent's property. The section runs thus:

"Where execution of a decree has issued against the property of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Official Assignee, except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication and before he had notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor."

So that if a person is adjudicated insolvent in this Court there can be no doubt that this Court, subject to the exceptions mentioned in the section, must raise any attachment issued by itself against his property, on the application of the Official Assignee, and whether the property of the insolvent outside British India vests or not, this Court cannot allow any creditor of the insolvent to take advantage of attachment proceedings resting in this Court as against the Official Assignee.

It was conceded before the learned Judge that as the decree was a decree of this Court, although it was transmitted for execution under an order of this Court to be executed by another Court, still that order could be withdrawn at any time by this Court on any legal or equitable ground. That was a very wise concession to make, because it contained a perfectly correct exposition of the law applicable to the case. Unfortunately the appellant in this Court was advised to retract what was previously conceded. It is true that under s. 41 of the Code, a Court to which a decree is sent for execution shall certify to the Court which passed it the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same, the circumstances attending such failure. But it cannot possibly be deduced from the provisions of that section that once the Court which originally passed the decree has sent it for execution to another Court, it has no power to order that the decree be returned. For instance, if the decree had been satisfied elsewhere, and the judgment-debtor informed the Court which passed the decree and asked that execution proceedings in the Court to which the decree had been sent should be stayed and the decree returned, it is clear that the Court could make an order withdrawing its own decree from the Court to which it has been sent. In any circumstances, the Court which makes an order transferring its decree for execution to another Court, must also have the power to bring the decree back. The points raised by Counsel for the respondent applicant must be decided against him, and the appeal must be allowed with costs throughout. Costs to include costs of the Rule. Order of September 10 restored.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—Appeals Nos. 358 and 359 are by the defendants. In the suits out of which these appeals arise, namely, 484 and 485...the plaintiff sued for recovery of khas possession of certain land on declaration of his title thereto. The plaintiff based his title on a purchase in the year 1911 in execution of a money decree against two persons Rati Kanta and Kshetra, the purchas being of a jama which these two persons held under the zemindar. The defence in these suits was that in the year 1915 the zemindar had brought a rent suit against Rati Kanta and Kshetra the recorded tenants and brought the tenure to sale and himself purchased it thereafter settling it with the defendants. In the year 1911 sale it was not expressly stated that the property was a tenure and it appears that no landlord's fee was paid and no notice was given to the landlord under the provisions of s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under these circumstances it is urged before us in this appeal that the title which the defendants obtained by a settlement from the landlord in 1915 should prevail against the prior purchase of the plaintiff in 1911, the suggestion being that as the landlord's fee was not paid and the notice was not given, the tenure did not pass at the sale in 1911. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that in 1911 there had been no sale of the tenure as the landlord's fee had not been paid and the notice had not been served. The second Court held agreeing with the first Court that the property was a tenure but held that the fact that the fee was not paid and the notice was not given did not affect the passing of the tenure and that accordingly the plaintiff's right by virtue of his purchase in 1911 prevailed over the subsequent purchase in 1915. So far as the question of non-payment of the landlord's fee is concerned this point is clearly unarguable having regard to the provisions of Bengal Council Act I of 1903. Section 1 of the Act provides that no transfer which has heretofore been made or which may hereinafter be made under inter alia s. 13 of a permanent tenure shall be deemed to be invalid merely on the ground that the landlord's fee prescribed by the section has not been paid. But it is stated that notwithstanding this provision the failure to serve the notice brings about the result that the tenure has not passed. Now turning to s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it seems to me that the payment of the landlord's fee and the payment of the fee for service of notice are really one and the same transaction and I think that it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature to provide that the mere failure to serve the notice has the effect of invalidating the sale of the tenure. I think, therefore, for these reasons that the point raised in the appeal is not a good one and that the mere failure to serve the notice in 1911 and to pay the landlord's fee did not affect the passing of the tenure at the sale in 1911 that being so the landlord's purchase in 1915 can have no effect and with it must fail the settlement of the defendants by him as tenants on the land.

The other appeal which is before us No. 2316 of 1923 must also be dismissed having regard to the decision just given in the other appeals. In the result, these appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. We fix the hearing fees at two gold mohurs for the two miscellaneous appeals.

Lala Har Bhajan Das, for the Appellant.
Lala Ganga Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this second appeal are Muhammadan Jats. There were two brothers Sattar and Barkhurdar. Sattar died leaving several daughters and was succeeded by his brother Barkhurdar. Barkhurdar then died childless and in 1913 he was succeeded by Musammat Umran and Musammat Amir Bibi two of the daughters of his brother Sattar who predeceased him. No share was given to the sons of a third daughter Musammat Bhagan who had died during the lifetime of Barkhurdar. It would seem that they did not come forward at that time to claim any share. Then in 1917 Musammat Amir Bibi died and was succeeded by her two daughters, Musammat Karam Bibi and Musammat Hayat Bibi. In 1919 Musammat Umran instituted a suit against these two daughters, of Musammat Amir Bibi claiming that she was entitled to all the land left by Barkhurdar. This suit was dismissed in June 1922. Then on the 21st December 1922 the son and grandsons of Musammat Bhagan, who were given nothing in 1913, sued for possession of one-third of the land left by Barkhurdar on the ground that they were heirs along with Musammat Umran and Musammat Amir Bibi. In April 1923 Musammat Umran brought a second suit again claiming that she alone was entitled to succeed to Barkhurdar. Her suit was tried along with the suit brought by the descendants of Musammat Bhagan. Musammat Umran's suit was dismissed and the suit brought by the descendants of Musammat Bhagan was decreed. On appeal to the Additional District Judge he held that there was no provision in Customary Law recognising a right of inheritance in favour of the descendants of daughters of a brother of the last male proprietor, i. e., he held that none of the daughters of Sattar were entitled to succeed under Customary Law. He, therefore, accepted the appeals before him and dismissed the suit of the descendants of Musammat Bhagan as they had not established that by custom they were entitled to succeed to Barkhurdar, while they were not heirs under Muhammadan Law. Against this decision these second appeals have been filed.

It has been clearly held in Dalipa v. Dallu (1) that in that case it had not been established that by custom a brother's daughter had a right of succession in the absence of all male collaterals and that it was outside the province of the Court to extend custom by the process of deduction from the principles which seem to underlie customs which have been definitely established. In the present case there is no evidence on Issue No. 8 whether Musammat Bhagan's descendants were entitled to succeed to one-third of the land though she died in the lifetime of Barkhurdar. Further, it was held in Tabi v. Saudagar Singh (2) that among parties generally following Customary Law it was permissible to fall back as a last resort on their personal law for the decision of a point on which no definite rule of custom applicable could be found. Now, under Muhammadan Law which is the personal law of the parties it was admitted that Musammat Amir Bibi and Musammat Umran would certainly have succeeded to Bakhurdar's estate and would have excluded Musammat Bhagan's descendants, and this was what actually happened in 1913, no objection being taken to this till 1922.

Appellants' Counsel, however, referred me to Gobinda v. Nandu (3) where it was held that there was no reason for holding that custom excluded a daughter's son from inheritance on the ground of his mother having predeceased her father. In that case, however, there was no dispute between the daughter's son and a daughter who was living at the time when the succession opened out. In that case also the personal law of the parties was the Hindu Law.

In my judgment, therefore, the descendants of Musammat Bhagan failed to prove that they were entitled by custom to succeed to one-third of the land left by Barkhurdar. The defendants clearly pleaded that they were the heirs both by custom and by law. It is clear that they are not the heirs by custom, but as shown above they are entitled to fall back on their personal law under which the descendants of Musammat Bhagan are not entitled to succeed. The decision of the learned Additional Judge of Lahore is, therefore, correct and I dismiss both these appeals with costs.

NOWROJI PUDUMJI SIRDAR—APPELLANT
KANGA & SAYANI—RESPONDENT.

Bombay High Court, Original Side Rule 494—Bombay Pleaders Act (XVII of 1920)—Attorney—Taxation of bill for work done as Pleader in mofussil—Work done on appellate side of High Court—Taxation of bill.

Before the operation of Bombay Pleaders Act, 1920, a Solicitor would be entitled to have his bill for professional work done in the mofussil taxed by the Taxing Master on the original side of the High Court. But a bill for the work done on the appellate side of the High Court could not be so taxed.

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Mirza.

Mr Kanga, Advocate-General, (with him Mr. Tendulkar), for the Appellant.

Mr. B. J. Desai, (with him Mr. Coltman), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Messrs. Kanga and Sayani, a firm of Solicitors practising in Bombay, obtained an order on November 26, 1924, that the Taxing Master of this Court should tax the applicant's bill of costs, charges and expenses between attorney and client in the matter of professional services rendered by them to Sirdar Nowroji Pudumji. The bills were very numerous. It is conceded that any bills lodged according to that order which were connected with work done by members of the Solicitors' firm who happened to be Pleaders, on the appellate side of the High Court, would have to be excluded. The remaining bills mostly deal with work done by Messrs. Kanga and Sayani for the opponent in the Mofussil Courts.

On September 28, 1925, the opponent took out a summons against Messrs. Kanga and Sayani for an order that the Taxing Master should not proceed with the taxing of the bills referred to in the summons. The chief ground on which the summons was taken out was that the bills were in respect of work which had nothing to do with the original side of the High Court. And it was also contended that when Mr. Kanga, one of the partners of Messrs. Kanga and Sayani, rendered professional services in the Poona Court, he did so as a Pleader, and not as a member of a Solicitors' firm.

We see no reason why a Solicitor practising in Bombay and performing professional services for a client regarding business in the mofussil, should not be entitled to send a bill to his client for such professional services, and if the client declines to pay, why he should not be entitled to come to the Court and ask for a common order to get the bills taxed by the Taxing Master. It may be that hereafer attorneys will come within the provisions of the Bombay Pleaders Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1920) with regard to any work done in the Mofussil Courts. We are not concerned with that Act at present, as the work for which the respondents are charging was done before that Act came into force. Nor are we now concerned with the difficulties which may arise when the Taxing Master is taxing the bills. We need only say we think that r. 494 justified the order made on the Taxing Master to tax the bills of Messrs. Kanga and Sayani excluding those relating to work done on the appellate side of the High Court. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. No order as to costs of the summons.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS No. 405 OF 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

In the matter of THE INDIAN INCOME TAX ACT, 1922

AND

In the matter of AN APPLICATION BY MESSRS. KESRI DAS AND SONS UNDER s. 66 (2) OF THE SAID ACT.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 13 proviso, 22 (4), 23 (2)—Returns by assessee incomplete or incorrect—Procedure in assessment.

When a return furnished by an assessee in compliance with a notice under s. 22 (4) of the Income Tax Act, is found by the Income Tax Officer to be incorrect, the proper procedure for him is not to compute the income as he thinks fit but to serve the assessee with a notice under s. 23 (2) requiring him on a date to be specified therein, either to attend at the Income Tax Officer's Office or to produce or to cause to be produced any evidence on which he intends relying in support of his return. Non-compliance with this procedure makes an assessment illegal. [p. 151, col. 1.]

Proviso to s. 13, Income Tax Act, applies only where no method of accounting has been regularly employed or where the method employed is such that in the opinion of the Income Tax Officer, the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom. [ibid.]

Mr. C. H. Oertel, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The petitioners manufacture and sell aerated waters and carry on a grocery business. They furnished a return of their income for the year 1922-1923 and produced their accounts The Income Tax Officer in an order of the 20th October 1923 said that no regular accounts were produced and that it was doubtful whether those seen by the Inspector were genuine, and remarking that the business was prosperous and profitable he proceeded to give an estimate, not based on any evidence, of the sales and profits, as well as of the income derived from the rest of the petitioners' house property, considerably in excess of the figures stated in the petitioners' return; he assessed the total income at Rs. 22,000. On appeal the Assistant Commissioner allowed an additional Rs. 2,000 for the cost of the petitioners' establishment, but otherwise upheld the order of the Income Tax Officer. The petitioners then applied to the Commissioner to refer certain questions of law to this Court. The application was rejected, but this Court on being moved by the assessees under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act, directed the Commissioner to state the case, and a reference has now been made by him in accordance with that direction.

The learned Commissioner has dealt at considerable length with the various points eight in number mentioned by the petitioners in their application to him. We think it is unnecessary to enumerate them or to discuss them in detail. The only real question for decision is whether after the petitioners had furnished a return of their income and had produced their accounts in compliance with a notice under s. 22 (4) of the Act, the Income Tax Officer, when not satisfied that the accounts were correct, was justified in computing the income in such a manner as he thought fit. In support of the Income Tax Officer's order the learned Commissioner relies upon the proviso to s. 13, but that proviso applies only where no method of accounting has been regularly employed or where the method employed is such that in the opinion of the Income Tax Officer the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom. The Income Tax Officer, in his order assessing the petitioners, said nothing about the method of accounting employed by them, but expressed a doubt, for which he gave no reasons, as to the genuineness of their accounts. Section 13, therefore, has no application at all, but the section applicable is s. 23 (2), which requires the Income Tax Officer, if he has reason to believe that the return made is incorrect or incomplete, to serve on the person who made the return a notice requiring him, on a date to be therein specified, either to attend at the Income Tax Officer's Office or to produce or to cause to be produced any evidence on which such person may rely in support of the return. In this case the Income Tax Officer did not serve such a notice on the petitioners, nor does he appear to have pointed out to them any defects or irregularities in the accounts so that they might be able to explain them, but he made a purely arbitrary assessment without having given them an opportunity of supporting the return which they had furnished.

Such an assessment was, in our opinion, illegal and we answer the question of law above stated in the negative and direct that the petitioners be paid their costs by the Crown.

R. L. Order accordingly.

KARUMANCHI KOTTAYA—PLANTIFF—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144, O. IX —Dismissal of suit in default—Application for restoration also dismissed in default—Application to restore application, whether maintainable.

An application under O. IX, C. P. C., to set aside an order of dismissal of a suit in default, is not an application in suit but is an independant one coming under s. 141, C. P. C. Such an application, therefore, is covered by O. IX and can be restored under that order if dismissed in default.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 23rd November 1924, of the Court of the District Munsif, Batatla, in I. A. No 1711 of 1924 in O. S. No. 73 of 1923.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. Lakshmanna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Waller, J.—The facts are these. Respondent's suit was dismissed for default. He applied to have it restored under O. IX, Sch. I, C. P. C., and that application also was dismissed for default. He then applied again under O. IX to have the application restored and it was restored. The other party comes up in revision on the ground that the provisions of O. IX, do not govern applications made under the order itself.

Authority on the point is divided. The Calcutta High Court has held one way [Bepin Behari Saha v. Abdul Barik (1)] the Patna High Court the other [Ramgulam Singh v. Sheo Deonarain Singh (2)] Phillips, J., in a case exactly parallel to this has recently followed the Calcutta view [Venkata Narasimha Rao v. Hemadu Suryanarayana (3)]. In Kalliakkal v. Palani Koundan (4), Devadoss, J., and I held that O. IX, does not apply to proceedings in execution of decrees. It is now argued that we stated the proposition too widely, in other words, that all that was laid down in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (5) was that O. IX did not apply to execution petitions. If, however, it does not apply to the petitions themselves, it is difficult to see how it can apply to applications incidental to and arising out of them.

What we are now considering is a different point. No doubt, the Privy Council decision is open to a limited construction, but what obviously was intended to be excluded by the Legislature from the operation of s. 141, C. P. C., was any proceeding in a suit. This is shown by the explanation added to s. 647 by Act VI of 1892. As pointed out by Phillips, J., the proceeding we are dealing with is not a proceeding in a suit, for the suit has been dismissed. I would follow his decision and dismiss the petition with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—The decision of Phillips, J., in Venkata Narasimha Rao v. Hemadu Suryanarayana (3) on identical facts covers the present case. I also would follow that decision and dismiss this petition with costs.

Where there are several mortgages on a property the owner of the property may, if he pays off an earlier mortgage, keep it alive for his benefit and come in before the later mortgagee In the absence of an indication to the contrary, it is to be presumed that the owner intends to keep alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit.

Where the earlier mortgage-deed paid off by the owner contains a clause by which the mortgagee is entitled to be re-imbursed at the time of redemption for any expenditure incurred by him during the currency of the mortgage, the owner is entitled to the benefit of that condition and the sum which he spent on improving the property must be allowed as a prior charge.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 7th January 1925, setting aside that of the First Class Senior Sub-Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 29th August 1924.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. C. Narang and Lala Amar Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Five shops belonging to Jodh Singh, defendant No. 1 and his brother Rattan Singh were mortgaged by them in 1917 to Maya Ram with possession for Rs. 3,000. In 1918 Jodh Singh mortgaged his ½ share to the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title for Rs. 900. No mention was made in the second mortgage-deed of the prior mortgage. In 1920, Jodh Singh and Rattan Singh sold the shops to the 2nd defendant, Mahal Singh for Rs. 3,000. The mortgage to Maya Ram was mentioned in the sale-deed, but not the mortgage to the plaintiffs. The latter have now sued on their mortgage-deed for the recovery of the amount due to them by the sale of half of the mortgaged property and have been given a decree.

Mahal Singh had after his purchase paid to Maya Ram, the amount due on his mortgage, namely, Rs. 3,299-6-0, and made improvements in the property on which it has been found that he spent Rs. 2,626, and he claimed to be entitled to a prior charge in respect of half of each of these sums. The Trial Court held that he was entitled to priority in respect of both items, but the lower Appellate Court has held that he has a prior charge only in respect of the payment made to Maya Ram. He has filed a second appeal and the plaintiffs have lodged cross-objections.

In Malireddi Ayyareddi v. Adusumilli Gopalakrishnayya (1), it was held by the Privy Council that where there are severel mortgages on a property the owner of the property may, if he pays off an earlier mortgage, keep it alive for his benefit and then come in before the later mortgagee. It was also held that in the absence of an indication to the contrary it is to be presumed that the owner intended to keep alive the previous charge, if it would be for his benefit, and the same principle has been laid down in other decisions of the Privy Council reported as Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (2) and Dinobundhu Shaw Chowdhury v. Jogmaya Dasi (3) and Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (4). We agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court that the appellant must be taken to have intended to keep the mortgage in favour of Maya Ram alive for his benefit, there being nothing to show the contrary, and that he is entitled to priority in respect of the sum which he paid to Maya Ram on account of Jodh Singh's share.

With regard to the expenditure on improvements, it is to be observed that Maya Ram's mortgage-deed contained a clause by which he was to be re-imbursed at the time of redemption for any expenditure incurred by him during the currency of the mortgage. The appellant, who on payment of the amount due to Maya Ram stood in the latter's shoes, is entitled to the benefit of that condition and the sum which he spent on improving the property must be allowed as a prior charge.

We accordingly dismiss the cross-objections and accepting the appeal, we set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Trial Court. The plaintiffs will pay the appellant's costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the Trial Court will be paid as directed by that Court.

ANANDRAO BHICAJI SABNIS—PLAINTIFF

NAPU PATRAMUL—DEFENDANT.

Attorney—Costs, charging order for—Decree-holder's claim—Priority.

The attorney's right to a lien for his costs is ancillary to the right he has of recovering his costs against his client. Where the attorney is unable to show that he cannot get payment from his client where others besides the client are interested in the fund, the Court would not exercise its discretion in favour of attorney against the other parties so interested. [p. 155, col. 1.]

Mr. Judah, for the Applicants.

Mr. Jinnah, for the Plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants by this summons ask for a declaration that they are entitled to a charge to the extent of Rs. 3,600 on a sum of Rs. 1,715-8-4 and on another sum of Rs. 2,226-6-0 which sums are directed to be paid to the 1st defendant by the 2nd defendant and the plaintiff respectively by a decree of this Court. The applicants are attorneys of this Court and represented both defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the proceedings which terminated in an order in favour of their client defendant No. 1. The applicants estimate their costs against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 jointly to amount to Rs. 7,000. They have already received from defendant No. 2 a sum of Rs. 3,400 by way of advances and are now seeking to secure themselves for the payment of the balance of costs due to them by obtaining a charging order on the amounts payable under the decree to the 1st defendant by defendant No. 2 and by the plaintiff respectively. The plaintiff is a decree-holder against the 1st defendant in Suit No. 1447 of 1914. He has attached the decree in favour of the 1st defendant against defendant No. 2 and claims to set off against his own decree the amount awarded to defendant No. 1 against him in the present suit. He has not attached the decree of defendant No. 1 against himself. The applicants claim priority against the plaintiff.

This was a partnership action filed by the plaintiff against the defendants for dissolution of a partnership between them and for the usual partnership accounts. By a decretal order of reference dated April 13, 1917, the matter was referred to the Commissioner of this Court. On April 1, 1925, the Commissioner made his report whereby he found that a sum of Rs. 3,627-9-4 was due to the 1st defendent in respect of his one-third share in the said partnership. The Commissioner further found that a sum of Rs. 3,181-4-4 was due to the 2nd defendant in respect of his one-third share in the partnership. The Commissioner found also that the plaintiff had overdrawn his share and was liable to refund Rs. 2,540-10-8. The Commissioner further found that the 2nd defendant had in his hands on behalf of the partnership a sum of Rs. 4,271-3-0. The plaintiff filed exceptions to the Commissioner's report. His exceptions were allowed in respect of two items thereby decreasing his liability by a sum of about Rs. 900. The final decree was made on July 20, 1925, but as the decree drawn up was not in accordance with the judgment, the decree as drawn up and sealed was rectified by an order dated September 7, 1925. The decree as finally drawn up and rectified provided that the 2nd defendant do receive out of Rs. 5,214-1-6 then in his hands Rs. 3,498-9-2 in payment of the balance of his one-third share and do pay the balance of Rs. 1,715-8-4 to the 1st defendant on account of his one-third share. The decree further provided that the plaintiff do pay to the 1st defendant Rs. 2,225-5-0 for the balance of his share. The decree further directed that in the event of there being no assets of the partnership to pay the costs of the action, the plaintiff, the 1st and the 2nd defendants do each pay a one-third equal share of the costs. The increased figures in the final decree are due to the addition of interest subsequent to the Commissioner's findings.

The usual order for costs in a partnership action is to make the costs of all parties come out of the partnership assets. It is common ground here that the partnership had no assets beyond the moneys in the hands of the defendant No. 2 and what the plaintiff owed to it in respect of his overdrawn share. The intention of the decree, in my opinion, was that costs should be paid out of the partnership assets but it has been cumbrously expressed. Instead of adopting the course of ordering the plaintiff to refund to the partnership the amount he had overdrawn and ordering the 2nd defendant to refund to the partnership the amount in his hand so as to put all the partners on an equal footing, the decree provided that defendant No. 2 should pay over to the defendant No. 1 the balance of the fund in his hands after deducting therefrom what was due to himself for his own share, and that the deficit due to defendant No. 1 should be made good by the plaintiff paying over to him direct the amount which he owed to the partnership. Costs of all parties would then be pooled up and each partner would pay an equal one-third part of such costs. By adopting this method the result would be the same as if costs were originally paid out of the partnership assets and distribution had taken place afterwards. In the event of the assets being found insufficient to pay up all the costs, the partners would be personally liable for the balance in equal shares. Had the usual course been followed of ordering costs out of the partnership assets, defendant No. 1 would not receive the two sums mentioned under the decree but they would in the first instance be appropriated towards payment of the costs of the partnership action.

The plaintiff contends that defendant No. 2 is a substantial party and that the applicants can recover from him all the costs due to them jointly from defendents Nos. 1 and

2. It is common ground that defendant No. 1 has no moneys beyond the sums ordered to be paid to him under the decree. The plaintiff further contends that the applicants are not acting bona fide but have adopted these proceedings at the instance of defendant No. 2 in order to minimise the liability of defendant No. 2 to them in respect of costs. The applicants took out this summons after they were apprised of the plaintiff's intention to attach these moneys in the hands of the 2nd defendant by the plaintiff's attorney's letter dated September 17, 1925, annexed to the affidavit of Doraswami Naidu in support of the summons. The attachment was levied on Septemer 30, 1925, and the summons was obtained on October 2, 1925.

The two sums of money sought to be charged in favour of the applicants were obtained by the applicants' exertions and ordinarily they would be entitled to a lien or charge on these moneys in preference to other creditors The order giving such a charge no doubt is not ex debito justitiæ but purely discretionary. Such discretion, however, is usually exercised by the Courts in favour of attorneys. The attorney's right to a lien for his costs is ancillary to the right he has of recovering his costs against his client Where the attorney is unable to show that he cannot get payment from his client where others beside the client are interested in the fund, the Court would not exercise its discretion in favour of the attorney against the other parties so interested. In the case of Harrison v. Cornwall Minerals Railway Co. (1) the Court disallowed the attorney's application for a charge on a fund where the clients were able to pay their costs as between attorney and client but had desired the attorney to obtain them out of a fund in which others were interested in order to minimise their own liability. Under the circumstances the Court considered the attorney's application not to be bona fide and, therefore, disallowed it. In the present case it would appear that the 1st defendant is unable to pay any part of the costs due to the applicants. He has so far paid them nothing by way of advances. All the costs so far paid to the applicants are paid to them by the 2nd defendant. There is no evidence before me that the present application is instigated by the 2nd defendant. In para. 2 of his affidavit Mr. Paruck states:—"After this notice was served the summons has been taken out by the plaintiff's attorneys to thwart the execution proceedings." In para. 3 Mr. Paruck states:—"The 2nd defendant ..is able to pay the full amount of the costs of the applicants." No affidavit in rejoinder is filed and these statements are not controverted.

On the materials before me, if the plaintiff were an outsider who had attached the decree in favour of defendant No. 1 bona fide, I would be inclined to refuse a charging order giving priority to the applicants to his detriment. The applicants have not satisfied me that they would be unable to recover the balance of their costs from the 2nd defendant and that unless I made the order they are seeking, those costs would be irretrievably lost to them. The plaintiff is interested in the fund inasmuch as he is a decree-holder in another suit and has the right to attach the amount. But I cannot overlook the fact that the plaintiff is a party to the present decree which is binding upon him. The terms of the decree, to my mind, are clear that the costs of the suit should be paid in equal shares by each of the three partners. The plaintiff cannot seek indirectly to throw the burden of costs coming to the share of the 1st defendant upon the 2nd defendant. The defendants are jointly and severally liable for costs to the applicants. If the applicants are seeking to divide the burden equally between the two, that, in my opinion, would not be a sufficient reason, in the circumstances of the present case, to induce the Court to refuse them a charging order in priorty to the plaintiff's attachment on a decree in favour of their client obtained through their exertion.

It has been well said that equality is equity. I see nothing mala fide or wrong in the conduct of the attorneys in asking for the order. The summons, in my opinion, asks for too wide an order in favour of the applicants. If there are other attaching creditors of the 1st defendant against the decree their claims will not be affected by the order which I propose to pass. Under the decree the plaintiff would probably be entitled to some contribution towards the costs of his attorneys from defendant No. 1. Were he to ask for a charging order in respect of those costs it will be open to him to apply that the applicants' lien should not be allowed to prevail against that claim.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 22—Assessment—Procedure.

An Income Tax Officer should be governed in his procedure by judicial considerations. He should base his assessment on legal and not on mere hearsay evidence.

Reference made by the Commissioner of Income Tax, under s. 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1922.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Carden Noad, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is a Reference by the Commissioner of Income Tax, under s. 66 of the Income Tax Act of 1922.

The assessee was originally assessed on an income of Rs. 12,000 which, on appeal, was reduced to Rs. 7,220 and on review by the Commissioner to Rs. 4,500.

We agree with the petitioner that the Income Tax Officer should be governed in his procedure by judicial considerations. He should base his assessment on legal and not mere hearsay evidence, which may be the evidence of his officers or of members of the public, but without evidence that items which do not appear in an account should find a place therein, he is not entitled to assume on mere general hearsay that those items should appear in the account.

Should he, however, find on good evidence that even one substantial item is missing, he would be entitled to treat the whole account as unreliable.

In this case, we find it unnecessary to express our views more specifically for we see that the final assessment was made on the admission of the assessee, and also that the Commissioner holds, as a fact, that the assessee refused a notice under s. 23 (2) to appear and meet the criticisms levelled against his accounts.

Petitioner shall pay the costs of this hearing.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 111 (h), 113—Rent, receipt of, after notice to quit—Waiver of notice.

Where rent is accepted after the notice to quit, whether before or after a suit has been filed, the landlord thereby shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and there is a waiver of the notice to quit. [p. 157, col. 1.]

Mr. B. N. Ghose, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. N. Kanjilal, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover possession from the defendant of the premises No. 16, Prem Chand Boral Street and for damages at the rate of Rs. 130 a month.

The plaintiff is a tenant from the superior landlord of the premises in question and the defendant is his sub-tenant. The case made in the plaint is that on the 11th June 1924 the sub-tenant was given notice to vacate premises on 17th July 1924. The defendant failed to vacate the premises and the suit was filed on 28th August 1924.

The facts are admitted. The defendant has paid Rs. 130 a month, month by month to the Rent Controller. No question arises under the Calcutta Rent Act and whether this is the proper amount payable as rent is immaterial. Subsequently and after the suit had been filed, the plaintiff withdrew from the Rent Controller the money so deposited by the defendant. The whole point in the case is whether or not by withdrawing from the Rent Controller the amount so deposited, the notice to quit has been waived.

It was also suggested by learned Counsel for the plaintiff that as his client had alleged in the plaint that the defendant was a woman of the town and had been using the premises for immoral purposes and as this is admitted by the defendant there was no contract at all as the contract was void under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act. But that is not the case with which the plaintiff came to Court and, in my opinion, he is not entitled to make it upon his plaint. The only question, therefore, is that which I have already stated as to whether or not the notice to quit has been waived.

Section 113 of the Transfer of Property Act deals with this point. It provides that notice given under s. 111 cl. (h) which is applicable to the notice given in this case is waived by any act on the part of the person giving it showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. Had rent been withdrawn from the Rent Controller prior to the filing of the suit there could be no question that this section would operate and that there would be a waiver of the notice to quit.

It is however argued that inasmuch as the money was withdrawn from the Rent Controller after the suit had been filed there was no waiver. Now under s. 112 which deals with a similar position in connection with forfeiture under s. 111 (g) it is expressly provided that where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture such acceptance is not a waiver.

It is argued by analogy that in the circumstances there is no waiver. To that I think the answer is that where rent is accepted after the notice to quit whether before or after a suit has been filed the landlord thereby shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting. One cannot logically say that the fact of accepting rent by itself shows an intention to treat the lease as subsisting if no suit has been filed and a different intention if a suit has been filed. The intention shown by the act itself must be the same in either case. Therefore, by accepting the rent the plaintiff, in my opinion, showed an intention to treat the lease as subsisting and acceptance of rent was a waiver of the notice to quit notwithstanding the fact that a suit had already been filed for the purpose of ejecting the tenant.

It has also to be observed that under s. 112 the acceptance of rent after suit has been exactly provided for and it may well be argued that had it been intended that acceptance of rent after suit should not operate as a waiver in the case of a notice to quit one would have expected that a proviso similar to that in s. 112 would have been incorporated in s. 113.

In my opinion the plaintiff must fail and the suit must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

Raoji Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman, 46 Ind. Cas. 750; 42 B. 535; 20 Bom. L. R. 671, referred to.

First appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Bareilly, dated the 16th February 1925.

Mr. S. B. Johari, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Malik and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit of the plaintiff Narain Prased was dismissed by the Trial Court of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that it was barred by the principle of res judicata. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge disagreed with this finding and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. This appeal is filed from the order of remand. One Chhotey Lal had two sons and the widow of one of them Musammat Ganeshi by name made certain transfers in favour of the defendant of this suit Raj Bahadur. Musammat Ganeshi had a daughter Musammat Katori who was an heir to the property on the death of her mother the life holder. She instituted a suit in 1917 (Suit No. 117 of 1917) for a declaration that the transfers were beyond the power of a Hindu widow and sought a declaration that they were not binding on her. During the pendency of the suit she died on the 12th November 1917. The plaintiff of this suit Narain Prasad applied to the Court to be brought on the record as representative in interest of Musammat Katori on the ground that Musammat Katori had given birth to a son who died the day after he was born and Narain Prasad was successor-in-interest of his wife through that son. The Court in which Musammat Katori's suit was being tried was entitled to determine the question whether Narain Prasad was or was not legal representative of Musammat Katori (O. XXII, r. 5). The finding of the Court was that no son was born to Musammat Katori and that Narain Prasad was not her legal representative. The suit, therefore, abated and was dismissed. Prior to the dismissal of the suit Narain Prasad who claimed the property and the sons of Durga Prasad brother of Musammat Ganeshi's deceased husband had referred the question in dispute to arbitration and an award was passed in favour of Narain Prasad. This award had been passed before the dismissal of Musammat Katori's suit.

We are of opinion that the proceedings in the suit of Musammat Katori subsequent to her death bar the present suit of the plaintiff. The Court which heard Musammat Katori's suit was entitled to decide the question whether Narain Prasad was or was not the legal representative of Musammat Katori and the decision would be binding on the parties. On behalf of the respondent here reference was made to the case of Parsotam Rao v. Janki Bai (1). The facts of the case do not appear very clearly from the judgment and it is not clear whether the learned Judges desired to decide or not that once the question of a legal representative was decided by a Court under O. XXII, r. 5 it could be readjudicated upon in a regular suit. Reference is there made to some vital issue arising in that case whether two Hindu brothers were separate or were members of a joint Hindu family. If the learned Judges desired to decide that a question once determined under O. XXII, r. 5 would not operate as res judicata we are not prepared to follow that opinion, with all respect. In a Bombay case Raoji Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman (2) a Bench of that Court held that where a party died between the passing of a preliminary decree and a final decree in a suit for partition and the cause of action survived the Court was bound to determine the question of the successor-in-interest of the deceased party under O. XXII, r. 5 and decide such dispute without referring the parties to a separate suit.

As to the award Narain Prasad ought to have pleaded it in support of his right to be brought on the record as representative-in-interest of Musammat Katori. The words of s. 11 of the C. P. C. in Explanation IV are :—"Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit." It must, therefore, be taken that in the suit of Musammat Katori a Court having jurisdiction decided that Narain Prasad was not her representative-in-interest either through her son or on the basis of an award given by arbitrators in a dispute between himself and the sons of Durga Prasad. We have already held that such a finding is binding on the parties.

We decree the appeal, restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs of all the Courts.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 102—Judgment-debtor claiming to be member of agricultural tribe—Burden of proof—Doubt, benefit of.

The burden of proving that the judgment-debtor is a member of an agricultural tribe within the meaning of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act is on him especially when in Settlement Records he is shown as belonging to one of the non-agricultural tribes.

Law does not recognise the principle of giving the benefit of doubt to a party on whom the burden of proof lies.

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 30th April 1925, reversing that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 31st October 1924.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Appellant.

Sheikh Iftikhar Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved is whether the respondent judgment-debtor is a Kharal, an agricultural tribe under the Alienation of Land Act, or whether he is a Pawli. In the latter case his land would be liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree passed against him in favour of the appellant. The learned District Judge has not dealt with this case properly. He has held that the appellant was "entitled to the benefit of any doubt that may exist with regard to his caste," and that he was a member of an agricultural tribe until the contrary was proved. Now this was not the proper way to approach this case. The caste of the respondent is entered as Pawli in the current Settlement Records. The burden of proving that he is a Kharal would, under ordinary circumstances, lie upon the judgment-debtor. In this case there is a further presumption in favour of the appellant by virtue of the entries in the Settlement Record. The learned District Judge should have come to a definite finding. In a case like this the law does not recognize the principle of giving the benefit of the doubt to a party on whom the burden of proof lies. I must, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case to him for re-decision on the merits. It will be open to the learned Judge to record further evidence of the parties, if he considers that the evidence on the record is not sufficient to enable him to give a definite finding. Costs will abide the result. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 12—the Registered Jessore Loan Company, Ltd., against a judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 10th December 1923, by which the suit of the plaintiff for contribution was decreed in full. The question raised in this appeal is a question of law applicable to the facts of this case which are not disputed and they are as follows: The plaintiff and the defendants other than the defendant No. 12 were the owners of a permanent tenure. The defendant No. 12 purchased the share of the defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 which was 1 anna odd gundas in execution of a mortgage decree in his favour on the 20th June 1921. The said defendant No. 12 is now also the mortgagee of a 3 anna odd gunda share which belonged to the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff's share in the tenure was 3 annas 4 gundas. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlords, the property was put up to sale and was purchased by the defendant No. 12 on the 20th January 1923 for Rs. 25,000. The plaintiff thereupon deposited the decretal money together with the usual compensation to the purchaser amounting to Rs. 17,000 odd and the sale was set aside. The plaintiff brought the suit claiming contribution from the several defendants in proportion to their respective shares and contended that the defendant No. 12 was liable to contribute to the extent of the two shares in which, as already stated, he was interested, namely, the share of the defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 and the share of the defendant No. 1. The decree was passed without contest against the defendants other than the defendant No. 12. The defendant No. 12 alone contested the suit and resisted the claim of the plaintiff on two grounds. It was contended on his behalf, first, that the share of the defendants Nos. 13, 14 and 15 which the defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of the mortgage decree against the said defendants was not liable for the rent at the time when the defendant No. 12 purchased the same; in fact, the arrears of rent for which the decree was obtained fell due before this purchase. It was next contended that, so far as the share of the defendant No. 1 was concerned, the defendant No. 12 was no more than a mere mortgagee of that share as the sale of that share had already been set aside; and, therefore, it was said that the defendant No. 1 remained liable, if there was any liability for contribution to the extent of his share. Now, the learned Subordinate Judge, as already stated, passed a decree without contest against the defendants other than the defendant No. 12 and they do not question the decree made against them. It is the defendant No. 12 alone who has preferred this appeal.

The learned Advocate who appeared for the defendants-appellants contended, first, that neither s. 69 nor s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act were applicable to the facts of the present case; and, therefore, he said that the plaintiff was not entitled to any contribution from the defendant No. 12 upon the payment made by him. It was stated that the elements necessary to attract the operation of s. 69 did not exist in the present case nor did the provisions of s. 70 apply to this case. As regards this point, I need hardly say that the liability to contribution is not entirely contained in the two sections of the Contract Act referred to above, although generally speaking a large number of such cases do come within the purview of those two sections. The Court as a Court of Justice, equity and good conscience may, in certain circumstances—although such circumstances do not bring the case strictly within the purview of these two sections, allow contribution, if the claim appears to be either just or equitable. I need hardly cite more than one case in which the question was discussed, namely, the case of Matungini Debi v. Brojesuar Banerji (1). Mr. Justice Mookerjee in delivering the judgment in that case said as follows:—"The right of contribution has its foundation in and is controlled by the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. It does not arise from contract, although it has sometimes been based on the theory of an implied contract for contribution supposed to exist between the parties jointly liable ex-contractu. Every joint debtor who has been compelled to pay more than his share of the common debt, has the right of contribution from each of the co-debtors. The principle is that one who has discharged a common liability can recover from his co-obligors only for the excess that he has paid over his share, and each co-obligor is liable to contribute only in proportion to his share of the common debt or obligation." Now, the same case is also authority for the proposition that, in cases such as the present one is, both ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are applicable. I shall presently refer to the distinction, which the learned Advocate for the appellants has drawn as to why the same rule should not be applied to the facts of the present case.

Taking s. 69 first, it enacts that "a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay and who, therefore, pays it is entitled to be reimbursed by the other." It is argued that the present plaintiff cannot be said to have been interested in the payment because he was also liable to pay the money. It was also argued that the defendant No. 12 was not bound to pay the money because he was neither a party to the decree for rent nor was the period for which the rent was claimed subsequent to his purchase. It appears to me that this contention is not sound. The plaintiff was interested in the payment of this decretal amount. He was interested because it affected his property. He was further interested because there was the decree against him and he was interested to see that that amount was paid. A person may be interested in a payment, though he may be liable for or bound to pay only a part of the money. Here the plaintiff was not bound to pay the whole of the money. The share, according to the plaintiff, which the defendant No. 12 held was liable for the money and, therefore, s. 69 applies. I think, therefore, the argument that the plaintiff was not interested within the meaning of s. 69 is not tenable nor is the argument that the defendant No. 12 was not bound to pay the same tenable, because, although the said defendant was neither a party to the decree nor were the arrears due for a period subsequent to his purchase, he was bound in law to pay the same as the property which he purchased was liable for the payment of that money. The section does not speak of mere personal liability. There is abundant authority for the proposition which I have relied upon. Take the case of Manindra Chandra Nandy v. Jamahir Kumari (2) which the learned Advocate for the appellant cited in support of his contention. In that case, Mr. Justice Ghose in delivering the judgment of the Court said that a mortgagee who purchased a tenure in execution of his mortgage-decree purchased it subject to the liability for the rent with which the tenure was charged. It may be pointed out that rent is the first charge—a charge which is superior to the charge of the mortgagee himself. The learned Judge pointed out in that case that the reason for this view was that when a mortgagee in execution of his decree purchased the tenure the price that he paid must have been in view of the liability for the arrears of rent to which the tenure was subject. Therefore, in the persent case, the share which the defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of his mortgage decree was liable for the amount of the decree for rent, although the period for which the rent was due was anterior to his purchase. Other cases may also be cited in support of the same view: but it is not necessary to do so. I shall only quote the words used in the case to which I have just referred, namely, the case of Manindra Chunder Nundy v. Jamahir Kumari (2). It was held there that "a mortgagee who purchases a property at an execution sale is under a liability to pay the rent due upon the property at the time of the purchase and, therefore, cannot claim under s. 69 of the Contract Act contribution from the mortgagor." The defendant No. 12 was, therefore, legally bound to pay a part of the money due on the decree.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 22; 20 C. L. J. 205

Now, taking s. 70 of the Contract Act, the argument advanced by the learned Advocate on behalf of the defendants-appellants was that the defendant No. 12 was not benefited by the payment and, therefore, s. 70 had no application to the case. It was conceded that the payment made by the plaintiff was not a voluntary payment and, therefore, he did lawfully pay the money; but as the plaintiff's deposit set aside the sale of the entire property, it was argued that the defendant was not benefited, because, in the result, he lost the benefit of his purchase of the entire property and was left only with the share which he held before. In my opinion, there is a fallacy in this argument. The character in which the plaintiff sued the defendants and the character in which the defendant No. 12 was charged with the liability was the character of co-sharers as between themselves; and, as the property was saved by the deposit. the defendant No. 12 was benefited to the extent of his share. Whether his purchase in execution of the rent decree was a better bargain or not has no real effect on the question.

In my opinion, it is not necessary, therefore, to invoke any principle of equity or justice in the present case as I think that both ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are applicable to the facts of the case so far as the share which the defendant No. 12 purchased in execution of his mortgage decree is concerned, namely, the share which originally belonged to the defendants Nos. 13 to 15.

But as regards the share which belonged to the defendant No. 1, I think the position is different. The learned Subordinate Judge has made a joint decree against the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No. 12 so far as this share is concerned. This was obviously wrong. In a suit for contribution, the respective liabilities of the parties should be ascertained and determined once for all and nothing should be left undetermined which may lead to further litigation for the ascertainment of such liability between two or more of the parties to the suit. That is not the only error in the decree. It appears that, so far as the share of the defendant No. 1 is concerned, the defendant No. 12 was no more than a mere mortgagee—not a mortgagee in possession but an ordinary mortgagee. The property no doubt was liable for the rent due on it; but the liability was primarily the liability of the defendant No. 1. So long as the defendant No. 12 did not purchase in enforcement of his mortgage against the defendant No. 1, the defendant No. 1 was liable to pay the rent and, even if the defendant No. 12 was obliged to make any payment to save the property from sale in execution of a rent decree, the defendant No. 1 would be ultimately liable to pay that money to the defendant No. 12 and the defendant No. 12 would be entitled to add that money to the mortgage-debt due to him by the defendant No. 1. Therefore, so long as the defendant No. 1 remained the owner of the property as a mortgagor and was in possession, the liability to save the property from sale in execution of the decree for arrears of rent was his liability and not the liability of the defendant No. 12. Consequently, neither s. 69 nor s. 70 of the Contract Act would apply so far as the share of the defendant No. 1 is concerned. The plaintiff, therefore, has failed to establish any liability of the defendant No. 12 for the amount due on account of the share which belonged to the defendant No. 1.

(2) 32 C. 643; 9 C. W. N. 670.

In this view, I think that the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should be varied. The appeal should be dismissed so far as regards the amount due on account of the share of the defendants No. 13, 14 and 15 and it should be allowed in so far as the decree of the Court below makes the defendant No. 12 liable for the amount due in respect of the share which belonged to the defendant No. 1 who alone should be held liable. Costs will be in proportion to the respective success and failure of the parties in both the Courts. The hearing fee is assessed at Rs. 200.

There is a cross-objection by the plaintiff and it raises only one question, namely, that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have allowed the plaintiff interest upon the amount found due to him from the date of the suit. I think that that contention is right. The plaintiff will be entitled to interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the amount found due to him by the lower Court from the date of the suit until realisation. No order is made as to the costs in the cross objection.

Civil revision against an order of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 26th January 1926, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 2196 of 1925.

Messrs. Ram Nath and Ramapat Ram, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for revision of a decree of the Munsif of Gonda acting as a Small Cause Court Judge. The facts are as follows:—The plaintiffs are two minors suing under the guardianship of their grandfather. They sue on a promissory note for Rs. 100 alleged to have been executed by the defendant in favour of their deceased father on the 14th October 1922. The defence was a denial that the defendant had borrowed the hundred rupees, and an allegation that the pro-note was a forgery and stamped with a stamp taken off some receipt. In order to explain the opportunity that the minors' father would have had to get hold of such a stamp, the defendant stated in his written statement that he (the father) used to purchase spare parts of bicycles from the defendant's shop, pay for them and get stamped receipts. In order further to show opportunity he has stated in his written statement that the father of the minors had lived with the khazanchi of a certain lady, who had got bicycle repairs done for her establishment by the defendant, had similarly paid for them and got stamped receipts. In order to explain why the suit was brought on a forged pro-note, the defendant said that plaintiffs' father had come to an open rupture with him about a sum of Rs. 15 which he owed the defendant. When the case came into Court the parties put in an application that the case should be referred to arbitrator, the arbitrator being Mr. Vishwa Nath, a Pleader of the Court. The application for submission to arbitration contained the sentence "It shall be referred to the said Vakil in order that he may make any decision in any way he wishes in this case and the parties will accept it." The arbitrator gave his decision in favour of the plaintiffs. The Munsif, as a Small Cause Court Judge, has set aside the award on the ground of legal misconduct, the arbitrator having frankly admitted that not being able to come to a decision on the statements made before him in the presence of the parties, he had made private enquiries from people in the neighbourhood and others. The Munsif relied upon a decision Daya Kishen v. Dharam Das (1) where it was stated that it was legal misconduct on the part of an arbitrator to make private enquiries, and to make his award on information which he had previously obtained, which the parties did not get an opportunity of checking. Counsel for the applicants in this application. on the other hand, relies upon a later ruling of the Allahabad High Court, Husain Baksh v. Firm Lachhman Das-Mathra Das (2). In the case there considered the parties had expressly authorised the arbitrator to arrive at a decision either on his own personal knowledge or in whatsoever manner he might think proper. It was held that this would justify him making private enquiry.

These decisions, it appears to me, can be reconciled only by holding that an arbitrator must not take evidence behind the back of the parties unless the terms of the reference to him, construed in the light of the circumstances of the case, give him authority to do so In this case, the written statement of the defendant sets forth what may be called a conspiracy of forgery. Reading the words that the arbitrator might make any decision in any way he wishes along with the written statement, the conclusion that I think any one would come to is that the parties wanted the arbitrator to come to a decision by any method that he thought fit. The arbitrator has explained that the statements made before him in the presence of the parties were not sufficient to convince him. I consider that the terms of the reference justified him in making private enquiries. The next question is whether this is a case in which I should use the discretionary power of revision in a Small Cause Court case. I consider that it would be a grave miscarriage of justice if the arbitrator's award given in the circumstances stated was not allowed to be effective. Accordingly I allow this application in revision with costs to the applicants.

RAM GOPAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS

FIRM BHAN RAM-MANGAL CHAND AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debts—Goods supplied for family business—Co-parceners, liability of.

Where a debt represents money due for goods supplied for a Hindu joint family business, it is one for necessity and binding on the co-parceners.

Bishen Singh v. Kidar Nath, 62 Ind. Cas. 800; 2 L. 159, followed.

Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 22nd March 1924, confirming that of the Munsif, Second Class, Sirsa, dated the 28th December 1922.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—My order of the 3rd February 1925, remanding the case for a finding as to whether the debt for which the bond was given by Ram Singh had been incurred for the benefit of the family, will be read as a part of this judgment. The finding of the Courts below is that the debt is not proved to have been so incurred.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad for the respondents points out that the learned District Judge has found that the cloth-shop opened by Ram Singh was a family concern, and he contests the correctness of the learned District Judge's view that even if the debt represented the price of the cloth supplied to the Firm Ram Pershad-Ram Singh, it was for the plaintiffs to prove that Ram Singh had purchased the cloth for the benefit of the family. The learned Judge is, no doubt, wrong on this point. If the money was due for cloth supplied for the family business all the co-parceners would be liable [Bishen Singh v. Kidar Nath (1).]

(2) 64 Ind. Cas. 934; 20 A. L. J. 125; A. I. R. 1922 All. 69.

But the learned Judge has not found, nor does the evidence prove, that the debt was, in fact, incurred in connection with the family business. The conclusion arrived at by the lower Courts that the debt has not been proved to have been incurred for the benefit of the family must, therefore, be accepted.

The result is that I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit as against the appellants, who will get their costs from the plaintiffs in all the Courts. The decree passed against Ram Singh will stand.

A Revenue Officer acting under Ch. XI of the Madras Estates Land Act to determine the fair and equitable rent should take into consideration the existing rate of rent, the rise in prices, the time when the rate was last settled and the present state of things as regards the facilities of irrigation and other circumstances which would enable him to settle what is a fair and equitabte rent. Whatever may be the rate of rent, if he considers that it is not fair and equitable he is entitled to alter it and in doing so he is not bound by the rule in s. 30 of the Act that the increase cannot be more than annas 2 in the rupee. Mr. A. Venkatarayaliah, for the Respondents.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Board of Revenue.

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—The Revenue Officer for the settlement of rents in the villages of Kalagampudi and Pedamamidipalli, Narasapur Taluk, Kistna District made a Record of Rights under Ch. XI of the Estates Land Act. The appeal of the proprietor of ...Pedamamidipalli to the Board of Revenue against the Record of Rights made by the Revenue Officer has been dismissed. He now moves the High Court to revise the order of the Board of Revenue.

Two points arise for decision in this case (1) Has the High Court revisional jurisdiction over the orders of the Board passed under ss. 171 and 172 of the Estates Land Act? and (2) If the question of jurisdiction is answered in the affirmative, should the High Court exercise its revisional jurisdiction in this case.

The first point has been fully argued by Mr. Ramadoss for the petitioner and Mr. Venkatarayaliah for the respondents. We have also heard the Government Pleader to whom we gave notice to appear for the Board of Revenue as it was represented to us that a number of civil revision petitions were pending in the High Court in which the question of jurisdiction was involved. After a careful consideration of the arguments in the case, I see no reason to change my view expressed in Burla Appanna v. Anala Latchayya (1). I do not wish to repeat here the reasons which I gave in that case but will deal briefly with the arguments of the learned Government Pleader.

His contention is that the Board of Revenue is not a Civil Court and jurisdiction is given to it under the Estates Land Act to hear appeals from and to revise, the orders of the Collector and the Settlement Officer and the High Court cannot revise the orders of the Board of Revenue either under s. 115, C. P. C., or under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915. His argument is based upon the observations made by the learned Chief Justice in Abdul Sattar Sahib v. Special Deputy Collector, Vizagapatam (2). In that case it was held that the High Court could not interfere in revision with the order of a Land Acquisition Officer who refused to refer a case to the District Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. As the decision is that of a Full Bench I am bound by it, but I may be permitted to remark, why could not the High Court interfere with the order of a Land Acquisition Officer if he refused to refer a case to the District Court when the High Court has jurisdiction to determine any question that may arise on a reference being made? In other words, if the Land Acquisition Officer makes a reference to the District Court, an appeal lies from the District Court to the High Court; but if he does not refer the case to the District Court, the High Court is said to have no power to direct him to refer the case to the District Court. If a Collector refused to refer a case to the Civil Court, he does something which he ought not to do, and the High Court which has the power to hear and determine matters on a reference being made to the District Court cannot be said to have no power to direct the Collector to do what he is bound to do. However, as that case has no application to the present, I refrain from making any further comment. The decision in Kokku Parthasarathy Naidu v. Chintalachervu Koteswara Rao (3) has no application to the present case. According to that decision, where the Legislature erects a Tribunal for the purpose of determining any question which arises under a particular enactment, the High Court cannot interfere with the decision of that Tribunal, unless the High Court is empowered under the enactment which erected the Tribunal to hear appeals from such Tribunal or unless the enactment erecting the Tribunal makes it a Civil Court within the meaning of cl. 16 of the Letters Patent of the Madras High Court.

When a Settlement Officer makes a Record of Rights under Ch. XI of the Estates Land Act, he determines the right of the parties; in other words he determines the rights and liabilities of both the landholder and the ryot. His proceedings are governed by the C. P. C., vide s. 192. Part B of the Schedule of the Estates Land Act, No. 21 provides an appeal to the District Court against an order under s. 137 for the repair of an irrigation work and Nos. 22 and 23 provide for an appeal to the District Court in the case of applications by ryots to execute works in default of the landholder and for the recovery of the costs of the repair of an irrigation work. From a perusal of Parts A and B of the Schedule, it is apparent that wherever civil rights of the parties i. e., landholder and ryot, are determined, an appeal is provided to the District Court. In the case of matters which are entirely within the cognizance of the Revenue Officer, an appeal is provided to the Collector and against his decision a second appeal is provided under s. 190 to the Board of Revenue. A Record of Rights is as important as, if not more important than the terms of a patta, and s. 173 gives liberty to a party to sue to set aside an order of the Settlement Officer in certain cases. Under s. 172 the Board of Revenue may, on an application of its own motion, direct the revision of any Record of Rights or any portion thereof. The mere fact that an appeal lies to the Board of Revenue is no argument for saying that the High Court has no power under the Act to revise the orders of a Collector or Settlement Officer acting under Ch. XI. The Calcutta High Court has consistently held that in the case of orders of Collectors or Revenue Officers determining the rights of the landlord and tenant, the High Court has power to interfere in revision with them. In Kartik Chandra Ojha v. Gora Chand Mahto (4) it was held that "Proceedings on applications for enhancement of rent under s. 27 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act are judicial proceedings...The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in cases where the Courts of Collectors have either exceeded the jurisdiction or failed or refused to exercise the jurisdiction vested in them by the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act." The learned Judges observed at page 522* "From the very nature of the proceedings themselves, and also from the provisions of the Act as contained, for instance, in Ch. XVI it is clear that proceedings on applications for enhancement of rent are judicial proceedings and in view of the express provisions of s. 224 (2) which allows in certain cases a second appeal to this Court, it cannot, in our opinion, be contended that Deputy Commissioners in the performance of their judicial duties under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act are not Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court".

The learned Judges held that notwithstanding that the Board of Revenue had revisional jurisdiction over the orders of Collectors, the High Court had revisional jurisdiction over such orders. In Ram Dayal v. Ramadhin (5) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the High Court has no power under s. 622 to revise an order of a Collector under s. 183 of the North West Provinces Rent Act, XII of 1881 on appeal from an Assistant Collector of the Second Class. The argument of Straight, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court is that if it were held that the High Court had jurisdiction to revise such orders; it might create a dilemma inasmuch as the Board of Revenue also had revisional jurisdiction. The question is whether the High Court could, and not, whether it should, interfere with an order of a Collector after the Board of Revenue had interfered with it. The question does not depend upon any dilemma arising in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction by the High Court as well as by the Board of Revenue. It would be a matter for consideration in each case whether the High Court should exercise its powers or not. If it considers that the case is not a proper case for the exercise of its revisional powers, it would refrain from doing so, but if it is a proper case, the High Court would interfere with such orders.

In one portion of the argument the learned Government Pleader almost suggested that if the Board of Revenue declined to interfere with the order of a Collector then the High Court might interfere but if the Board of Revenue did interfere with such order, the High Court had no power to interfere. Such an argument, though not put forward in so many words by the Government Pleader is on the face of it untenable. It is not seriously contended that Ramaswami Goundan v. Kali Goundan (6) was not correctly decided. The same learned Judges who decided Ramaswami Goundan v. Kali Goundan (6) decided Paramaswami Aygangar v. Alamu Nachiar Ammal (7).

In considering this question, the aim and the scope of the Estates Land Act should be considered. Under the old Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865) the High Court had no revisional jurisdiction over the orders of Revenue Courts. Under the Estates Land Act, I of 1908, appeals are provided to the District Court against the orders of Revenue Courts and the C. P. C. is made expressly applicable to the proceedings of the Revenue Officers and Revenue Courts by s. 192. Under s. 202 the High Court is empowered to make rules consistent with the Estates Land Act declaring that any portion of the C. P. C. shall not apply to suits between landholder and ryot as such or to any specified classes of such suits or shall apply to them subject to modifications specified in the rules: These are innovations which are made in the present enactment and the object of the legislation was to determine the respective rights and liabilities both of the landholder and the ryot. In all cases where the rights of the landholder or the ryot are affected an appeal is given to the District Court. It would be against the scope of the Act and the specific provisions of s. 199 to hold that the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction over the orders of the Board of Revenue. It is unnecessary in this connection to consider whether the Board of Revenue is a Court subordinate to the High Court. All Courts which are governed by the C. P. C. are Civil Courts and, therefore, the High Court as having the right of superintendence over all the Civil Courts in the Presidency has power over such Civil Courts as are erected by any enactment. The Board of Revenue is authorised under r. 21 framed by the Governor in Council under s. 215 of the Estates Land Act to hear appeals from the decision of the Collector under Ch. XI. The mere fact that appeals lie to the Board of Revenue would not take away the power of the High Court to revise the orders of the Collector or of the Board of Revenue. It is nowhere said and there is no provision in the Act or in the rules framed under the Act, that the orders of the Board of Revenue are final. The argument advanced in Ram Dayal v. Ramadhin (5) cannot apply to this case, for the Board of Revenue in this case is only an appellate authority and not a revisional authority. For the above reasons given by me in Burla Appanna v. Anala Latchayya (1), I answer the question in the affirmative.

J. 632; 9 L. W. 26; 42 M. 76,

Second point.—The Revenue Officer had to determine what was a fair and equitable rent. He thought he was bound by the provisions of s. 30 of the Estates Land Act in determining under Ch. XI what was fair and equitable rent. The provisions of s. 30 of the Act apply to enhancement of rent at the instance of the landholder. Under Ch. XI either the landholder or the ryot may apply to the Government for an order directing that a survey be made and a Record of Rights be prepared by the Revenue Officer in respect of an estate or a portion of an estate. In making the Record of Rights, the Revenue Officer has to be guided by considerations which are not necessarily the same as those arising under s. 30. A Revenue Officer acting under Ch. XI should take into consideration the existing rate of rent, the rise in prices, the time when the rate was last settled and the present state of things as regards the facilities of irrigation and other circumstances which would enable him to settle what is a fair and equitable rent. Whatever may be the rate of rent, if he considers that it is not fair and equitable he is entitled to alter it; and in doing so he is not bound by the rule in s. 30 that the increase cannot be more than annas 2 in the rupee. Under Ch. XI the Revenue Officer may reduce the rent and may settle different rates of rent for land of different value or different fertility. The Revenue Officer, therefore, has not exercised the jurisdiction which he had in determining what is fair and equitable in the circumstances of the case. The High Court does not interfere as a rule with the orders of Courts subordinate to it, over which it has revisional jurisdiction in cases where there is another remedy open for the party than by revision. Section 173 provides for suit by a party who feels aggrieved by the Record of Rights, but none of the cls. (a) to (f) of sub-s. (3) applies to the present case. The parties have no right of suit in this case and, therefore, this is a case in which the High Court would be justified in exercising revisional jurisdiction.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Revenue Officer for the settlement of rents and direct him to make a proper record of the rent in the light of the remarks made above. Petitioner will have the costs of this application. The costs of further proceedings will abide the result.

Waller, J.—On the first point I think that the matter is concluded by Ramaswami Goundan v. Kali Goundan(6), a decision from which I see no reason to dissent. On the second I agree that the Revenue Officer in settling a fair and equitable rent is not bound by the provisions of s. 30 of the Act. It is obvious that there is no right of suit in regard to the question raised. If there is, we should not be justified in interfering in revision.

I concur in the order proposed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 625 OF 1924.
January 27, 1926.
Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway.
KARIM BAKHSH AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
MOHAMED SHAFI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Possession, suit for—Building on another's land—Delay in suit—Proper relief.

If a person deliberately builds on another's land, the latter is entitled to recover possession of the land unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to acquiesce in the erection on his building. Mere delay in bringing a suit is not in itself sufficient to deprive the owner of his strict rights.

Premji Jivan Bhata v. Haji Cassum Juma Ahmed, 20 B. 298; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 758 and Jethalal Hirachand v. Lal Bhai Dalpatbhai, 28 B. 298; 6 Bom. L. R. 86, referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 1st December 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Gujranwala, dated the 15th December 1922.

Moulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by Karim Bakhsh and others for possession of a plot of land measuring 46 feet by 3½ feet. It was alleged that the plaintiffs were the owners of a vacant site adjacent to another vacant site which belonged to Hafiz Abdul Ali alias Jhandu, a gentleman who had been born blind. This Jhandu had purchased this site in 1915 and had erected a house thereon. Later he died and his minor sons sold the house so built in 1919 to Nawab Changar. In 1920, the plaintiffs discovered that this house had been erected partly on a strip of land belonging to them, in other words that Jhandu had encroached on the plaintiffs' site. The Trial Court held that the encroachment had, as a matter of fact, been made, but as the suit had not been brought for five years, they were only entitled to damages which he assessed at Rs. 100. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, on appeal by both parties to him, while agreeing with the view taken by the Trial Court as to the factum of the encroachment reduced the damages to Rs. 50. The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-din and the respondents have put in cross-objections but no appearance has been made either to support them or to oppose this appeal.

The case first came up for hearing on the 4th March 1925, before Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, who remanded it to the Court below for findings on three issues which are:—

(1) Was Jhandu under the mistaken belief that he was building upon his own land?

(2) Did the plaintiff stand by and allow Jhandu to proceed to build on the land in dispute?

(3) Was the plaintiff present in Gujranwala and was the building constructed in his presence?

The Courts below have now submitted their findings on the points referred to them and have agreed in holding that Jhandu was well aware that he was encroaching on the plaintiffs' land when he erected his house, that the plaintiffs did not stand by and allow Jhandu to proceed with the building, and that the plaintiffs were not present in Gujranwala when the building was constructed and did not know of its erection. On these findings Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-din has urged that the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to the decree asked for by them and has further urged that this is not a case which can be met in equity by the award of damages. In Premji Jiwan Bhate v. Haji Cassum Juma Ahmed (1) it was held that if a stranger builds on the land of another, although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting to a standing by so as to induce the belief that the owner intended to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land. This, it was found, was the law in England. Sargent, C. J., further pointed out that the law in this country was the same with the exception that the party building on the land of another was allowed to remove the building. Further it was held that delay in bringing a suit was not in itself sufficient to create an equity in favour of the person building so as to deprive the owner of his strict rights. This case was considered by a Division Bench of the same Court in Jethalal Hirachand v. Lalbhai Dalpatbhai (2) where certain English authorities were discussed and it was held that the mere fact that since the encroachment a certain amount of time had elapsed before the suit was brought was not sufficient to deprive the owner of the land of his strict rights.

In the present case it has been found as a fact that Jhandu encroached upon this land knowing that he was encroaching. From this finding it is impossible for me to differ in second appeal even if I wished to do so. It appears, however, that the person employed by Jhandu to erect this house was examined as a witness and as shown in the reports of the Courts below this witness stated that Jhandu was well aware that he was encroaching but says that the plaintiffs had agreed to let him have the land, the present case, therefore, is stronger than the Bombay cases cited above for] there the persons making the encroachment did so under the mistaken belief that they were building on their own land. Here it has been found that Jhandu built on another man's land knowing that he was doing so. It would be putting a premium on actions such as this if a party were to be allowed deliberately to build on another person's land and then force him practically to sell the land to him on receipt of compensation therefor, and, I, therefore, think that in the present case the award of damages was not correct.

I, therefore, accept this appeal with costs and grant the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the site in suit. The defendants will be allowed to remove their materials therefrom within six months from the date of this decree failing which the plaintiffs will be entitled to have the said building removed at the expense of the defendants-respondents. The cross-objections are dismissed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 26th May 1925.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of three suits brought by lessor for the recovery of arrears of theka money due by a lessee for the years 1328, 1330 and 1331 Faslis. The theka was granted on the 5th of May 1918 by a registered lease, which secured to the lessor a rent of Rs. 1,125 per year. Three years after the grant of the lease, two groves standing in the village, comprised in the lease, which apparently yielded some profit to the lessee, were cut by the lessor with the consent of the lessee; and the arrangement between them was that the lessor shall give credit on account of the groves cut to the extent of Rs. 246 per year towards the rent secured by the lease.

The question for consideration here is whether such an arrangement can be proved in variation of the terms of the original lease; or in other words whether the oral evidence to prove such an arrangement is excluded by s. 92 (4) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. It is a well-established rule that a subsequent oral agreement, varying the terms of a registered lease, or suggesting that the rent payable was really less than what was stated in the registered kabuliyat or lease cannot be proved. But in the present case the agreement was virtually an agreement to give credit to the extent of Rs. 246 per year out of the rent owing to certain groves having been cut by the lessor and the profits of the lease-hold property having been consequently reduced.

The Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants has referred to the decisions in Mayandi Chetti v. Ooliver (1) and Karampalli Unni

Kurup v. Thekku Vittil Muthorakutti (2). In none of these cases was any payment made in cash or kind to operate as a pro tanto discharge of the liability secured by the lease. All that was set up was an oral agreement to reduce the rent; but nothing was paid which could be treated as an equivalent to the rent agreed to be remitted. In Beni Madhub Gorani v. Lalmoti Dassi (3) and in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Durga Sundari Dasya (4) oral evidence was admitted to show that despite the execution of a registered kabuliyat the tenant had paid rent at a lower rate than that stated in the kabuliyat, and the acceptance of that rent by the lessor was relied on as establishing that the intention of the parties was that the kabuliyat was from the first not be acted upon or that there had been a waiver of the strict terms of the lease. As pointed out in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumarasawmy Padayachi (5) a liability created by a registered instrument may be proved to have been extinguished by letting in admissible evidence (including oral evidence) of payment of that liability or by letting in admissible evidence of any other transaction which operates as a mode of payment. In Kattika Bapanamma v. Kuttika Kristnamma (6) it was held that while a subsequent oral agreement to modify the terms of a registered maintenance deed cannot be proved, the fact that in particular years the obligee was in possession of certain lands of the obligor and paid herself the maintenance amount out of the profits of the lands can be proved. Treating the transaction as a mode of payment or a discharge or waiver of a portion of the rent, due to the profits of the groves, comprised in the lease and cut by the lessor, having been reduced, there was no reason for refusing to allow evidence in proof of such a discharge or waiver. No question of set-off really arises. The appeals are dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act (XVIII of 1911), s. 5— Execution of order—Jurisdiction of Chief Judge, Small Cause Court—Munsif, jurisdiction of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 6, application of.

Under s. 5 of the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act the jurisdiction to execute the order of the President of the Tribunal by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta is not limited to an order which may come within his pecuniary jurisdiction.

Proceedings before the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal not being a suit, s. 6 of the C. P. C. does not apply to any order passed by the President which may, therefore, be executed by a Munsif irrespective of the consideration of his pecuniary jurisdiction.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate, Judge, 24-Perganas, dated the 19th of March 1924, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Alipur, dated the 27th of August 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows: the respondent has obtained a certain award in an apportionment case from the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal. The appellant in this case raised objections in the apportionment case and the President of the Tribunal decided against him. The appellant appealed to this Court and this Court dismissed the appeal and gave costs to the respondent. The respondent then applied to execute his decree for costs to the Calcutta Small Cause Court. As the appellant had no property within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Small Cause Court the execution there was infructuous and it was transferred by the Small Cause Court to the Court of the First Munsif, Alipur, for disposal. Various objections were raised in that Court to the execution of the decree. But they were overruled and the learned Munsif proceeded to execute the decree as prayed for by the respondent.

The appellant then appealed to the District Court and the District Court at first decided the appeal in his favour, but on review set aside his order allowing the appeal and upheld the order of the Munsif. Against this order the present appeal has been preferred.

The respondent objects that no appeal lies to this Court. It is unnecessary to decide whether or not any appeal lies, because after hearing the appeal we are of opinion that the appeal has no merit in it.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has put forward two grounds. He first of all contends that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution, because the value of the suit, as he describes it, was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court. Now this decree for costs was sent to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta under s. 5 of the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act. Section 5 provides as follows: "The Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta shall, on application, execute any order passed by the Court on appeal as if it was a decree made by himself." The Court referred to in this section is the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The section, as will be clear from a perusal of it does not in any way limit the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta. The words used are "execute any order passed by the Court on appeal." It is quite clear from these words that his jurisdiction to execute any order of the Court is not limited to an order which may come within his pecuniary jurisdiction. The contention that the value of the claim in appeal was Rs. 15,000 and was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction thus is decided against the appellant.

The next point urged by the learned Vakil is that the First Munsif of Alipur to whose Court the decree was transferred had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, his contention being that the value of the suit as he described it was Rs. 15,000 and that the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif of Alipur does not extend beyond Rs. 2,000 and in support of his contention he relies on s. 6 of the C. P. C. which provides as follows: "Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction." He contends that the execution proceedings are to be regarded as the continuation of the suit, and hence as the subject-matter of the suit was Rs. 15,000 the Munsif, First Court at Alipur had no jurisdiction to execute the decree for costs. The simple answer to this contention is that the proceedings before the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal was not a suit. Therefore this contention equally fails.

The result is the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing-fee five gold mohurs.

Ghose, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 1st of August 1923.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Ashthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion the learned District Judge has taken the correct view of the law on the subject. The plaintiff is the owner of about half share in a certain khewat and sued the defendant, the other co-sharer, for rendition of account and recovery of balance due to him. It so happens that the plaintiff is purchaser of the share of one Chandan who was the original proprietor and held all the land in sir. Chandan on the sale of his property became ex-proprietary tenant and a rent of Rs. 26 was then fixed for his holding. The defendant does not hold sir land but collects rent to the extent of Rs. 92 from tenants for the balance of the land. The plaintiff's claim was that he should obtain half of Rs. 26 plus Rs. 92 after giving deduction for Rs. 26 realized by him. The learned District Judge accepted this position as correct. The defendant has appealed and on his behalf it was argued here that the plaintiff should be satisfied with the rent which he received from the ex-proprietor. Such a view is distinctly negatived by the Full Bench ruling of this Court in the case of Debi Pershad v. Bhagwan Din (1). It was held there that an ex-proprietary tenant was not a tenant of the one particular proprietor who purchased the sir land but was a tenant of the whole proprietary body. Following this ruling Chandan is a tenant both of the plaintiff and the defendant, and similarly the other tenants would be tenants of both the parties. The parties will, therefore, be entitled to divide the rents of Chandan as well as of the other tenants between themselves.

Mr. Panna Lal, the learned Counsel for the appellant, referred me to a Bench ruling in the case of Bhagwant v. Arjun (2). There all the proprietors were sir-holders. In the present case if the defendant had been a sir-holder of the land it is obvious that there would have been no need for a settlement of account between the parties.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Jamalpur, dated the 2nd May 1925.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Petitioners.

Babu Profulla Chunder Nag, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the auction-purchaser who had been in possession of the property purchased for a substantial period—it is alleged for some three years—found that the Court had made an order under r. 90 of O. XXI setting aside the sale upon the application of a person who claimed to be a mortgagee and who claimed that at the time of the sale no notice had been served upon him. The auction-purchaser claimed that the mortgagee had got the sale set aside by suppressing the service of all notices of the application under r. 90. When he came to learn of the order made setting this sale aside, he applied to the Munsif under O. IX as a person who had not been properly served and against whom an ex parte decree had been made in his absence. The Munsif dismissed that application on the ground that O. IX was inapplicable to execution proceedings and that position seems, so far as the Vakil for the petitioner is concerned, to be uncontested before me.

There has been a great difference of opinion on the matter but what is said on the part of the petitioner now is that the Court can give relief under s. 115 by making an order treating the application to restore under O. IX as though it has been an application for review made under O. XLVII. If this Court makes an order that the one application should be deemed to be considered as the other, then it is said the applicant may have his rights determined. It appears to me that it is a very strong thing, when the Munsif has quite rightly decided that he has no jurisdiction to entertain the application that was in fact made, without any error on the part of the Munsif and without any illegality on his part, to make an order under s. 115 directing that the application should be deemed to have been a different application. I do not make any comment upon the other cases in which that course has been thought correct, but having regard to the fact that in this case there was an appeal under r. 92 granted by the Code, I do not see my way to make any such order as I am asked to make. It seems to me that the case of the present applicant may or may not be a very hard one, but that it would be making bad law and establishing a very doubtful practice, if I were to try to assist him by directing in my revisional jurisdiction that the application under O. IX should be treated as an application for review.

For these reasons, I think this application fails and the Rule must be discharged with costs, hearing-fee one gold mohur.

This order will govern Revision Cases Nos. 951 and 952 which are also discharged with costs, hearing-fee one gold mohur in each case.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case 66 baskets of betel leaves were booked to the plaintiff from Bassien Road to Lahore. They were placed at Bassien Road in a motor-truck and when the truck arrived at Lahore on the 4th of June the Railway Officials thought that it contained a motor-car and placed it in the motor siding to await the owner of the car. Meantime the plaintiff presented his Railway receipt two or three times at Lahore Station and was told that his betel leaves had not arrived. The plaintiff's consignment was despatched under Risk Note "H" according to which, in consideration of a reduced rate of carriage, the Railway was absolved from responsibility for any loss, destruction, deterioration or damage, from any cause whatever, before, during and after transit over the Railway except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages due to the wilful neglect of Railway Administration or to theft by or due to the wilful neglect of the Railway's servants, etc.

There was no label attached to the truck when it arrived at Lahore and eventually on the 10th of June it was opened and was found to contain the plaintiff's baskets of betel leaves. These were made over to the delivery clerk who noted that the contents of the packages were in rotten condition. The plaintiff refused to take delivery, and subsequently brought the present suit against the Secretary of State as representing the N. W. Ry., for Rs. 792 as damages. The Trial Court awarded Rs. 783-12-0 but on appeal the suit was dismissed by the Additional Judge who held that no liability attached to the Railway, firstly, because there was no loss of goods and secondly, because, if there had been, there was no wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Administratton or its servants.

The plaintiff has come to this Court on second appeal and it has been argued, firstly, that the Risk Note covered only the time of actual transit between Delhi and Lahore and did not cover the period from 4th June to 10th June during which the plaintiff's goods were damaged or destroyed, as held by the lower Appellate Court, in consequence of remaining in a closed truck in the open yard for those days. This contention has no force. The contract under Risk Note "H" formed a complete special contract between the consignor and the Railway covering the whole period during which the goods remained with the Railway. This is clear from the terms of s. 72 of the Indian Railways Act which permits responsibility of the Railway under s. 161 of the Indian Contract Act, which is the section relied upon for the appellant, to be limited by an agreement in writing in a form approved by the Governor-General in Counsel; and the words used in the Risk Note "before, during and after transit over the said Railway" are quite definite.

The second point taken is that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding the case not to be one of loss of goods but merely to be one of deterioration. Here I think the appellant is right. In my opinion the proper test is that applied by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Madras and Southern Maharatta Ry. Co. v. Mattai Subba Rao (1), namely, whether the appellants' baskets of betel leaves were of no value when delivery was tendered. On the finding of the learned Additional Judge that the betel was in a rotten condition when taken out of the truck and that later on it was destroyed under the orders of the Station Master the decision must be in favour of the appellant that he suffered loss of his whole consignment.

The third contention for the appellant is that the loss should be held to have been due to the wilful neglect of the servants of the Railway Administration. In regard to this, as already stated, the learned Additional Judge has found that the facts do not establish any wilful neglect and I agree with him. Wilful neglect was defined by the learned Judicial Commissioner's Court in Sind in Firm of Doulat Ram v. Secretary of State (2) in the following terms which are adequate for the present purpose: "A person is said to be guilty of wilful neglect when he intentionally, and of set purpose does something which ought either to be done in a different manner, or not at all, or omits to do something which ought to be done." The same judgment points out that the onus of proving wilful neglect lies upon a plaintiff suing a Railway for compensation for loss of goods consigned under a Risk Note and this since the decision of the well-known case of Smith Lt. v. Great Western Railway (3) is the rule rigidly applied by the Courts both in England and in India. The matter has been discussed at some length in Great India Peninsula Ry. v. Datta Ram (4), and the position of a sufferer such as the present appellant has been explained. Had he not sought to have his goods carried at a reduced rate under the terms of a Risk Note but had paid a higher freight to have them carried under another form of contract, the Railway would have had to assume a much fuller responsibility.

The plaintiff has proved that the betel was put in a truck intended primarily for the carriage of a motor-car, that the truck arrived in Lahore without a label and that it was not opened by the Railway servants to ascertain its contents but was shunted away as it was into the yard and kept there for several days. It is possible that he has shown bungling on the part of the Railway but he has shown nothing more. He has failed to prove that the motor-truck was used intentionally and of set purpose with the knowledge that it should not be used for freight of the description of the plaintiff's goods, or that no label was placed on the truck at the station of departure, or that the absence of a label was due to some intentional act or omissions, or that the shunting of the truck at Lahore was done of set purpose by someone who knew that the truck ought not to be put there. On the other hand the Court below had found that the truck was shunted because the Railway Officials at Lahore thought that it must contain a motor-car and did not want to open it until the owner appeared.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of certain insolvency proceedings. One Lachhman Das became an insolvent and the Official Receiver, Babu Moti Ram, took possession of a certain property of the insolvent and sold the same to a certain party. Two sons of the insolvent put in a petition before the learned District Judge praying that two-thirds of the property should not be delivered to the purchaser, but should be reserved for themselves. They said that the father had only a third share in the property, and that alone should go to the purchaser. The Official Receiver produced the case of Bawan Das v. Chicne (1) before the learned Judge, and following that case the learned Judge dismissed the petition of the sons. The sons have appealed.

It has been argued that the authority of this Court should be treated as having been overruled by a recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council to be found reported as Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2).

It has been said on the respondent's behalf that in this Court and in other Courts the view has always been taken that where a father in a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law has been declared an insolvent, the Receiver is entitled to sell not only the share of the father that will fall on him on the partition, but the entire property in his hand belonging to the whole family consisting of himself and his sons....This view is supported by the ruling of this Court referred to above. The case of Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramchandra Aiyar (3) also takes the same view. Let us now consider the Privy Council case quoted by the learned Counsel for the appellant. A certain Hindu father, Rai Bahadur Srikishen Das had two sons. The father was declared an insolvent. Thereafter the sons brought a suit for pre-emption with respect to certain property sold in the neighbourhood. The defence raised was that the father having been declared an insolvent, the entire family property vested in the Receiver and that, therefore, the sons had no such right left in the family property as would entitle them to maintain the suit for pre-emption. Their Lordships of the Privy Council considered several sections of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1897) and came to the conclusion that the insolvency of the father did not deprive the sons of their right to maintain a suit for pre-emption. The following words from the judgment will bear quotation:—

(3) 68 Ind. Cas. 898; 46 M. 54; 16 L. W. 559; (1922) M. W. N. 653; 43 M. L. J. 569; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 55.

"It may be that under the provisions of s. 52 or in some other way that property (property of the sons) may in a proper case be made available for payment of the father's just debts; but it is quite a different thing to say that by virtue of his insolvency alone it vests in the assignee, and no such provision should be read into the Act."

As I read the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, all that was decided was that it might be open to the creditor or the Official Assignee to proceed against the sons' shares in the family property; but so long as the shares were not sold, the sons would exercise such rights as they might possess by virtue of being the owners of their shares in the family property. As already stated their Lordships considered the provisions of the Presidency Act. In this case, we have to consider the provisions of s. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). Section 28, cl. (2) reads as follows:—

"On the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a Receiver..."—

The question is whether the expression "property of the insolvent" means the property which the insolvent, as the father of his sons, was entitled to call his own and sell it under certain circumstances or that share which goes to the father in the event of a partition between himself and the sons. On the authority so long prevailing in this Court, we take it that the former meaning is the proper meaning of the word "property" as used there. I find nothing in the Privy Council case which shows that this interpretation would be wrong.

Much has been said as to the inconvenience that would arise from the course that has so long been adopted in this Court; but it is not necessary to discuss that question.

I am of opinion that the petition of the appellant was rightly dismissed, and I would dismiss the appeal with costs including costs in this Court on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I concur. There can be no doubt that the trend of the authorities so far has been to allow the Receiver in insolvency to dispose of the joint family property in lieu of the debts of the father, where the latter has been declared insolvent. I may refer only to the recent case of Bawan Das v. Chiene (1). It will, therefore, be difficult to depart from this view or to re-consider the point, unless these rulings have been overruled either expressly or by implication. The learned Advocate for the appellant relies upon the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2). The only point before their Lordships was whether the effect of the insolvency of the father was to divest the sons of all their interests in the joint property so as to deprive them of their right of pre-emption as co-sharers. Their Lordships clearly held that the effect of the insolvency of the father was not at once to vest the entire property in the Official Receiver. There are, no doubt, some observations on pages 95* and 96* suggesting that, although the words "disposing power" in s. 2 may be wide enough to cover a Hindu father's power to sell the joint property and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debts yet the definition of "property" seemed to suggest that what was contemplated was an absolute and unconditional power of disposal.

There is a further point pressed before us that, when their Lordships guarded themselves from saying that the property did not become available for payment of the father's just debts, they referred to s. 52 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, corresponding to which there is no express provision in the Insolvency Act. Section 2 (d) begins by saying that "'property' includes. . . . ." It is obvious that it does not contain an exhaustive definition of the terms "property." In the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (3) the learned Judges based their decision on the combined effect of ss. 7, 30 and 52 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

The interests of a father in the entire joint family property extend over the whole property, and it seems difficult to hold that he has no interest in the entire property because if a partition were to take place, the interests of his sons would be cut out and set apart. As, in my opinion, the case decided by their Lordships does not overrule the previous rulings of this Court and other High Courts, I find it impossible to take a different view.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Mr. T. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Buckland, J.—This appeal is against the judgment of my learned brother C. C. Ghose, J., dated the 23rd January 1925 dismissing the application of Narendra Nath Das, the present appellant, to set aside an award dated the 10th September 1924 made by certain persons purporting to act as arbitrators on the reference of a dispute between him and the respondent Haran Chandra Bose.

What the dispute was or how it arose it is not in the least degree material to enquire and the facts with which we are concerned begin with the submission dated the 1st August 1915 whereby the parties submitted to three named individuals, Rama Nath Ghose, Sarat Chandra Ghose and Jnan Chandra Ghose, the settlement of their differences. The terms of the submission are as follows:—

"I Sree Narendra Nath Das and I Sree Haran Chandra Ghose, we both appoint you as arbitrators for settlement of our difference in connection with the premises No. 41 Newgipukur Lane and with our dealings between each other; whatever decision you will give will be accepted. Finis, 1st August 1915."

I may at once mention that I shall refer for the narrative to documents not to be found in the record of this appeal to which our attention has been directed by consent of learned Counsel for the parties.

Nothing appears to have been done by the arbitrators for a period of some four years in the course of which the arbitrator Jnan Chandra Ghose died.

On the 12th August 1919 an application was made to this Court under cl. (17) of Sch. II of the C. P. C. on behalf of Haran Chandra Ghose for an order (inter alia) that the surviving arbitrators might be requested to produce the submission and that it be filed; and that if necessary a third arbitrator might be appointed by the Court.

Such an application was clearly not one to be made in the circumstances. Any order which in the event of the death of the 3rd arbitrator should be made could only be made under the Arbitration Act and then only if the conditions as to written notice prescribed by s. 8 had been fulfilled, which does not appear to have been the case. This seems to have been recognised by the learned Judge who heard the application to some extent for he made an order giving the applicant liberty to amend the cause title so as to intitule the application in the matter of the Arbitration Act, in the matter of which he directed that the application should be treated as having been made. He further ordered that the surviving arbitrators should be at liberty to act in the reference and gave them liberty to appoint an umpire if necessary, and finally he directed the arbitrators to make their award within two months with liberty to enlarge the time by another two months.

The Court Minutes show that learned Counsel for the appellant objected that evidence justifying an order under s. 8 was necessary.

The surviving arbitrators on the 18th January 1920 purported to appoint Babu Sailendra Kumar Palit as the third arbitrator and umpire and the arbitrators then entered upon the reference and eventually on the 10th September 1924 made their award—the award being made and signed by the three persons as arbitrators.

No amendment of the cause title had, however, been made meantime as directed and the arbitrators intituled the appointment and their award in the matter of Sch. II of the C. P. C., thus perpetuating the initial error.

The award was filed in November 1924, at whose instance does not appear, but no notice of the application to file it was given to the appellant as is required by cl. 20 (3) of Sch. II assuming that to have been applicable.

A notice dated the 24th November 1924 intituled in the same manner, was, however, given to the appellant, that the award had been filed and that the Court would proceed to give judgment on such award on the 8th December 1924.

This notice appears to have been given on a form intended to be used where judgment is to be given on an award in a reference made in a suit to which cls. 1 to 16 are applicable, for cls. 17 to 21 do not apply to submissions to which the Arbitration Act applies.

Subsequently, on the 28th January 1924 judgment was given upon award.

The appellant now impugns the award on the ground that it is without sanction, in that he never submitted to the arbitration of the three persons who purport to have made it, and that so far as it purports to have been made under or by virtue of the order of the 12th August 1919 such order was made without jurisdiction.

As to the first of these two points it is clear, apart from any contention as to waiver, to which I shall return, that his connection is correct. It suffices to read the submission which is to three named arbitrators other than the three persons who purported to make the award, nor does it contain any provision for substitution.

As regards the order of the 12th August 1910 I am equally confident that the respondent cannot rely upon it.

The learned Judge had no power without consent of parties to adjudicate upon an application made under cl. 17 of the Second Schedule as though it were made under the Arbitration Act. But assuming he had such power, there was nothing in the petition to show that such antecedent steps had been taken as would entitle the applicant to an order under s. 8. Again, assuming that such evidence was before the Court, the only order possible in the circumstances was one appointing a third arbitrator, whereas the order gave liberty to the surviving arbitrators to act in the reference and to appoint an umpire if necessary. In my opinion such order was made without jurisdiction and it conferred no power on the arbitrators whose award is impugned to make it.

Again, however, assuming that the application was properly converted into one under the Arbitration Act and that the order was such as could properly be made thereunder, the parties and arbitrators subsequently acted throughout as though these clauses of the Second Schedule of the C. P. C., which under the Arbitration Act do not apply to cases to which that Act applies, still governed the proceedings.

As it was all subsequent proceedings should have followed the Arbitration Act and the rules made thereunder, which provide that an award shall be filed and thereupon may be enforced as a decree. This was not the course pursued and had it been the position of the appellant might have been more difficult. Once the matter was converted into one under the Arbitration Act there was no power either for the parties or the arbitrators or the Court to act under the Schedule and all steps so taken must be regarded as having been taken without jurisdiction.

This disposes of the contention of the respondent's Advocate that not having appealed against the judgment on the award the appellant cannot succeed. We may not be able to set aside that judgment but if the award which is directed to be carried out is set aside there will be nothing left to be enforced and any technical difficulty will not stand in the way of the appellant.

Lastly it is contended that by attending before the arbitrators the appellant must be taken to have consented to the appointment of the third arbitrator, whether or not the order was made without jurisdiction and that he waived all irregularities in the appointment. This argument would have considerable force if the appellant had attended the reference without protest. But it was pointed out on his behalf that he protested at the earliest opportunity, viz., on the application resulting in the order of 12th August 1919, all subsequent proceedings of the arbitration purport to have been held in consequence of that order and for the appellant to have protested to the arbitrators would have availed him nothing. Having made his protest he was entitled to attend at the reference and make this best of the position as far as he could.

In my opinion the award should be set aside on the ground that it is a nullity by reason of the fact that the reference was held by the arbitrators without authority to decide the matter in dispute. The result, therefore, will be that the appeal should be allowed—the appellant is entitled to his costs both of the appeal and before the Court of first instance.

Sanderson, C. J.—I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered by my learned brother, and I do not think it necessary to add anything.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v) (b)—Land assessed to revenue—Suit for possession by cancellation of deed—Court-fee payable.

A suit for possession of land assessed to revenue by setting aside the sale in favour of the defendant falls under s. 7 (v) (b) of the Court Fees Act and the Court-fee payable is on five times the revenue.

Haidari Begam v. Gulzar Bano, 25 Ind. Cas. 395; 36 A. 322; 12 A. L. J. 481, referred to.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 16th April 1925, upholding an order of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, dated the 19th December 1924.

Mr. Hargovind Dayal Srivastava, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession brought by the plaintiffs-appellants, in which the main relief claimed was that of possession. The plaintiffs amended their plaint and added the words "by setting aside the sale." Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have now come to this Court in second appeal. The matter at present before me is in connection with the office report as to what is the correct amount of Court-fee which ought to be paid in the present suit. The Court-fee which has been paid by the plaintiffs is on five times the Government revenue. The office reports that the claim being for possession by cancellation of a sale, Court-fee paid on five times the Government revenue is not sufficient, and that a Court-fee of Rs. 10 should have been paid, the relief claimed being of a declaratory nature. The amount claimed from the appellants after deducting annas 6, which he has already paid, is a sum of Rs. 9-10-0.

I have heard the learned Counsel for the appellants.

I am of opinion that the Court-fee paid in this case is sufficient and that the appellants should not be called upon to pay any further Court-fee on the ground that their claim involves a declaratory relief as well. In suits for possession the real relief which the plaintiff claims is the relief for possession and if in awarding that relief to the plaintiff the Court has to go into the question as to whether the title of the defendant, based on a certain transfer or auction sale is invalid, the suit cannot be considered to be a suit other than a suit for possession. Similarly where the plaintiff claims possession of a certain property and states in his plaint that he claims for possession by cancellation of a sale in favour of the defendant he cannot be considered to be asking for two reliefs and thus be liable to pay Court-fee on each of these two reliefs. He is practically claiming one relief and that relief is a relief for possession and if in order to give him that relief it is necessary to consider along with that the title of the defendant and to declare that title to be ineffective the suit must, still for the purposes of the payment of the Court-fee, be treated as one for possession. I am supported in this view by a judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Haidari Begum v. Gulzàr Bano (1). In that suit the plaintiff claimed possession of the property which was in the possession of a Muhammadan lady. The defence raised was that the plaintiff had no title and secondly that she was not entitled to a decree for possession without payment of Rs. 80,000, the amount of dower-debt due to the defendant. The Court of first instance decreed the suit for possession, holding that payment of defendant's dower could not be considered a condition precedent to the plaintiff's obtaining a decree. The defendant appealed paying a Court-fee on the value of the property. The point for decision that arose in the case was as to whether the defendant should pay Court-fee merely on the value of the property or whether on Rs. 80,000, the amount of the dower-debt, claimed by her. It was decided that the real relief which the plaintiff claimed was a relief for possession and consequently the Court-fee which the plaintiff was liable to pay was on that relief.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Court-fee paid by the plaintiffs in this case is sufficient.

Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 21st July 1925.

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal is frivolous. In execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by Jhunai Lal against Madan Lal certain property was proclaimed for sale. Madan Lal had two brothers Onkar Das and Murli Dhar, out of whom Onkar Das had been adopted in another family and Murli Dhar had died leaving a son Natha, who is a minor. On the death of Madan Lal Onkar Das and Natha were impleaded as his legal representatives in the execution proceeding. Onkar Das filed an objection claiming that as his adoption was found to be invalid he reverted to his natural family and continued to live jointly with Madan Lal and that the mortgages made by Madan Lal, on foot of which the decree in execution had been obtained, were not binding on him. That objection was disallowed. A regular suit was then filed by him for a declaration of his title to the disputed property, which was dismissed on the 9th February 1923 on the ground that it was barred by time and that Onkar Das had failed to establish that he was the owner of the property in dispute and had been in possession of it within limitation, or that he had been living jointly with Madan Lal at the time of the mortgages in question.

The present objection was filed in the same execution proceeding by Natha, reiterating what had been urged by Onkar Das before. The Court below has disallowed the same. Its finding in this case is that there had been a separation between Murli Dhar, the father of Natha and Madan Lal in 1903, in evidence whereof a deed of partition was executed and registered by Madan Lal and Murli Dhar on the 14th December 1903, that Murli Dhar had subsequently ratified the partition in the course of certain alienations which had been made by him in respect of some of the properties allotted to his share, and that the decision in the suit filed by Onkar Das, to which Natha was also a party as a defendant, operated as res judicata.

It is urged on behalf of Natha that Murli Dhar was a minor on the date of the partition aforesaid. But there is nothing to show that he was a minor at that time. On the other hand the deed of partition appears to have been executed and registered by Madan Lal and Murli Dhar personally, as if they were adults; and both parties subsequently made alienations of different portions of the properties allotted to their respective shares in pursuance of that partition. The property in dispute was allotted to Madan Lal. In the face of that deed of partition it cannot be said that Murli Dhar and Madan Lal were living jointly or that Natha, the son of Murli Dhar was entitled to question a transaction entered into by Madan Lal after separation.

In the application filed by Natha on the 15th November 1922 he described himself as 12 years old. The mortgages in question were effected in 1906 and 1908 so that he was not apparently even in existence when the mortgages were made, and in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Randip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (1), Natha cannot take advantage of his minority or plead ss. 6 and 7 of the Indian Limitation Act, when limitation had already begun to run before his birth. The Court below moreover finds that Natha has not been in possession of the property in dispute from over 12 years and has no interest in it. The question of res judicata hardly arises. The appeal is dismissed.

Hindu Law—Debts—Joint family property—Widow's right of residence and maintenance.

Where a debt is incurred for a family purpose and necessity, a Hindu widow's right to maintenance and residence in the family property must be postponed to the just claims of her late husband's creditors.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 17th December 1923.

Lala Gabind Ram Khanna, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. S. Bhagat and Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 5,861 which was alleged to be due on a mortgage-debt secured on a house. The Trial Court decreed the claim with the exception of a small sum of penal interest. The suit was against one adult and one minor son of the mortgagor and also against his widow, Musammat Lakho, who challenged their liability on the mortgage on the ground that the mortgaged property was joint family property and the debt was incurred without necessity for an illegal purpose and the right of the widow to reside in the house was paramount.

The Court below found that though the house was joint family property, the debt was properly incurred for a family purpose and for necessity, and that the right of the widow to maintenance and residence had to be postponed to the just claims of her late husband's creditor. The sons of the mortgagor have preferred no appeal against the decree of the Court below, and the only appellant is Musammat Lakho who has paid on the appeal a Court-fee of only Rs. 10.

This gives rise to the first contention for the respondents that the appeal is not properly stamped, inasmuch as the appellant urges in her grounds of appeal that the debt was bad and consequently prays to be relieved in respect of the whole of the plaintiff's claim. Counsel for the appellant admitting the force of this contention urges that he has no intention to urge that the debt was improperly incurred by the mortgagor, but limits his appeal to the prayer that even if the debt was properly incurred, the right of the widow to residence in the family house is paramount. In support of his contention he has referred us to Gour's Hindu Law which, however, far from supporting his thesis is directly in his disfavour. In Mulla's Principle of Hindu Law on page 472, 4th Edition, and again on page 488 it is written: "Debts contracted by a Hindu take precedence of the right to maintenance and debts contracted by a Hindu take precedence even of the widow's claim for maintenance;" and on page 490 "If the sale of the family dwelling house is for a family necessity the widow is liable to be evicted even though the purchaser had notice at the time of purchase that she was in occupation of the house."

For these reasons we hold this appeal to be without force and dismiss it with costs.

The power of the Court under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act is to stay the suit or proceedings, if the conditions referred to in the section are fulfilled. If a stay is granted the arbitration then takes place by reason of the submission contained in the contract and in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. [p. 183, col. 2.]

Per Buckland, J.—In connection with arbitration proceedings under the Arbitration Act, all that need be considered is whether there were (1) a submission by the parties to the dispute, (2) a reference before arbitrators duly appointed by them under the submission and (3) an award properly made by such arbitrators. [p. 187, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, dated the 18th May 1925.

Mr. N. N. Sircar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Bose, L. P. E. Pugh and W. W. K. Page, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd., against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose delivered on the 18th May 1925.

The judgment was delivered in respect of an application by the appellants that an award dated 14th March 1925 should be declared null and void and that it be set aside, cancelled and taken off the file of this Court.

The learned Judge dismissed the application and having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case, he made no order as to costs.

Against this order of dismissal the appellants have appealed.

The facts are as follows :—

By a charter party dated the 26th November 1920 made between Messrs. Graham & Co. acting as agents for the owners of the good steamer called a first class steamer to carry 6,500 tons cargo 10 per cent. more or less and the appellants (charterers) it was agreed that the steamer should load at Calcutta a full and complete cargo of coal in bulk and being so loaded should proceed to Colombo and there deliver the cargo.

Clause II of the charter party provided for the time within which the cargo should be shipped at Calcutta and discharged at the port of destination and cl. 13 provided for the rate to be paid for demurrage, viz., Rs. 2,000 per running days.

Clause 19 provided as follows: "Any dispute that may arise under this charter to be settled by arbitration at Calcutta or if mutually agreed at the place where the dispute occurs, each party appointing an arbitrator, and should the arbitrators be unable to agree the decision of an umpire selected by them to be final. Arbitrators and umpire are all to be commercial men and resident in Calcutta or the place where the arbitration is held. This submission may be made a rule of the High Court of Justice by either party." Clause 21 provided as follows: "For the non-performance of this agreement proved damages not exceeding the estimated amount of freight to be paid as liquidated damages."

It is to be noted that the steamer was not specifically mentioned in the charter party nor were the owners of the vessel mentioned by name.

It appears that by a letter dated the 18th January 1921, Messrs. Graham & Co. acting as agents for the owners declared the steamship. "Baron Jedburgh."

This declaration was accepted by the appellants and the vessel having arrived at Calcutta notice was given that she was ready to load on 1st February 1921. It was alleged that the appellants were not ready with the cargo and that the vessel was detained in consequence thereof and that the loading and unloading occupied more than the lay days allowed by the charter party. The result was that a claim was made for damages for detention and demurrage amounting to Rs. 42,000.

A suit was instituted on the 1st February 1924 for the purpose of recovering this sum from the appellants. In that suit the plaintiffs were, S. C. Hogarth, H. Hogarth, B. Hogarth and J. B. Henderson carrying on business in Glasgow in co-partnership as shipowners under the style and Firm of H. Hogarth & Sons.

In the plaint the plaintiffs were alleged to be the owners of the vessel "Baron Jedburgh."

It appeared subsequently (at a date to be mentioned later that) this was a mistake and the owners of the vessel were the Hogarth Shipping Company, Ltd., a Company having its registered office in Glasgow.

The learned Judge stated in his judgment that he was informed that H. Hogarth & Sons were the agents. There is no evidence on the record as to the position of H. Hogarth & Sons or their connection with the limited Company or the vessel, and I assume from what the learned Judge said in his judgment that the information, to which he referred, was given to him in the course of the hearing of the application.

The appellants, on the 26th March 1924, gave notice of an application for an order that the suit should be stayed under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1899 and that the matters in dispute should be referred to arbitration in terms of the reference between the parties.

On the 8th April 1924, the Court made an order in the terms of the application viz., that the suit should be stayed until the further order of the Court and that the matters in dispute be referred to arbitration in terms of the reference between the parties.

It is to be noted that the latter part of the order is not in accordance with the provisions of s. 19 of the Arbitration Act; that section provides that if the Court is satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission and that the applicant was at the time when the proceedings were commenced and still remains ready and willing to do all things necessary for the proper conduct of the arbitration, the Court may make an order staying the proceedings.

It is material to mention this because it appears that one of the parties subsequently dealt with the matter as if the Court had ordered a reference to arbitration.

The power of the Court under s. 19 is to stay the suit or proceedings, if the conditions referred to in the section are fulfilled. If a stay is granted the arbitration then takes place by reason of the submission contained in the contract and in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act.

It appears that the plaintiffs in the suit appointed Mr. L. Edwards as arbitrator and the appellants appointed Mr. A. O. Brown. We have not the terms of the appointments before us, but it is clear from the materials, which are before us, that the dispute was regarded by both parties as a claim by the owners of the vessel against the appellants, the charterers of the vessel, for demurrage and damages for detention of the vessel.

We were informed by the learned Advocates who appeared in the appeal, that the arbitrators held two sittings in September 1924, and I assume that the owner's claim, the answer thereto and the reply had been filed by that time.

On or about the 25th September, 1924 the appellants' attornies informed the plaintiffs' attornies that they had inspected the register of the S. S. "Baron Jedburgh" and that the register showed that the owners were the Hogarth Shipping Company Ltd.

Apparently, some discussion took place before the arbitrators as to the position, created by this discovery, and the matter was adjourned until January 1925.

In the meantime correspondence passed between the parties and Messrs. Pugh and Company, acting, for the owners, stated that they were authorised to represent the Hogarth Shipping Company Ltd., and that any award made in favour of the claimants would be accepted by the Company and they expressed the hope that the appellants would abandon the point which they had taken.

The appellants' attornies declined to agree to this and stated they were instructed to press the point that the proper parties were not before the arbitrators.

The result was that on the 8th January 1925 notice was given by Messrs. Pugh and Company of an application to the Court for an order that the "Hogarth Shipping Company, Ltd." be either added as co-plaintiff in the suit or substituted as plaintiffs in the place of the plaintiffs, S. C. Hogarth and Sons and that the cause title be amended accordingly. The appellants appeared on the hearing of the summons and opposed the amendment.

On the 14th January 1925, an order was made by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose that the plaint and the register of the suit be amended by striking out from the cause title the names and descriptions of the plaintiffs and substituting in lieu thereof the words "Hogarth Shipping Company Ltd," and by making such other amendments in the body of the plaint as might be necessary in consequence of the aforesaid amendment.

On the 14th January 1925 Messrs. Pugh and Company on behalf of the owners sent the following letter to the arbitrators Messrs. Edwards and Brown.

"On our application to-day to the High Court in the suit; filed by S. C. Hogarth and the other partners in Messrs. H. Hogarth and Sons. v. Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd., it has been ordered that 'The Hogarth Shipping Company Limited a Company registered under the English Companies Acts and having its registered office at 24 St. Enoch Square in the city of Glasgow in Scotland, should be substituted as plaintiffs in place of S. C. Hogarth and others.

"On 8th April last the High Court on the application of Messrs. Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd., ordered that all further proceedings in the suit should be stayed until the further order of the Court and that the matter in dispute be referred to arbitration in terms of the reference between the parties. The effect of the order of the High Court which had been made to-day is that the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., has been substituted as plaintiffs and the order of 8th April last for reference to arbitration is now an order for reference as between the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., and Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd.

"We ask you to substitute in the arbitration the name of the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd. in place of Messrs. H. Hogarth & Sons and to treat the claim for arbitration and the reply which we have already filed with you as filed on behalf of the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd.

"We are ready to proceed with the arbitration and shall be glad to know when you and your co-arbitrator propose to hold the next sitting."

It is to be noted that the writers of this letter refer to the order of 8th April 1924 by which the suit was stayed, as being an order for reference, and that, the amendment in the cause title having been made, it was now an order for reference between the Hogarth Shipping Company Ltd, and the appellants, I have already mentioned that this attitude apparently arose from a misunderstanding of s. 19, which merely gives power to the Court to stay the suit and that which thereafter governed the rights of the parties and the arbitration proceedings was the submission to arbitration contained in the charter party taken together with the provisions of the Arbitration Act, which relate to the various steps and proceedings which may be taken.

A copy of this letter was sent to the attornies for the appellants; and, on the 15th January 1925 they sent the following reply: "We are in receipt of your letter of the 14th instant enclosing copies of your letters to the two arbitrators. We do not agree with the construction placed by you on the effect of the substitution order passed yesterday by Mr. Justice Ghose. The course suggested can only be done by a fresh reference to arbitration or by the new plaintiff obtaining an order from Court for making the alterations in the submission."

To this Messrs. Pugh & Co. replied by the letter of the 16th January which is as follows, "We are in receipt of your letter No. SP-38401 of the 15th instant.

"The arbitrators have acknowledged receipt of our letters to them of the 14th instant and have fixed the date of the next meeting.

"At the last meeting you stated before the arbitrators that the claimants should be the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd, and not S. C. Hogarth and others. To meet this technical objection we have obtained the order of substitution.

"We do not agree with your views and shall attend before the arbitrators on the date fixed by them.

"We also enclose copies of our letters to the two arbitrators of to-day's date."

It is not clear when the arbitrators held their next sitting, but I think it was on the 30th January 1925. In the meantime it appears that on the 24th January notice on behalf of the appellants was given to Pugh and Co. on behalf of the plaintiff Company of an application for an order that the suit be expedited in terms of the prayer in the petition.

The prayers in the petition were, among others, as follows: "That the written statement be filed by the 31st January 1925. That affidavit of documents of both parties be filed by the 7th February 1925 and mutual inspection be given immediately thereafter.

"That the suit do appear on the top of the Commercial Cause Warning List on 1st March 1925."

Upon the hearing of the application an order, which in my experience is unusual and which on the face of it seems to be inconsistent, was made.

It is dated the 28th January 1925 and is as follows: "It is ordered that the application of the defendant Company pursuant to the said Master's Summons be and the same is hereby dismissed. And it is further ordered that the defendant Company do pay to the plaintiff Company its costs of and incidental to this application to be taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court. And it is further ordered that the defendant Company be at liberty to file their written statement subject to all just exceptions and the Warrant of Attorney in favour of Messrs. Orr. Dignam and Company."

It is clear that the application of the appellants for leave to file the written statement and for expedition of the trial of the suit was dismissed with costs, yet the same order contains a provision that the appellants should be at liberty to file the written statement and the Warrant of Attorney in favour of the appellants' attornies subject to all just exceptions.

The terms of the order are inconsistent and, in my judgment, the last portion of the order ought not to have been made. The application to file the written statement was dismissed with costs: presumably on the ground that the suit had been stayed; and, in view of that order, the provision giving leave to the appellants to file the written statement contained in the latter part of the order, in my opinion, was wrong and without any meaning.

The arbitrators then proceeded with the arbitration and made their award on the 14th March 1925.

The award is as follows: "The Hogarth Shipping Company, Ltd., Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Limited. We, having been appointed arbitrators to decide the disputes between the parties in respect of the claim of the owners for demurrage and detention of the S. S. 'Baron Jedburgh', under charter party dated the 29th of November 1920, and having read the papers filed before us, and having heard the Solicitors for both parties and the evidence of the witnesses called before us, and having extended the time for our award to the 15th of March 1925, do hereby award as follows.

"That the charterers pay the owners of the steamer Rs. 42,000 (forty-two thousand rupees) plus Solicitors' costs at Rs. 1,200 (one thousand two hundred rupees) and arbitrators' fees and expenses at Rs. 2,969 (two thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine rupees)."

It is to be noted that it is headed "The Hogarth Shipping Co. Ltd., v. Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd" and recites that the arbitrators had been appointed by the parties in respect of a claim by the owners of the steamship for demurrage and detention.

The appellants applied to have the award set aside, and the application was dismissed as already stated.

Three main points have been urged on behalf of the appellants in this Court.

The first is that no arbitrators were appointed to decide any dispute between the present parties to the suit, i. e., as between the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., and the appellants. As far as the Shipping Company is concerned, I am of opinion that the letter of the 14th January 1925 from Pugh and Company to the arbitrators involved an appointment of the Shipping Company's arbitrator to decide the dispute between the Shipping Company and the appellants and even if any confirmation of the original appointment was required, which I do not think was necessary, it was supplied by the above-mentioned letter. It was, however, urged that the appellants had never appointed an arbitrator to act in any dispute between the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., and themselves.

In my judgment the contention is not sound. I have already mentioned that the name of the owners of the vessel was not mentioned in the charter party. It was Graham & Company who declared the "S. S. Baron Jedburgh" and in so doing they were acting as agents for the owners of the vessel; this declaration was accepted by the appellants.

The dispute which arose, was undoubtedly as to the claim for demurrage and detention. This claim could only be made by or on behalf of the owners of the vessel, having regard to the terms of the charter party. This was the only dispute between the parties. I am of opinion that when the suit was instituted and when the arbitrators were appointed, the dispute was recognized by both parties as one between the owners of the vessel and the appellants.

When the suit was stayed, the arbitrators were appointed by both parties to decide the only dispute which had arisen, viz., the dispute as to demurrage and detention between the owners of the vessel and the appellants. But through a "bona fide" mistake, under which both parties were labouring the owners were wrongly described as the Firm of Hogarth & Sons.

When the mistake was discovered, this was corrected. I am not concerned to say, whether the steps taken by the plaintiffs' advisers to amend the cause title of the suit were necessary or correct.

I am satisfied on the evidence that though the appellants protested against the arbitrators proceeding with the arbitration on another ground, to which I shall refer presently, they did not protest at the time that the arbitrators had not been appointed in the dispute between the owners of the vessel, viz., the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd. and the appellants.

Further, I am prepared to hold that even if they had protested, the protest would have been of no avail, for as I have already said, the dispute, as to which the arbitrators had been appointed by both parties, was a dispute between the parties to the charter party, viz., the owners of the vessel on the one hand, and the appellants on the other; and, if that be the true view of the position, the power of the arbitrators could not be revoked when they had been once appointed except by leave of the Court, unless a different intention was expressed in the submission. It should be noted in connection with this part of the case, that our attention has not been drawn to any evidence showing that the appellants purported to revoke the appointment of their arbitrators.

In my judgment the appointment of the arbitrators in the dispute between the owners of the vessel and the appellants remained a valid and binding appointment after the discovery was made that the names of the owners have been wrongly stated. In my opinion, therefore, the first point fails.

The second ground on which reliance was placed on behalf of the appellants was that a suit by the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., against the appellants was pending in the High Court which had not been stayed and that consequently the arbitrators were functi officio and had no jurisdiction to proceed with the reference. There is no doubt that this objection was taken on behalf of the appellants before the arbitrators, and it remains to be considered whether this is a sufficient ground for setting aside the award.

Reliance was placed on the decisions in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (1) and Ram Prasad Surajmull v. Mohan Lal Lochminarain (2). The argument was to the effect that though the suit, brought in the name of the Firm of H. Hogarth & Sons, had been stayed by an order of the Court, the suit, in which the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd,, were the plaintiffs had not been stayed and was pending in January 1925 and that consequently the arbitrators were functi officio.

I am not able to accept this contention.

There was one suit only: viz., No. 358 of 1924: it was brought in the name of H. Hogarth & Sons, it being alleged that they were the owners of the vessel "Baron Jedburgh," the claim was made on the basis that the owners of the vessel were entitled to demurrage and damages for detention of the vessel.

It was then discovered that the owners of the vessel had been wrongly described. There is no doubt that this was due to a "bona fide" mistake, and consequently O. 1, r. 10 (1) of the C. P. C. would apply and the Court had jurisdiction to amend the cause title by substituting the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., for the Firm of H. Hogarth & Sons. The sub-section provides that this may be done at any stage of the suit and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

It was argued that when the order of amendment was made, the suit became a new suit and that it had not been stayed. In my judgment it would be contrary to reason on the facts of this case to hold that the suit had not been stayed or that the Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd., were desirous of prosecuting their claim in this Court, or that the Court when making the order for substitution intended that the suit should proceed. In my opinion the order of the 14th January 1925 was merely an order for the correction of a bona fide mistake by means of amendment of the cause title and by substituting as plaintiffs the real owners of the vessel, in the Suit No. 358 of 1924 which was to remain stayed until further order of the Court by reason of the order of the 8th April 1924. That this was the intention is clear from the subsequent order of the Court, when it dismissed the application of the appellants for direction as to the filing of their written statement and for the expeditions of the trial of the suit. This application must have been dismissed on the ground that the suit had been stayed. As already stated, the addition to that order that the appellants should have liberty to file the written statement subject to all just exceptions was wrong, meaningless and of no avail, in view of the dismissal of the appellants' application with costs.

(2) 60 Ind. Cas. 895; 47 C. 752; 38 C. L. J. 67,

In my judgment, therefore, the suit had been stayed and was not pending so as to deprive the arbitrators of jurisdiction in the reference ; and, the second, point, on which the appellants relied, fails.

The third ground, on which the appellants relied, was that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct in deciding the question of damages without taking any evidence. The arbitrators were the final Judges of questions of law and fact, and there is nothing on the face of the award to show that they made any mistake either in fact or law.

It was argued that the arbitrators had awarded damages for detention at the rate which had been agreed upon in the charter party for the demurrage days.

I do not know, whether this is so, for there is nothing on the face of the award to show that this was the principle on which the arbitrators acted. Even if the arbitrators did so act, I am not prepared to hold that they are guilty of misconduct.

In Carver on Carriage By Sea (s. 109), the following passage occurs :

"Damages for detention are generally calculated at the rate which has been agreed upon for the demurrage days if any are provided for. But either party may show that that is not the true measure of the loss to the ship-owners by the detention and in that case that rate ought not to be adopted. The shipowner should have a just compensation for his loss, and not more or less." In my opinion, that is a correct description of the position.

There is no evidence before us, to which we are entitled to refer, which goes to show that the arbitrators were guilty of any misconduct and, in my opinion, there is no substance in the third point on which the appellants relied.

In my judgment, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Buckland, J.—I agree with the judgment delivered by the learned Chief Justice and only desire to add a few observations on one of the points argued.

Apart from the question whether the jurisdiction of the arbitrator was ousted by a suit all that need be considered is whether the provisions of the law in relation to arbitrations to which the Arbitration Act applies were observed.

Not only do I agree that there was no pending suit ousting the jurisdiction of the arbitrator, a point which I do not propose to deal with further, but one may go on to say that the suit had nothing to do with the reference. References to the suit have, I think, somewhat obscured the correct principles of law which govern this part of the case.

The suit was stayed and except the application and order made for that purpose the law admits of no contract between proceedings in Court and proceedings before arbitrators for the purpose of arriving at a decision of a dispute between parties.

Whatever was done in the course of the suit may, therefore, be ignored for the present purpose, and all that need be considered is whether there were (1) a submission by the parties to the dispute, (2) a reference before arbitrators duly appointed by them under the submission, and (3) an award properly made by such arbitrators.

The dispute was between the owners of the vessel and the defendants. That the charter party contains a submission is indisputable. That the defendant Company appointed their arbitrator to decide such dispute is also indisputable. The defendant Company might have argued, had the point arisen, that they never appointed their arbitrator to decide any dispute between themselves and H. Hogarh & Sons, seeing that the latter were not and are not the owners and, therefore, there was no dispute between themselves and that firm, but they cannot contend that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to decide a dispute between themselves and the other party to the submission. The letter of the 14th January 1925 from Messrs. Pugh & Co. to the arbitrators is, in my opinion, evidence of the appointment, which need not be in writing, if not the actual appointment, of Mr. Edward as the respondent Companys' arbitrator. The second of the conditions to which I have referred was, therefore, fulfilled and in due course the arbitrators made their award.

If the point is shorn of surplusage and presented, as I have endeavoured to do, in its simplest form it seems to me that all necessary conditions were fulfilled.

On the 3rd point, viz., the alleged misconduct of the arbitrator I have nothing to add to what my Lord has said and I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

R. L. Appeal dismissed.

OUDH CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 7 OF 1925.

PIRTHA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

THE HON'BLE SIR RAJA MOHAMMAD ALI MOHAMMAD KHAN BAHADUR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Construction of documents—Judgment and decree based on compromise, interpretation of—Revenue entries, value of—Appeal—New plea.

The judgment and the decree have to be read as a whole and where they are based upon a compromise, they have to be interpreted in the light of the contents of the compromise itself. [p. 189, col. 2.]

Where the origin of an entry in the Revenue Records is not known, the entry itself might afford an indication of the rights conferred but where the origin itself is not in doubt and where according to the entry itself the fountain-source of the rights can be traced, it is not safe to rely upon the entry itself, but recourse must be had to the origin itself to discover what the rights conferred actually are. Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 10th November 1924.

Mr. Rauf Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Misra, J.—This appeal arises out of a declaratory suit. Pirtha Singh, the plaintiff-appellant, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, for a declaration to the effect that defendant No. 2, Zorawar Singh, his uncle, had executed a deed of gift of the land in suit in his favour on the 9th of January 1923 and had put him in possession thereof, and that he had applied for mutation to the Revenue Court, but his application was rejected on the 31st of May 1924 on the objection of defendant No. 1 respondent who is the proprietor of the Mahmudabad estate. The dismissal of the application by the Revenue Court is stated to have given to the plaintiff-appellant the cause of action for the present suit. In defence the Raja of Mahmudabad contended that the rights possessed by Zorawar Singh were merely heritable but not transferable rights and hence the alleged gift relied upon by the plaintiff was inoperative. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted the contention of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. In appeal it is again contended that the rights possessed by Zorawar Singh were transferable rights and that the decision of the lower Court is wrong.

In order to make clear the facts of the case I think it necessary to state the history of the case, which is as follows:—

It appears that one Bechu Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiff-appellant, sued Raja Amir Hasan Khan, the father of the present defendant No. 1 respondent, the then owner of the Mahmudabad estate, for sub settlement of villages Kanchanpur, Tera, Basantpur, Gulauli, Tarabhind, Salarpur, and Bilaspur, all situate in pargana Mahmudabad, District Sitapur. While the case was being tried by the Settlement Officer, Bechu Singh put in an application before the said officer on the 19th of January 1867. The application was to the effect that it had been settled between the parties, i. e., the applicant and the Raja Saheb, that the land measuring 900 bighas kham had been granted by the Raja and his wife to him as rent-free (bila lagani) without any power of sale or mortgage (bila ikhtiyar bai wa rehn) in favour of a stranger (bamuqam digar), for ever, generation after generation (naslan bad naslan), with effect from the commencement of Rabi 1274 Fasli, and that in consideration of this he (Bechu Singh) had agreed to withdraw his claim for the sub-settlement of the villages. It was also stated further on in that application that the plaintiff would not have the right of mortgage or sale in the land granted to him and that he was only entitled to appropriate the usufruct of it. The land in question was stated to be situate in villages Tera, Kanchanpur and Gulauli. On the 28th of March 1867 the case was taken up by the Settlement Officer, who, after stating that the plaintiff had filed a razinama and that the defendant had given him 302 bighas 12 biswas standard rent-free, passed the following judgment (Ex. 10):—

"The plaintiff, Bechu, who has sued for the sub-settlement of the village of Kanchanpur now files a razinama, in accordance with the terms of which this suit will be dismissed. A fresh suit being filed for the sir, in which a copy of the decree now given will be filed.

DECREE.

The Court accordingly dismisses on his own consent the plaintiff Bechu's claim to the sub-settlement of Kanchanpur and decrees to the same rent-free for ever three hundred and two bighas and twelve biswas (302 bighas 12 biswas) standard in the same village (together with all zemindari rights of which a note is made in the razinama) according to the extract of khasra filed and attested.

"28th March 1867.

(Sd.) HENRY BOYS."

It appears from the fard ahkam recorded on the 19th of January 1867, a copy of which has been filed on behalf of the defendant (vide Ex. A-3), that the petition above referred to was read out to Bechu Singh word for word (harf-ba-harf) and he verified by signifying his acceptance of the terms mentioned in the application filed by him and which had been described then as the razinama. The fard ahkam also shows that the condition stated in the petition had been accepted on behalf of the Mahmudabad estate by one Saiyad Hamiduddin who appeared as a Pleader for the estate.

In the khewat prepared at the last settlement the members of the family of Bechu Singh, who were then in possession of this rent-free holding, were described as holding under a decree for under-proprietary rights (matahti), dated the 28th of March 1867, rent-free for ever, generation after generation. It is on the strength of this evidance that the appellant contends that, the rights decreed in favour of Bechu Singh by the Settlement Court in the year 1867 were under-proprietary rights and that, therefore, Zorawar Singh, one of the successors of Bechu Singh, had full rights of transfer in regard to the land in suit. I regret I cannot accept this contention. It appears to be clear beyond any reasonable doubt that the rights mentioned in the razinama filed by Bechu Singh were rights, as expressly stated in that document, heritable but non-transferable. The judgment of the Settlement Officer mentions clearly that the plaintiff's suit is to be dismissed in accordance with the terms of the razinama. It is, therefore, impossible for me to read the judgment passed by the Settlement Officer without referring to the razinama filed by Bechu Singh, to which it expressly relates. The judgment and the decree have to be read as a whole and it would not be reasonable to separate the one from the other. On a reference to the razinama all doubts are set at rest. That document expressly shows that the rights conferred by the Mahmudabad estate on Bechu Singh were non-transferable. A reference has been made to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lal Sripat Singh v. Lal Basant Singh (1) in which they have confirmed a judgment of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh. I do not think that that case can be considered any authority for the proposition now contended for by the appellant. In that case a decree for under-proprietary rights was passed by the Settlement Court on the basis of a compromise but subsequently on the statement of the decree-holder words were added to the effect that the rights were non-transferable. Their Lordships held that where a decree declared a person entitled to a certain legal status but added words which totally nullified the previous declaration the subsequent words limiting the rights, which under the law attached to such status, should be ignored and that so long as he retained that status he would be entitled to those rights which attached to it. In the present case the Settlement Officer did not choose to confer under-proprietary rights upon Bechu Singh. The only rights for which he passed a decree in his favour were the rights of a holder "rent-free for ever." He nowhere indicated in his decree that the rights to be decreed were the under-proprietary rights and when I turn to the judgment I find it clearly stated that the plaintiff Bechu Singh's suit for the sub-settlement of the village Kanchanpur was to be dismissed in accordance with the terms of the razinama filed. Under these circumstances it appears to me that the present case is distinguishable from the one quoted above. In my opinion the meaning of the decree is beyond any doubt, and the rights conferred upon Bechu Singh were those of a rent-free holder (muafidar) for ever, generation to generation.

I, therefore, hold that the interpretation placed by the learned Subordinate Judge upon the judgment and the decree of the Settlement Court is quite correct, and that the rights possessed by Bechu Singh and his successors are heritable but non-transferable.

In regard to the entry in the khewat it is enough for me to state that the khewat filed is of the recent settlement and it cannot be said that the description of the decree entered therein can be considered as any index for holding that the authorities which were responsible for passing the decree in the year 1867 intended that the decree in question was to be a decree for under-proprietary rights. I am of opinion that where the origin of any entry is not known an entry itself might afford an indication of the rights conferred but where the origin itself is not in doubt and where according to the entry itself the fountain-source of the rights can be traced it is not safe to rely upon the entry itself, but recourse must be had to the origin itself to discover what the rights conferred actually are. I am supported in this view by a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India v. Srinivasa Chariar (2).

It is also contended on behalf of the appellant that the present case should not be treated as a case of a transfer but merely a case of a surrender of his rights by a member of a joint Hindu family in favour of another member, and in support of this contention reliance is placed on a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reported as Bakhtawar Singh v. Ram Singh (3). This contention of the appellant cannot, however, be accepted. The plaintiff-appellant nowhere took up this plea in the plaint and no issue was framed by the Trial Court embodying the said plea. Zorawar Singh gave his evidence in this case on behalf of the plaintiff and he said that Bechu Singh was his own brother, that when the decree was passed all the brothers of Bechu Singh were joint and that he had 1/6th share in the land decreed by the Settlement Court. He also stated that he was at that time joint with his brothers and that they had separated afterwards but the plaintiff, the son of one of his brothers Jot Singh, used to dine with him always. It, therefore, appears to me that the plaintiff-appellant under those circumstances cannot be allowed to set up a case which he never pleaded in the Trial Court, and which is contradicted by the evidence of Zōrawar Singh, his own witness.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the suit of the plaintiff-appellant was rightly dismissed by the Court below and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court; exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 2nd of May 1923.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of fractional shares in certain holdings and groves. The plaintiff is the daughter's son of one Bhairo deceased and the defendants are nephews of Bhairo. One of the points in dispute was whether Bhairo was joint with his nephews or separate. Both the Courts below have found the point in favour of the plaintiff and held that Bhairo was separate from his nephews. The holdings, however, remained joint and thus Bhairo and his nephews were co-owners of specific shares in the various holdings. The plaintiff claimed to have acquired interest in the occupancy holdings and groves by virtue of a deed of gift executed by Bhairo in his favour and also because he was the daughter's son and was sharing in cultivation with Bhairo during the latter's lifetime. None of the Courts below have held that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the strength of this alleged gift. So far as the tenancies which are the subject-matter of appeal are concerned, a gift would not transfer any title to the plaintiff.

The Court of first instance found that there was abundant evidence that both Musammat Dhiraji and her son the present plaintiff lived with Bhairo and were joint in cultivation with him. On the basis of this finding he decreed the claim. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not share in cultivation with Bhairo. If this finding were binding on me absolutely I would have to dismiss the appeal. The finding ordinarily would be a finding of fact and would be binding upon me. But after some consideration I have come to the conclusion that this finding is vitiated by the circumstance that the learned Judge has not appreciated the true meaning of the expression 'sharing with him in cultivation' and his finding does not mean anything more than that the plaintiff was not actually ploughing the fields when Bhairo was alive. My reasons are as follows:—

(1) The learned Judge thought that the plaintiff must have been twelve years of age when Bhairo died. He then remarked "a boy of this age could hardly share in cultivation". Although it is unlikely that a boy of the age of twelve years would actually plough the fields, yet there is nothing strange in his helping his maternal grandfather in his cultivation. Sharing in cultivation does not necessarily mean actual ploughing. A person who helps another in his agricultural pursuits would be sharing in cultivation although he does not actually plough the fields. It has been held in the case of Hari Singh v. Joti Singh (1) that sharing is not confined to ploughing sowing, attending the crops or reaping them. In the case of Ram Kishore v. Gauri Shankar (2) even a boy of ten years who was helping the last tenant was held to be sharing in cultivation.

(2) The learned Judge nowhere says that he disbelieves the plaintiff's evidence. On the other hand he thought that "the statements of plaintiff's own witnesses show that he really did not share in cultivation", but if the statements of plaintiff's witnesses Jasodanand and Mahadeo referred to by the learned Judge are to be accepted, the plaintiff's case is fully established.

(3) The learned Judge says that Jasodanand stated that he saw the plaintiff cultivating from 12 to 15 years, and then because Bhairo died 12 years before the witness's statement, the learned Judge thought that it was clear that the plaintiff could not be joint in cultivation with him. This is hair-splitting. The witness had given a period '12 to 15 years' which was a mere estimate and there was no justification for pinning him down to the lower limit of 12 years. Even if he pinned down to the lower limit, a difference of a few months may yet prove that the plaintiff was joint in cultivation before Bhairo died. The witness, Jasodanand in his examination-in-chief has distinctly stated that the plaintiff was joint in cultivation in the lifetime of Bhairo, (Ramdeo Bhairo ke sath kheti karta tha).

(4) The learned Judge thought that the witness Mahadeo was more clear because he stated that the plaintiff began cultivation after the death of Bhairo. Here the learned Judge has misread the statement of Mahadeo. Mahadeo in his examination-in-chief has stated that Ramdeo used to share in the cultivation with Bhairo: (Bhairo ke sath kheti bari karta tha). In cross-examination he stated that he began to plough the fields after the death of Bhairo: (jotne shuru kia). The learned Judge apparently has thought that sharing in cultivation is the same thing as ploughing.

For the reasons given above I am of opinion that the finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court is unsatisfactory and is vitiated, and that a clear finding on the evidence already on the record is called for. I accordingly send down the following issue to the lower Appellate Court:—

(1) Did the plaintiff Ramdeo share in the cultivation of all or any of the holdings in dispute with Bhairo during the latter's lifetime?

NATHU RAM AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, MUKTSAR, DISTRICT FEROZEPORE, THROUGH ITS PRESIDENT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 131—Reservoir, demolition of—Damages—Municipality preventing re-building of reservoir—Good faith—Perpetual injunction, issue of.

Under s. 131 of the Municipal Act, a Committee cannot order the demolition of a reservoir, it can only have it filled up.

Where, however, a Municipality has acted in good faith in having a reservoir demolished, a plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction to the effect that the Committee should be perpetually restrained from preventing him from re-building his reservoir.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 1st June 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Fazilka, District Ferozepore, dated the 20th May 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Gokal Chand sued the Municipal Committee of Muktsar for the issue of a perpetual injunction directing it not to prevent the plaintiff from re-building his small reservoir for holding water, and for recovery of Rs. 200 as damages for the loss caused to him by the illegal act of the Committee in demolishing his reservoir. The Court of first instance decreed the claim for the injunction and also awarded damages amounting to Rs. 50. On first appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the suit. He held that the Committee acted bona fide and though it committed a technical irregularity in not filling up the reservoir instead of demolishing it this did not matter. This second appeal was admitted on the question as to whether the plaintiff should not be awarded damages.

It was contended before me that once an appeal is admitted, it is admitted as a whole. This is supported by Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (1) and Janaki Nath Hore v. Prabhasini Dasi (2). The question, however, is not important in this case as it is clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to the injunction claimed to the effect that the Committee should be perpetually restrained from preventing him from re-building his reservoir. The Committee clearly acted in good faith, its only mistake being that it demolised the reservoir instead of filling it up. That, however, is no ground for the issue of a perpetual injunction.

There remains the question of damages. Under s. 131 of the Municipal Act the Committee had only power to require the reservoir to be filled up. It was, therefore, technically wrong in demolishing it. For that act, it seems to me, the plaintiff is entitled to damages. By demolishing the reservoir the Committee must have broken up the bricks with which it was made and it cannot be said that no damage was, therefore, done. The damage, however, must have been slight. It is not clear on the record what the actual damage was, but both Counsel stated that they did not desire a remand to ascertain the damage and that a small sum might be fixed by me as representing the loss to the plaintiff. A fair sum in the circumstances, in my opinion, will be Rs. 15. I accordingly accept the appeal and decree that amount. I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

OUDH CHIEF COURT.

Criminal Appeal No. 710 of 1925.
January 12, 1926.
Present:—Sir Louis Stuart, Kt., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Misra.

MUKTA PRASAD and others —Accused—Appellants
versus
EMPEROR—Complainant—Respondent.

Murder case—Local inspection and preparation of plan by Trying Judge—Police diaries, nature of entries in—Discrepancy between diaries and inquiry—Effect—Trial Judge's opinion about witnesses—Witnesses credibility not shaken—Judge's duty.

It is a commendable procedure on the part of the Trying Judge to visit the spot on the conclusion of a murder case and to prepare a plan of the locality showing as to who are the witnesses who live in close proximity to the house of the deceased. [p. 198, col. 1.]

The entries in the Police diaries are not exhaustive and in a protracted inquiry before the Trial Court little weight attaches to a discrepancy between those entries and the inquiry. [p. 202, col. 2.]

Considerable weight must be attached to the opinion of the Judge who hears the witnesses as to their relative credibility. Where the record does not show that the witnesses on either side have been materially discredited or greatly shaken in cross-examination it is the duty of the Judge to decide which side are telling the truth. Where the Judge has tried the case with marked care and intelligence, his opinion as to credibility of witnesses should ordinarily be accepted. [p. 203, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, at Unao, dated the 22nd December 1925.

Messrs. John Jackson and Ram Krishna Chaudhri, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Mukta Prasad, Madari Lal, Jangi Singh, Lachhman, Bharat Singh, Bahadur Singh and Surjan Singh have been convicted by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow of the offence of murder under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. The first-four named have been sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. The last-three-named have been sentenced to transportation for life. All appeal. The reference in confirmation in respect of the first four is also before us.

The village of Kuremau in the Unao District with the conterminous villages is owned and possessed by a large religious endowment, of which the head is known as the Mahant Baba. The present Mahant Baba is Baba Harsaran Das. He does not reside in the Unao District. The management of the villages of the estate is in the hands of agents, under whom are ziladars. The responsibility for the collection of rents in the group of villages consisting of Kuremau and the adjoining villages (the Ariars and Mirzapur) is in the charge of a ziladar who resides for the purpose in Mirzapur, the village adjoining Kuremau on the south. On the 21st of September 1925 the ziladar in question was the appellant Mukta Prasad. The appellants Madari Lal, Jangi Singh, Bharat Singh, Bahadur Singh and Surjan Singh were at that time collecting peons of the estate. Lachhman Pasi was gorait of Mirzapur and in the employment of the estate.

Two brothers the elder Jodha Singh a man of 35 and the younger Bharose Singh a man of 25, resided on that date in Kuremau. They were sons of a Thakur called Man Singh. They claimed that their ancestors were the original zemindars of Kuremau. There is reason to suppose that their mother was not a Thakurain. The brothers lived in separate houses in the inhabited area of Kuremau, the houses being a short distance apart. Jodha Singh had living with him a Thakur widow of the name of Indrani. Bharose Singh had living with him Indrani's daughter Sheorani who was also a Thakur widow. These women kept house for each brother. Two elderly women called Bhagana and Kailasa who were related to Indrani lived in the houses apparently enjoying the hospitality of the brothers. Jodha Singh and Bharose were men in very humble circumstances. Their whole means of subsistence was a small holding, a portion of which they cultivated as sub-tenants and a portion of which they cultivated as tenants. Bharose Singh was a man of criminal antecedents. He had been sentenced in 1916 when he was a youth to three weeks' imprisonment for theft and was again convicted and sentenced in June 1919 to two years' rigorous imprisonment for burglary with violence. The Police kept up a history-sheet against him. Nothing has been elicited against the character of Jodha Singh.

At 3 a. m. on the 22nd September Mukta Prasad, appellant, accompanied by Bharat Singh appellant, Bahadur Singh appellant and Surjan Singh appellant, collecting peons (the translator of the first report has wrongly translated here the word 'sipahi' as 'constables'; it clearly means 'collecting peons'), arrived at the Safipur Police Station bringing with them the corpse of Bharose Singh on a bullock-cart together with a bamboo-staff, to the end of which was attached a sort of sickle-shaped axe-head known as a pharsa, and a bamboo-lathi. Mukta Prasad proceeded to write out a report which is on the record. We note a peculiar error which, although it has no bearing upon the decision of the appeal, has given the Court some trouble in tracing Kuremau on the map. In this report Kuremau is described as 6 miles north of the Police Station. It is actully 6 miles due east of the Police Station. The fact that such a misdescription can arise in a Police report made by a man of some intelligence is sufficient to show with what caution descriptions of position made by witnesses from villages in India should be received.

The report was as follows:—

"I, on the 21st September, 1925, having realized rent from village Bithaur, Ariar Khurd and Kuremau, was going from Kuremau to Mirzapur Kalan at about 7 P.M. with Jangi Singh, Bharat Singh, Madari Lal, Surjan Singh, Bahadur Singh, the sipahis of the estate, and Lachhman gorait. There was a cotton-field, at a distance of about 6 or 7 fields from village Kuremau; in it about 12 dacoits were sitting, but I had not observed them from before; when we arrived there near the field. one of them dealt a pharsa blow to Jangi Singh, sipahi, who walked ahead of us. It struck at the back of the said peon. He had a purse containing the income, about four or five hundred rupees. I cannot give the exact figure as I had not totalled the siaha by that time. The purse of money fell from the hands of the peon. I followed the poen on horse back. Five other peons and the gorait followed me. When they saw the assault they came in front of us and began to exchange blows, and in the meantime I fired 2 rounds one after another out of my gun but I cannot say correctly whether anyone was wounded or not. I fired only to terrify; and in the meanwhile some dacoits took to their heels. Bharose Singh stayed back. After exchanging two or four blows he also fled towards his house. We pursued him and overtook him near his house and he fell down and then three women came out and fell on him and all began to cry. Our peons arrested him. Some time after we brought Bharose Singh to Mirzapur. Subsequently we came to the Police Station on a bullock-ekka. I cannot say correctly which of the dacoits took away the purse. When the money-purse had dropped down, one man said 'Pick up the purse.' I surely saw the man picking it up but could not recognise him. Bharose Singh was alive when we started from Mirzapur but he died on the way. Three men of our side, Jangi Singh, Madari Lal and Lachhman gorait have been wounded. I failed to recognize anybody except Bharose Singh because the dacoits had wrapped their safas (turbans) round their head and face in such a way that I could not recognise any of them."

The following injuries upon the body of Bharose Singh were found at the post mortem examination. There was an incised penetrating wound making a hole 2″ × 1″ on the right side of the chest. This went deep into the chest cavity, cut the seventh and eighth ribs through and penetrated the liver. In the body there was a quart of blood from internal hæmorrhage. This wound had clearly been inflicted by a spear or some weapon of that nature. There were 5 incised wounds caused by a cutting weapon on the skull. These were surface-wounds: the longest was $2\frac{1}{2}''$ and the shortest was 1″. There was another long similar wound over the left eye. There was another similar wound on the outside of the left-arm above the elbow. This was not very long. There was a long incised cutting wound on the right wrist and 2 incised wounds on the right leg, a long incised wound 3″ long in front of the right ankle and a cut across a toe of the right foot. The cause of death was clear. It was due in the main to the first spear-thrust which had, in addition to the injury caused to the lungs, penetrated the liver, but even in the absence of that injury the loss of blood from the other wounds and the shock would have been sufficient to cause death. The man had been hacked about cruelly.

Sub-Inspector Ram Sarup, officer-in-charge of the Safipur Police Station, left Safipur for Kuremau at 10 A.M. on the 22nd of September 1925. He arrived at Kuremau at about 2 P.M. He clearly did not hurry as the distance is only 6 miles, but it is to be noted that in so far as he then had the opportunity of determining the nature of the case, there was no necessity for expedition. According to the report made by Mukta Prasad no one was likely to be able to identify any of the alleged dacoits with the exception of the dead man Bharose Singh. He had clearly stated that the dacoits had so concealed their features that no one could identify them. From the point of view of a Police Officer such an investigation was hardly likely to result in much. The property alleged to have been stolen was entirely in cash and difficult to trace. In the face of the first report subsequent identification would not have been favourably viewed in a Court and beyond noting salient features of the case there was very little to do. The Sub-Inspector proceeded to the place where according to Mukta Prasad the dacoity had been committed. He had found there some 20 drops of what looked like human blood. These drops were almost in a straight line, a yard to a yard and a quarter long. They were all about the circumference of the top of a man's index finger, some a little larger and some a little smaller. Outside this line of drops of blood, one yard to one yard and a quarter long, there was no blood discovered on the fields where the dacoity was said to have been committed. An examination of the ground close to the deceased Bharose's house in Kuremau showed eight large patches of blood. The exact dimensions of these patches are not given but the trend of the evidence is that they were large patches. The Sub-Inspector in addition to examining the locality took the statements of witnesses whose names he had obtained from Mukta Prasad as to the commission of the alleged dacoity. It is to be remembered that at that time his attention was fixed upon the dacoity-charge and that he had then no reason to suspect that Bharose Singh had been murdered by Mukta Prasad and his party in circumstances absolutely different from the circumstances set out in the first report. As the first report had referred to the women who had fallen on Bharose Singh's prostrate body, he took on the 22nd of September the statements of the woman Sheorani who lived with Bharose Singh and the woman Indrani who lived with his brother Jodha Singh. Their statements introduced a completely different account of the manner in which Bharose Singh had met his death but in themselves they were hardly sufficient to give the investigating officer more than an indication that the matter might not be as Mukta Prasad had stated it. The Sub-Inspector remained at Kuremau till the evening of the 23rd. He went back to the Police Station that night. On the 23rd in addition to other witnesses he examined Shankar Barhai of Kuremau who has given evidence for the prosecution. His statement went to support the statement of the two women.

On the 24th September the Sub-Inspector returned to the village. At 10 A. M. he came across Jodha Singh, the deceased man's brother. The Sub-Inspector has stated in his evidence that when Jodha Singh appeared before him he bore marks of injury on his body and was perplexed. Jodha Singh made the following statement and gave the names of a large number of witnesses whom he stated would be able to give evidence of the occurrence. This was the statement:—

"I and Bharose Singh were own brothers. We are the old zemindars of Kuremau and never used to pay bhent to Mukta Prasad, ziladar, or do begar work for him. Bharose Singh did not mind the authority of the ziladar. Land of the village had been leased to Chandi Singh Thakur of Ahmadpur, which was under the cultivation of Bharose Singh as sub-tenant for 3 years. In the month of Sawan last, Mukta Prasad ziladar, got a deed of relinquishment in respect of that land executed by Chandi Singh but Bharose Singh did not relinquish the land. The ziladar let out the land to Seoki Lodh and his son-in-law Hulasi, Mohan and Rajnu Bania. Bharose Singh did not deliver possession to these persons and sowed cotton and jundhri. The ziladar wanted to have the cotton and jundhri sowed by Bharose Singh uprooted and got the field ploughed again but Bharose Singh did not allow him to do so and said, 'First get me ejected through Court then have the land relinquished.' Upon this the ziladar became very angry. On Monday, 4 days ago, a bazar was held at Khargura and I was ready to go to the bazar. A pahar or 6 gharis of the day was remaining when Mukta Prasad ziladar arrived with 10 or 12 men and, having sat at Meharban Mukhia's house, demanded rent from me. I paid Rs. 14 and asked for a receipt. He said that I might take it afterwards. Bharose Singh was at his house. The ziladar sent one of his men to Bharose Singh to tell him that he should relinquish the land, otherwise it would not be good for him. He replied: 'I will not leave it at your request: get it relinquished through Court'. Upon this Mukta Prasad ziladar, Bharat Singh, Jangi Singh sipahi Salik Brahman and Lachhman Pasi gorait, went at a secluded place and held some conversation. Lachhman gorait sat to make water where my cattle are tied. When I remonstrated with him he showed readiness to fight. Hearing my voice Bharose Singh also came up and told Lachhman not to make water there. From the other side the ziladar rose from his seat with his gun, and his sepahis, namely, Bharat Singh, Jangi Singh, Madari Lal, Surjan Singh and Lachhman gorait as well as Salik Brahman and two or three other persons, whose names I do not know, came with lathis, spear and kanta.. The ziladar said 'Kill this man, I will see the consequences,' and he fired his gun. Mukta Prasad and his men began to beat him with lathis, spear and kanta. I came in front of Bharose Singh: then they began to strike us both. We too dealt one or two blows with lathis. Bharose Singh fell down wounded and I fled, having received injuries. Then all the men began to strike him. At that time several persons of this village as well as of other villages were seeing (the affray). I give their names below. The ziladar and his men killed my brother Bharose Singh. I was wandering about for fear, thinking that if they would seize me they would kill me also.

"Names of witnesses:—

Kallu Chamar, Babbu Teli, Dori Dhobi, Ghariba Kori, Thakur Darzi, Raghunath Singh Thakur, residents of Kuremau, Qadir Behna of Mirzapur, Bisram Singh and Gindan Singh Thakurs, residents of Purwa, Nannhu Brahman of Ariar, Gaja Singh Thakur of Salempur, Gauri Shankar Singh, Rampal Singh and Sripal Singh Thakurs of Jodha Khera, hamlet of Kurari"

On inspection the following injuries were found on the person of Jodha Singh:—

"(1) A wound about 1 inch in length on the upper portion of forehead on the left side.

(2) A wound half inch in length above the temple on the head on the left side.

(3) One wound 1/4 inch in length above the forehead, front side of the head.

(4) Swelling on the back side of the head near the left ear.

(5) Scratch on the back and at 3 places marks of lathi blows.

(6) Marks of lathi blow and scratch on the left shoulder.

(7) Scratches at 3 places on the waist.

(8) Scratch and swelling on the wrist of the right hand.

(9) Scratch and swelling below the calf and knee-joint of the left leg.

(10) Slight scratches at 3 places on the right knee-joint.

On the 24th the Sub-Inspector recorded amongst other statements the statements of the witnesses for the prosecution, Dori Dhobi, Kallu Chamar, Babbu Teli, Ghariba Kori, all of Kuremau, Qadir Bakhsh Darzi of Mirzapur, Sripal Singh a zemindar of Jodhakhera, Gindan Lal a zemindar of Purwa and Gaja Singh a zemindar of Salempur. After completing his investigatian he rejected the story told by Mukta Prasad and arrested him with the remaining appellants and also a man called Sheo Ratan alias Salik, the son of Meharban the headman of Kuremau, on the charge of murdering Bharose Singh. The last-named man was committed to sessions, but acquitted. It is necessary to note in the preliminary history of the case that the Police prosecuted before the decision of the sessions case against Mukta Prasad and the rest a tahsildar of the estate called Birman Singh, a collecting peon, a gardener of the estate, and three other persons on a charge of criminally intimidating the witnesses in the murder case under the provisions of s. 506 of the Indian Penal Code. These persons were discharged by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 24th November 1925

The foregoing remarks show how the case against the appellants came into being. We shall now proceed to discuss the evidence in that case. We commence our discussion of the evidence with a few preliminary remarks. The case is one of difficulty but our difficulties have been appreciably lessened by the excellent manner in which the case has been tried by the learned Sessions Judge. We cannot speak too highly of the care and intelligence which he has devoted to bringing out the evidence and we are particularly impressed by the judgment which is a model of what a judgment should be in a case of this nature. We have also had the great advantage of having the case of the appellants argued before us by an experienced Counsel, Mr. John Jackson, who appeared also for the appellants in the Sessions Court. Although we do not arrive at the conclusions at which he would have us arrive we are indebted to him for an exceptionally careful, fair and well-reasoned argument. The learned Government Advocate has exhibited great ability in bringing out the case for the Crown. This case has the advantage of presenting a clear-cut issue Is the story told by the prosecution to be accepted or is the story told by the defence to be accepted? On each side there is evidence. That evidence has been weighed and sifted by the learned Sessions Judge but the task has necessarily to be undertaken again in appeal.

The story told for the prosecution is in the main the story told by Jodha Singh to the Police Sub-Inspector on the 24th September 1925. According to this story both brothers were not favourites of the servants of the estate. Of the two Bharose was the most disliked. The evidence for the prosecution shows Bharose Singh as a man who would be considered by the servants of the estate to be a contumacious and turbulent tenant, who boasted that his ancestors had been zemindars of the village, refused allegiance to the proprietor and treated both him and his servants with contempt. Great stress has been laid by Jodha Singh upon the fact that he and his brother would not accede to any demands made upon them for forced labour. Their attitude appeared to have been more than independent. It appears to have been truculent. Great stress is laid by Jodha Singh in his evidence upon the alleged incident which is stated to be the last chapter in the history of the ill-feeling between the deceased and the people of the estate. The allegation is that a certain Chandi Singh had a holding of about 9 bighas. Chandi Singh, who has been called as a witness upon the point, is a distant relative of Jodha Singh. According to the prosecution story Chandi Singh sub-let this holding to the deceased. Mukta Prasad according to this story had obtained under false pretences the signature of Chandi Singh to a writing on a piece of paper which Chandi Singh supposed was connected with a receipt for rent that he had paid, but which he subsequently discovered was a relinquishment of the holding. The deceased is said to have refused to relinquish the holding, and he sowed crops on it in defiance of Mukta Prasad, who had let it to other tenants to whom the deceased refused possession. The first part of the prosecution story relates to an alleged attempt said to have been made by Mukta Prasad to force the deceased out of his holding. Mukta Prasad is stated by Jodha Singh to have come to the village on the 20th September and ordered the deceased to give up the land. The deceased replied that he would not quit the land except under the orders of the Court. Mukta Prasad is then said to have threatened him. On the day of the occurrence it is stated that Surjan Singh, appellant, was sent by Mukta Prasad to the deceased to force him into a relinquishment. The deceased refused to relinquish the land and repeated that he would not go out until he was put out by a Court's decree. Then the unpleasant incident alleged in connection with Lachhman appellant happened. This man who is a Pasi—a caste so low as to be considered contemptible—is said to have come between 4 P. M and 5 P. M. and passed water deliberately over the cow-dung in the place where Jodha Singh's cattle were tethered. Jodha Singh says that he told him to find some other place for the purpose as the women of his family collected the cow-dung for fuel and that the gorait replied that the whole village belonged to his master and he would ease himself where he wished. This brought the deceased from his house. He addressed Lachhman in terms of great contempt and impressed on him the fact that he was a Pasi. It is said that upon this Mukta Prasad and his entourage came to the spot and that Mukta Prasad shouted to the deceased to come on if he was a true Thakur. As on the showing of the defence itself, the deceased's mother was not a Thakurain, the taunt was one that was likely to have enraged the deceased to fury. It is clear from the prosecution evidence that he and Jodha Singh came out with lathis and it would look as though the brothers lost all sight of the risk they were incurring. The defence has not challenged the prosecution evidence as to the manner in which Mukta Prasad and his party were armed. It is their own case that the party was so armed. The equipment was remarkable as the equipment of persons whose ostensible object was to collect rent. Mukta Prasad had a single barrel breach-loading gun. His men had spears and axe-heads fixed to the end of the bamboos. The explanation advanced by the defence for this preparation is that dacoity at the time was rife in the Unao District and that it was necessary for those who wished to save themselves from violent attack to go forth well prepared. It is true that dacoities were very rife in the Unao District at the time. Whether it was necessary to take such precautions when Mukta Prasad's party was never more than 2 miles or so from their own village Mirzapur which is one mile from Kuremau is another matter. The fact remains that the party was so armed. According to the prosecution story when the deceased assumed this truculent attitude Mukta Prasad fired two shots at him from his gun at a very short distance. Both shots missed and he is then said to have called on his men to kill the deceased, saying that he would see they did not suffer by so doing. A fight then took place in which Mukta Prasad's men used their spears, axes and lathis. Jodha Singh escaped with a few lathi blows and losing heart ran away. He wandered from village to village, not returning to his own village till the night of the 23rd September. Mukta Prasad's party continued their attack upon the deceased as he lay helpless on the ground. The women of the house came out and fell upon his body weeping and lamenting. Mukta Prasad's men beat them and dragged them off. They then got a bullock-cart and took away the body of the deceased. Bharose Singh was unconscious and possibly dead. He was at the last gasp if he was not dead. The time of the occurrence was between 4 and 5 P. M. It took place in broad day-light.

This is the prosecution story. The evidence in support of the alleged attempt to deprive the deceased of his holding is contained mainly in the evidence of Jodha Singh but it is also supported by the evidence of Chandi Singh. The evidence as to the actual attack upon the deceased is the evidence of a very large number of alleged eye-witnesses, including Jodha Singh, Sheorani and Indrani. The learned Judge took a course which is greatly to be commended in cases of this nature. When the evidence was practically concluded he visited the spot himself and prepared a sketch-plan of the locality. This is on the record. From his investigation we have been able to ascertain who were the witnesses who live in close proximity to the house of the deceased. Between 4 and 5 P. M. it would not be unusual for persons living in close proximity to the house of the deceased to be in their own house. The first of these witnesses is Shankar carpenter. Taking the chaupal of Meharban the headman as a place close to the scene of the occurrence alleged by the prosecution we find that the house of Shankar Barhai is 99 yards from the chaupal. Shankar states that his attention was directed by fire of the gun. He ran out to see what was happening and he distinctly saw the appellants' party attacking the deceased and Jodha Singh in broad day-light. The next witness is Dori washerman. His house is only about 40 yards from the chaupal. According to him his attention was directed when he was in his house by hearing the abuse and he went out to see what was the matter. He says he saw a gun being fired and the subsequent incidents. The next witness is a Chamar called Kallu. His house is about 66 yards from the chaupal. He says that his attention was directed while he was in his house by the fire of the gun and that he saw the remaining incidents. The next witness is Babbu a Teli. His house is about 75 yards from the chaupal. He says that when he was in his house he heard a gun-shot and went to the spot and described the affair in the same way. The next witness was Ghariba, a Kori or a Hindu weaver. His house is about 45 yards from the chaupal. He says that he came out, being attracted by the verbal altercation, and that he saw the gun-fire and all the subsequent incidents. These five witnesses are residents of the village. The next witness is Qadir Bakhsh. He is a tailor of the adjoining village of Mirzapur. He says that he happened to be in Kuremau at the time and that he was passing the house of Shankar Barhai when he saw Jodha Singh passing him bleeding from the head, that he pushed on and saw the party attacking the prostrate body of the deceased. This man is a fairly well-to-do tailor who states his earnings to be 45 rupees a month. The next witness is a Thakur, Sripal Singh, a substantial zemindar of the village of Jodhakhera which is 4 or 5 miles from Kuremau. According to his story he had been that day to the village Ariar to inquire about a pair of bullocks which he wanted to purchase, that he had gone to see a man called Tulshi Lodh of Ariar Khurd who had a pair of bullocks for sale but they could not agree to the price and no bargain was made. He happened to be passing through Kuremau on his way home. His attention was attracted by a gun-shot. He came on the spot and saw the last part of the attack upon the deceased. The next witness was Gindan Singh, a zemindar of the village of Purwa, which is about 2 miles from Kuremau. He is a zemindar not as well-off as Sripal Singh. According to him he had been to the bazar in a village called Khargoura to buy a pair of dhotis but could not find any to his liking at a suitable price. He said that he was passing through Kuremau on his way home and hearing a gun-shot came to the spot and witnessed the end of the occurrence. The last witness is Gaja Singh, a zemindar of Salempur, a village some 2 miles from Kuremau. This man is a fairly substantial zemindar who also sells cloth. He said that he had been to the Khargoura bazar to sell cloth that day and on his way back had gone to Ariar to endeavour to get some money which was due to him. He was passing through Kuremau to his home. He was also attracted by the sound of a gun-shot and saw the last part of the attack upon the deceased. There is not one of these witnesses who was shaken or discredited. They were cross-examined by a very competent Counsel. Not only were they not discredited: for the most part they were not shaken in cross-examination. They told straight forward and clear stories. All agreed as to the details of the occurrence, and all agreed to the time of the occurrence as between 4 P. M. and 5 P. M. It is true that they did not agree as to the exact details of the attack or the positions in which the parties were standing but they fixed the place as satisfactorily as witnesses could ordinarily fix the place at the spot where the large patches of the blood were found eventually by the Sub-Inspector. It is true that some of these witnesses gave evidence in the s. 506 case against the estate-servants in which the latter were charged with intimidating witnesses and that that case resulted in a discharge of the accused; but after reading the judgment in that case we are not of opinion that the result in any way discredits the honesty of the witnesses who gave evidence in it. The Magistrate who discharged the accused took the view that the sufficient cause had not been made out to justify the framing of a charge but he did not reflect adversely on the honesty of the witnesses. He was not satisfied that sufficient cause existed for their conviction.

This is the main evidence for the prosecution. We need not discuss the evidence of Sheorani, Indrani and Jodha Singh. They had some interest in the matter. The other witnesses had no such interest.

The main evidence for the defence is contained in the statements of Dibba Bania, Meharban Brahman, Chuni Bania, Nannhe Lodh and Sheo Lal Singh. Dibba Bania admittedly lives close to the scene of the occurrence. Now, it is to be noted that the prosecution and defence agree as to the spot where the deceased's last struggles took place. His story supports absolutely the defence story of the affair. According to him the sun had set and darkness had come on when Mukta Prasad and his party after collecting rents in Kuremau had departed for Mirzapur. Shortly after their departure he heard two gun-shots from outside the inhabited area on the south and saw a man subsequently identified as the deceased running past the deceased's own house towards the dwelling-house and chaupal of Meharban with 3 men pursuing him. This man got towards the dwelling-house of Meharban when he turned and faced his pursuers. He had in his hand a bamboo-staff on which was fixed an axe-head, that is a pharsa, and with this pharsa he turned on his pursuers and attacked them. They struck him once or twice and he fell down. After he fell down the women of Jangi Singh and Ram Bharose's house fell on his body and covered it. According to this witness Mukta Prasad who came up later told the story of the attempted dacoity and Mukta Prasad and his party took away the deceased's body on a bullock-cart. Meharban Brahman, the headman of the village whose son Salik was committed for trial but acquitted, has told much the same story. He, of course, lives on the spot. Chunni Bania of Kuremau says that he was in the headman's house at the time and he gives much the same account. Nannhe Lodh who is a cultivator of Kuremau says that he was on his field and that he saw from the distance an occurrence which was clearly the dacoity, which the defence asserts took place, and that he came up to the spot while the deceased was being placed on the cart. Sheopal Singh lambardar and headman of Nurullahnagar which is close to Kuremau stated that he was in the neighbourhood of Kuremau that evening, that he heard two gun-shots after dark and he saw 4 men running towards Kuremau. This is the main evidence for the defence. The witnesses were not discredited or greatly shaken in cross-examination.

We now examine the criticisms directed by Mr. Jackson against the prosecution evidence. The first point which he pressed was that the story that Chandi Singh had been deluded into signing a relinquishment of his holding was absolutely false. He called as a defence witness Rup Chand, the Patwari of Kuremau, and he asked us after examining the evidence of Jodha Singh and Chandi Singh in the light of the Patwari's evidence to find that Chandi Singh had not relinquished his holding and that no attempt had been made to introduce tenants in the place of the deceased who was admittedly a sub-tenant of that holding. We do not find that the Patwari's evidence is of value in this connection. He was not in a position to know whether an attempt had been made to oust Chandi Singh from the holding or what was the intention of Mukta Prasad in respect of replacing Chandi Singh and the deceased (Chandi Singh's sub-tenant) by other persons. The truth of the story as to the holding will have to be decided upon the value that we attach to the evidence of Chandi Singh and Jodha Singh. This we shall indicate later, but we note here that there is nothing substantially improbable in the story told by Jodha Singh upon the point.

The next point which Mr. Jackson urged was that there was no reliable evidence that there was ill-feeling between the deceased and his brother on one hand and the estate-servants on the other. He pointed out that in the previous year Mukta Prasad had clearly let to the deceased a plot of 1 bigha 4 biswa at a rent of Rs. 6. It is established that Mukta Prasad did let this plot to the deceased. The Patwari's evidence is sufficient to prove that point, but the circumstance that a ziladar lets one plot to a man is not sufficient to show that he might not be trying to oust him from another holding: Apart from that the question of enmity is fully established by a respectable witness who was called by the defence itself. This witness is Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad who had formerly been in charge of the Safipur Police Station. He was called by the defence to prove the bad character of the deceased, the object of proving this bad character being to show that the deceased was a man who would be very likely to commit dacoity. He stated in cross-examination: "I know this that there was a long-standing enmity between Bharose Singh aforesaid and the men of the Mahant. He was reputed to be a bad character and the men of the Mahant were also my informants that he was a bad character. Mukta Prasad accused was ziladar of the Mahant in that circle of his estate when I was Sub Inspector of Safipur and he is still there He too used to complain to me about the conduct of Bharose Singh." In face of this evidence we state our conclusion at once upon this point. Mukta Prasad and his party were on very bad terms with the deceased.

Mr. Jackson sought to explain away the evidence of the eye-witnesses Dori, Shankar, Kallu, Babbu and Ghariba upon the suggestion that these men must also be bad characters who were in the gang of the deceased and that as such they would be under the influence of the deceased's brother Jodha Singh who would have no difficulty in inducing them to give false evidence against the man who admittedly caused his brother's death. All these men are in humble circumstances, but it is impossible to discredit them in the manner in which Mr. Jackson would have us do so. The deceased was a bad character. How bad character he was we cannot say. There is nothing to justify us in forming a conclusion that he was a professional dacoit. But even if we did form that conclusion we should have no justification in finding that Bharose Singh was the leader of a gang of dacoits. and even if he were the leader of a gang of dacoits there is nothing to show that the 5 witnesses were members of such a gang or even associated with Bharose Singh in it. They are all close neighbours. They were likely to have been in their houses at the time. Nothing was brought out against the character of any one of them.

In dealing with the evidence of Qadir Bakhsh, Sripal Singh and Gindan Singh and Gaja Singh, Mr. Jackson was unable to do more than suggest that, if the deceased was a leader of a gang of dacoits it was possible that these apparently perfectly respectable persons protected him and shared the proceeds of the dacoities. There is nothing to justify such an assumption. He was unable to criticise the evidence of Shankar, Dori, Kallu, Babbu and Ghariba in great detail. He elicited that a witness who was recorded in the diary as having done nothing more than corroborate Qadir Bakhsh had gone very much further in Court and stated many facts to which Qadir Bakhsh had not deposed. But the entries in the Police diary are not exhaustive and in a lengthy inquiry little turns upon such an alleged discrepancy. Against Sripal Singh, he produced Tulshi Lodh of Ariar Khurd who declared that Sripal's story was completely untrue inasmuch as he (Tulshi) had only had one pair of bullocks which were worth 30 to 40 rupees and that Sripal Singh had never approached him as to their purchase. It is to be noted that Tulshi must be very badly served in respect of plough-bullocks if he has only the services of a pair worth Rs. 20 each, when the price of plough-bullocks at present ranges about Rs. 100.

In order to explain the main difficulty against his clients created by the fact that such a large number of seemingly respectable witnesses have deposed against Mukta Prasad, who is a man of influence in the employment of a wealthy endowment, to support the story of the murder of a poverty-striken ex convict, Mr. Jackson has in addition to the criticisms already mentioned extracted from the statement of Mukta Prasad before the Committing Magistrate a reason for efforts being made to fabricate a strong case against the appellants. This is an allegation that during the course of the investigation, Sub-Inspector Ram Sarup demanded a large sum of money from Mukta Prasad as consideration for investigating the case honestly and putting up the true facts, and that as he refused to pay this sum the Sub-Inspector has deliberately fabricated false evidence to implicate him, an innocent man, and to implicate other innocent men on a charge of murder. There is no evidence to support this allegation. Mr. Jackson was acting within his duty in putting forward this allegation, for the allegation was made by his client himself. But there is absolutely nothing to show that there is any truth in it Not only in view of that allegation but in view of the importance of the issues involved we have examined very carefully the deposition of the Sub Inspector Ram Sarup and have been much impressed by the clear and straightforward way in which he gave his evidence. We consider that the inquiry made by the Sub-Inspector Ram Sarup was an admirably fair inquiry and that he has conducted it without the slightest attempt to favour anyone. He was placed in a position of great difficulty in endeavouring to substantiate a charge against estate-officials of having murdered a man who was an ex-convict and a bad character and we appreciate very greatly the manner in which he has performed his duties.

We now turn to the points of criticism directed against the prosecution which are entered in detail in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. The first point was as to the character of Bharose Singh, the suggestion being that he was a man who would be likely to organise and commit such a dacoity as alleged by the defence. We consider that Bharose Singh was rather a worse character than the Sessions Judge considers him, but, as we have already noted on the main point, the criticism has no value. No implication can be drawn against the prosecution from Bharose Singh's bad character. In fact, Bharose Singh's bad character is a fact in favour of the prosecution for it is intensely unlikely that a mass of witnesses would perjure themselves to oblige the relatives of Bharose Singh. His brother Jodha Singh is a poverty-striken tenant who would ordinarily have no influence in securing, as false witnesses, men of the class of Qadir Bakhsh, Sripal Singh, Gindan Singh and Gaja Singh.

The next point against the prosecution story is based on the procrastination of Jodha Singh in bringing his version of the matter to the knowledge of the Police authority. Mr. Jackson has argued, and argued with force, that Jodha Singh's account of his procrastination as the result of physical injuries and mental distress seems exaggerated. He undoubtedly had been beaten and beaten badly. That is clear from his condition when he appeared before the Sub-Inspector but it appears to us that he was in a position, had he wished, to make a complaint at Safipur Police Station, if not on the night of the 21st September, at any rate on the following day; and he has not been straightforward in explaining his omission to do so at even a later period. The absence of the Sub-Inspector was not a sufficient reason for not making a report. We do not, however, consider that this procrastination affects in any case the truth of the story for the prosecution. It must be remembered that Jodha Singh (if his story be true) was in a state of terror when he left the village.

He had not actually seen his brother die at the hands of Mukta Prasad's party but he could surmise very accurately that his brother was not likely to live long after he left. He might well think that he had incurred the unrelenting resentment of powerful men who had no scruples and were in a position not only to take his life but to put a complexion upon what had happened, which would go not only against his brother but against himself. We are of opinion that he was quite capable of making the report at Safipur if he had wished to, but that he wanted before he made a report to find out what attitude the Police were going to take in the matter and that after remaining in hiding for some time he got back to his house after nightfall and sounded the women as to the position which the Sub-Inspector was taking. When he found that the Sub-Inspector was taking a fair and reasonable view of the matter he then approached the Sub-Inspector and told his story. There is no reason to attach any value to the hypothesis put forward by the defence that he was lurking in the village in concealment from the 21st to the 24th September, fabricating false evidence.

We leave the story for the prosecution for the present and examine the criticisms of the defence. The learned Government Advocate has supplemented the intelligent criticisms of the learned Sessions Judge upon the defence story. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that even in the unfortunate circumstances of the Unao District in September 1925 it would have been an extremely audacious act to have attacked Mukta Prasad and his party at a spot some 150 yards from the deceased's own house and just outside the inhabited area. The place is so near that one of the defence witnesses stated that if two persons talk loudly at the spot indicated their voices will be heard in the village. Further, the story told by Mukta Prasad in the written report which he handed in at 3 A. M. on the 22nd September is not a convincing story. According to this story Jangi Singh appellant was walking in front of the party with the amount collected as rent stated to be four or five hundred rupees (that is to say, he was carrying coin weighing some 10 to 12 pounds) when a dacoit sprang out of a cotton-crop which was proved to be only two to three feet high and struck Jangi Singh a blow with a pharsa on the back of the neck which knocked him down. The medical examination of Jangi Singh shows no injuries from a cutting weapon but only bruises which might have been caused by the bamboo-shaft of a pharsa or by an ordinary lathi. The pharsa which was produced at the Police Station, which was said to have been the property of the deceased and which might equally well have been the pharsa belonging to one of Mukta Prasad's party, is an ordinary lathi with a sickle-head attached to it. It would, of course, be perfectly possible to knock down a man who was not expecting the blow with a lathi from behind and a heavy bag carried by him would naturally fall to the ground when he fell. We have it from this first report that as soon as the bag fell down another dacoit seized it, made off with it and effectively evaded pursuit. To cover him, it is said that the dacoits who had apparently nothing but lathis or pharsas put up a fight with the well-armed party of Mukta Prasad and held them back successfully for a time. It is said that Madari Lal and Lachhman received injuries. They showed injuries to the Doctor. Madari Lal's main injury was an incised wound, an inch and-a-half long, skin-deep, in the web between the left thumb and index-finger. This was apparently caused by a sharp weapon. He had also a very small bruise on the middle of his left arm. The small bruise on the middle of the left arm was a bruise, such as had been inflicted on Jodha Singh, and looked as though it had been caused by a blunt weapon. Such injuries could have been caused in the fight as detailed by the prosecution. A very strong point against the defence story is the nature of the incised wound on Madari. It was skin-deep, and just a sort of wound that could be easily self-inflicted by the point of a sharp pen-knife or a razor. It is almost incredible that such a wound could have been inflicted if the cutting-edge of the pharsa had been applied by a man striking with force. A wound so inflicted would not have been skin-deep. Lachhman's injury was a slight superficial abrasion on the left side of the forehead which had apparently been inflicted by a sharp-pointed weapon. Here again a point of a pen-knife or a razor could have been sufficient. It is incredible that if he had been struck on the forehead with a cutting edge of a pharsa or even a lathi he would not have had more severe injuries. We thus have it that although the dacoits were supposed to have put up a fight Mukta Prasad's party received practically no injuries and yet they were unable to get through the men who were screening the retreat of the dacoit who was running away carrying a bag weighing ten or twelve pounds. This does not sound well. Next we have the account given in the first report as to the injuries inflicted upon the deceased and his pursuit. We note, as the learned Sessions Judge has noted, that the story told in the first report differs in material particulars from the story stated by the defence witnesses. According to the first report, the injuries upon Bharose Singh were inflicted upon the scene of the dacoity and there was no fight inside the village of Kuremau. The evidence of the Civil Surgeon of Unao was to the effect that a man who had received the thrust through the chest which the deceased received could hardly conceivably have run 150 yards. The defence called to rebut this opinion a senior medical man from Lucknow who deposed that in his opinion it was possible for a man to run such a distance after receiving such a wound, but that it was not likely that he could have done so. The circumstances apart from the condition of the deceased's body go all to show that he received this thrust inside the inhabited area of Kuremau. If he had received the injury 150 yards away and then run into Kuremau (presuming that he could have done so) he would be running with a gaping wound in his chest with his lungs and liver penetrated. He must have bled profusely from a wound which was 2 inches long and 1 inch broad. If a diagram be made of 2″ × 1″ it will be seen what a very large cavity this will be in a man's chest. The investigation found a line of what appeared to be blood-drops, some 20 in all, all small. There were no more marks till 150 yards: further on there are 8 large patches of blood. If the deceased had performed the feat of running 150 yards after receiving such a spear-thrust it would be reasonable to expect a track of blood the whole way, and no such track was found. The learned Sessions Judge was under the impression that the drops of blood found in the fields had been left there by Mukta Prasad's party on their way back when they were bringing the dead body of the deceased in the bullock-cart after they had killed him in the village. It is true that the blood-drops in question were some 50 yards from the cart-track, but it would not have been difficult to have sent out a man with some of the blood (which must have been flowing very freely from the deceased) while the party were on their way back and sprinkled it near the field which had been selected as the scene of the alleged dacoity. As we have shown there are indications that injuries were inflicted on Madari Lal and Lachhman between the time that the party left the village and the time when they reached the Safipur Police Station. Many hours had then elapsed and the distance covered was 6 miles. There was ample time to think out a story, inflict injuries, and arrange blood-drops on the ground. The learned Sessions Judge has discussed the story in further detail. We need not follow his criticisms further. It is sufficient to note that we consider them very valuable criticisms.

We are thus left in the end with the evidence for the prosecution that the deceased was wantonly killed between 4 and 5 in the afternoon in the village and the evidence for the defence that he was killed in the dark in exercise of the right of private defence. At all times we attach considerable weight to the opinion of the Judge who heard the witnesses as to their relative credibility. When, as here, the record does not show that the witnesses on either side have been materially discredited or greatly shaken in cross-examination, it is the duty of the Judge to decide which side are telling the truth. When, as here, the Judge has tried the case with marked care and intelligence, his opinion as to credibility of the witnesses should ordinarily be accepted. His conclusions are that the prosecution witnesses have told the truth and that the defence witnesses who have deposed to the incidents of the alleged dacoity have not told the truth. We accept his conclusion and accept it with confidence. We find no reasons to distrust the story as to the intent to dispossess the deceased from his sub-tenancy. We see no reason to disbelieve the evidence that Lachhman was set to insult the two brothers by passing water upon the place where their cattle were kept and that the two brothers were taunted and goaded into a quarrel. We have given full weight to the representations of the learned Counsel for the appellants to the effect that the circumstances of the murder are unusual to a degree. Fortunately they are unusual to a degree. But none-the-less we find the prosecution story to be true. The attitude taken by Mukta Prasad and his party appears to have been this:—They came to the village fully armed not, we believe, with any preconceived intention of killing the deceased or anybody else, and not under any real impression that dacoits were likely to attack him. We believe that they came to the village fully armed because they were deliberately endeavouring to impress the country-side with their power and importance. The matter of the ejectment of the deceased came up once more. The deceased was truculent. An attempt was made to lure him into a quarrel. It succeeded. He became more truculent. Mukta Prasad probably lost his temper and fired his gun in a fit of unreasoning rage Having done so he became even more unreasonable. The feelings of his men were running high. They were being defied by a poverty striken ex-convict who was taking an attitude as though he were the owner of the village. When feelings are as high as this, desperate deeds are occasionally done. This was one.

The evidence for the prosecution is, in our opinion, convincing. One point we have left to the end. It is an important one. The woman, Sheorani, was examined by the Doctor. She had bruises on the back of her right fore-arm and a bruise on the back of her right wrist clearly caused by a blunt weapon. They were just the sort of bruises that would be caused to a woman who was trying to defend herself from blows from lathis while she was protecting a prostrate body. It is difficult to see how such injuries would have been caused if she was merely being pulled off the body of a man whom it was sought to take to the Police Station.

After a careful consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that all the appellants have been rightly convicted. The learned Sessions Judge, who has been scrupulously fair in deciding in the case of each individual prisoner, gave the benefit of the doubt to Salik, the headman's son. We do not see that he was wrong to give him the benefit of the doubt but the circumstance that he acquitted Salik in no way assists any one of the appellants. We find that complicity in this offence has been brought home absolutely to every one of them.

On the question of sentence we are unable to find a cause for reduction in the case of the four men who have been sentenced to death. The remaining 3 men have been sentenced to the minimum sentence allowed by the law against persons convicted of murder. While we are not of opinion that the murder was pre meditated and have already indicated that it was the result of a blaze of anger on the part of Mukta Prasad and his subordinates against a man who was defying their authority, we are unable to reduce the sentences on those men. The murder was wanton, cowardly and horrible. It is painful to think that such a murder, which carries the mind back to the most lawless periods of the history of Oudh, could have been perpetrated at the present time.

We accordingly dismiss all the appeals and in the case of Mukta Prasad, Madari Lal, Jangi Singh and Lachhman direct that the sentences of death passed upon them be confirmed and that they be carried into effect according to law.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Sale of property—Consideration money, balance of, not paid—Offence.

Where the complainant's case is that it was agreed between him and the accused that the consideration money for the sale of property was to be paid by the accused after execution of sale-deed and that the complainant had executed the sale-deed and had got it registered but that the accused refused to pay the money, the dispute is purely of a civil nature and no offence under s. 420, Penal Code is made out [p. 205, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, 24-Pergannas, dated the 12th November 1925, affirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, Alipore, dated the 31st August 1925.

Babus Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Kiran Mohan Sirkar, for the Petitioners.

Babus Bir Bhusan Dutt and SikharKumar Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to the prosecution out of which this Rule has arisen, shortly stated, are as follows:—The complainant sold two thatched huts to the accused No 1 for a sum of Rs. 150. The complainant's case is that the said consideration was to be paid in the following manner, i. e., a sum of Rs. 47 was to be set off on account of a debt which the complainant owed to the accused No. 1 and the balance, namely, a sum of Rs. 103 was to be paid to the complainant by the accused No. 1 on the execution of the document. It is said that the complainant was in a hurry to leave Calcutta and that it was arranged between the parties that the kobala in respect of the huts should be executed and registered forthwith by the complainant and that the said sum of Rs. 103 being the balance of the consideration should be paid by the accused No. 1 afterwards. The complainant complains that although the kobala was executed and registered in accordance with the said arrangement, the accused No. 1 failed and neglected to pay to him the said sum of Rs. 103 and that when demands were made on the accused No. 1 for payment of the said sum, the accused No. 1 at first put off payment from time to time on various pretexts and ultimately denied that he had to pay any sum whatsoever to the complainant. The case against the accused No. 2 is that he abetted accused No. 1 in denying his liability.

Now the two accused before us have been convicted under ss. 420/34, Indian Penal Code. We have examined the record for ourselves and are of opinion that the dispute, such as it was, was of a civil nature, and that it is impossible to say from the evidence on record and having regard to the recitals in the kobala that the ingredients required in s. 420, Indian Penal Code, have been satisfied in this case. In this view of the matter we set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the petitioners be discharged from their bail bonds. The complainant, if so advised, may seek his remedy in a Civil Court.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 409—Public servant, retention of Government money by—Money not included in balance—Misappropriation—Failure to give excess money to successor-in-office—Money, retention of, pending scrutiny of accounts.

The fact that the accused a public servant, does not include the money received by him in his capacity as a public servant in the cash balance is a very strong prima facie evidence of misappropriation on his part. Failure to hand over the money due in his hand to his successor-in-office is a further proof of his guilt. [p. 207, col 2.]

A public servant is not entitled to retain, pending the scrutiny of accounts, any money due to the Government in his hand in excess of what the registers show to be due. If he removes the balance he is guilty of misappropriation even if he removes it to godown belonging to the Government. [p. 208, col. 1.]

Appeal under s. 417, Cr. P. C., on behalf of Local Government, against an order, dated the 28th October 1925, of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, at Unao.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Government appeal from an acquittal on appeal by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow at Unao. The accused, Daya Shankar, was a naib nazir officiating at the Safipur Tahsil in the Unao District. He was charged under s. 409, Indian Penal Code, with having committed in his capacity of naib nazir criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 50-4-0 between the 16th April and 15th June 1925.

The facts proved against the accused and either admitted or not denied by him are as follows:—On the 16th April, while acting as naib nazir, he received by money order a sum of Rs. 50-4-0 in connection with a certain revenue case. On receipt of the money he was bound to enter it under its proper date, and under its proper serial number of receipts in register No. 4, "Account of miscellaneous receipts and payments." For the headings of this register see page 9 of the printed book. He did not so enter it until long afterwards (the precise date will remain unproved). He also did not, in his register No. 7, "Daily abstract of nazir's account," include this money in the total balance of money in his hands at the end of the day. One column of this register No. 7 shows the balance that ought to be in his hands according to the several registers. In the remark column is entered the actual amount of cash and value of postage stamps in the nazir's possession. This column showed a total on the evening of the 16th April 1925 of Rs.183-13-9 in cash as actually in the nazir's hands. It is admitted by the accused that it should have been Rs. 50-4-0 more than this sum. The entry has been marked by this Court, as Ex. P, and, though overlooked by the lower Courts, it is perhaps the most important Exhibit in this case. The sum of Rs. 50-4-0 thus received was paid out on the 7th May 1925 by the accused, and this disbursement was duly entered in the said register under date 7th May, and under serial No. 38 of payments. The entry is Ex. F on the record. In this Ex. F, the accused entered the disbursement as corresponding with receipt Item No. 26, dated 16th April 1925, the date he could get from the record of the revenue case in connection with which the money had been received and was disbursed. The serial No. 26 he could only obtain if he had already made an entry of the receipt of this money. He himself has not stated when he made the entry of the receipt which he ought to have made of course when the money was received. Against every entry, however, of receipt there are some columns in the middle of the page of the register No. 4 separating the items received from items paid out and in these columns are entered in the same lines as the receipt, the serial number of any payment out and the amount. Under the date of the 18th March, we find in these middle columns reference to the amount of Rs. 50-4-0 and to the serial number of the payment, No. 58, i. e, Ex. F. The accused states that he made this entry when some time in June he got notice that he was to be transferred. This entry is Ex. E. In a line with this Ex. E, there is under the same date of the 18th March 1925 a receipt serial No. 26 and the amount of Rs. 50-4 is entered against this number. If, therefore, the accused is speaking the truth as to the time of entering the mid-column entry, Ex. E, we may presume that he made the entry of the payment No. 26, which is marked Ex. D, on the same date. It comes to this then, that although the accused received the money on the 16th April, and paid out an equivalent sum on the 7th May, he did not enter the receipt of the money until some time in June when he had notice of transfer. But two days after paying out this money, namely, on the 9th May 1925, the accused has made a payment under serial No. 29 of payments, of Rs. 50. This is Ex. H. It will be seen that in this Ex. H the serial number of receipt referred to is 20 in black ink, but a tail has been faintly added to the "2" so as to make it "3". Thus at the first sight it would read as 20, but would read 30, if the tail in red ink were drawn attention to. This disbursement was shown to be a disbursement of a portion of a receipt No. 30 of Rs. 95 received on the previous date, namely 8th May, and in the mid-column against this receipt is an entry that Rs. 50 of the Rs. 95 were paid out under serial No. 38 of payments. These entries as to the receipt and payment out are Ex. G. This disbursement No. 39 has, however, also been entered in the register against a receipt No. 20 of the 12th February 1925 of Rs. 87-1-0. Reference is made to payment No. 39 in the mid-column as against this receipt but the sum entered is Rs. 50-4-0 and not Rs. 50. This receipt and payment reference is marked Ex. M. It would, therefore, prima facie appear that about the 9th May the accused diminished the balance appearing as due to Government according to his registers by a wrong entry that a sum of Rs. 50-4 0 had been paid out of a receipt of Rs. 87-1-0, whereas he had already entered the payment out as against another receipt number, namely, No. 26 for Rs. 95. Of course this last entry would obviously invite criticism when reference was made to the serial number of payment, No. 39, because that serial number showed payment of Rs. 50, whereas this mid-column reference to payment showed Rs. 50-4-0, and, if we believe the evidence, it was this discrepancy which first led to suspicion being entertained against the accused. We now come to the date when Kali Charan, the successor of the accused, arrived to take over charge, namely, the 15th of June. On that date the accused handed over to Kali Charan a balance of Rs. 335-9-9 in cash, which he admits was Rs. 50-4-0 short of what was due according to the registers, if they had been kept properly, but he did not hand over the registers. On the 7th July 1925, the accused paid to the Treasury the deficiency. Where I use the words "if they had been kept properly" I mean this. The receipt No. 26 under date 18th March 1925 of Rs. 50-4-0 was never shown in the total of the balance due on that date or anywhere else in the registers, and the accused admits that this was a mistake. Now on the 7th of July the accused deposited Rs. 50 in the Treasury, and gave Kali Charan four annas. This he did to make up the deficiency. The Tahsildar has stated that he did this under an order of the Collector, but the accused states that he did it of his own accord. The Tahsildar did not produce the writing or the order of the Collector, and so the lower Appellate Court has disbelieved him, though we see no reason to do so.

Such were the facts proved against the accused. The defence of the accused was briefly this. He was too busy to keep his accounts properly, and up to date. On the evening of the 16th April, the date of the receipt of this item of Rs. 50-4-0, he entered in registar No. 7 as the money that he had in cash, not the actual sum which he had in cash, but the sum which the registers showed (incorrectly as he admits) should have been the amount that he should have had. As to the entry of the receipt of Rs. 50-4-0, under the wrong date of the 18th March, instead of the right date of 16th April, he explains that it was a mere mistake, there being no other receipt between the 18th of March and the 17th April. As to his failure to total this receipt, he inferentially ascribes it to the fact that he made the entry of the receipt long after the money was actually received. He does not explain at all how he came to refer the payment out of the Rs. 50 under the 9th May to two receipts, namely, one of Rs. 95 received on the 8th May and another of Rs. 87-1-0 received on the 12th February. As to his failure to hand over this sum when he paid up the balance according to his registers to Kali Charan, he states that he withheld it because he only thought it his duty to hand over the sum due to Government according to the registers. His story is that he took this money and put it in the mal godown where miscellaneous property is kept, intending to go through the registers, and see what sum was due to Government in excess of that handed over.

The Assistant Magistrate who tried the case found the accused guilty of having withheld the payment of this Rs. 50-4-0 over to his successor on the 15th of June He held that the accused could not be deemed guilty of misappropriating the sum on the day that he received it, that is on the 16th April, inasmuch as he paid over an equivalent sum on the 7th May 1925 to the person entitled to it. " Hence it cannot be said that the accused misappropriated this particular item." The Second Additional Sessions Judge on appeal concurred in this last view. He, however, acquitted the accused on the ground that the determining factor in the case was, whether or not the accused was short of the amount on the day when he made over charge to Kali Charan, and that, so far as the evidence went the accused may have paid over the deficiency into the Treasury before he received, if he did receive, an order to do so from the Deputy Commissioner. The Sessions Judge, therefore, considered the accused might be speaking the truth when he stated that he kept this amount in cash ready to pay over if it should be found due. As to the manipulation of the registers, whereby the balance due to Government was reduced on paper by Rs. 50 4-0, he held that this only showed at the worst a preparation to defraud Government, and that there was no evidence to show that he actually did defraud Government. He accepted the statement of the accused to explain why the receipt was entered under the date 18th March 1925 instead of under its proper date of 16th April, because he said that, although the date was wrong, the place in the register was correct " there being no transaction between the 18th of March and the 17th of April."

We consider that both the Courts were wrong in holding that the subsequent disbursement of Rs. 50-4-0, on the 7th May, as a disbursement of a similar sum received on the 16th April, is any answer to a charge of embezzlement of the Rs. 50-4-0 as soon as it was received on the 16th April. The money must have been somewhere, and the fact that the accused did not include it in his cash balance entered in the remark column of register No. 7 on the day that it was received, is very strong prima facie evidence of its having been misappropriated on that date. We cannot accept the statement of the accused that his entry in the remark column was only meant to represent the cash due to Government according to the registers. It was clearly a representation of the actual cash in hand ascertained by actual accounting. The Sessions Judge is quite wrong in accepting the explanation of the accused as to the entry of the receipt of the money under date 18th March. He says "As a matter of fact there is no entry for any date between the 18th March and the 17th April either of income or of re-payment." It is correct that there is no entry between these dates of income, but there are two entries of re-payment. These entries made it impossible for the entry of the receipt of Rs. 50-4-0 under the 18th March to have been a mistake. We think that the prosecution were correct in suggesting that it was made on this date because there was room here. The Sessions Judge is again wrong in suggesting that the prosecution "had to shift the ground from this item entered as No. 26 of the 18th March of Rs 50-4-0 to two other entries in the register No. 4". This was not what the prosecution did. The prosecution always maintained that this Rs. 50-4-0 was misappropriated, but they cited the manipulation whereby the balance shown as due to Government was reduced in the registers by the exact amount of Rs. 50 4-0, as proof that this sum had been embezzled on the day that it was paid in. We accordingly are of the opinion that the proof was adequate to convict the accused of the embezzlement of the fifty rupees four annas on the 16th April.

Even if this were not the case, according to the evidence it must be held that the accused embezzled this sum on the 15th June when he ought to have handed over to his successor the money in his hands due to Government. He cannot have really believed that, if he had money due to Government in his hands in excess of what the registers showed to be due, he was entitled to retain it pending scrutiny of the accounts. He has nowhere suggested that he kept his private money in the cash box in his office. He must, therefore, have known that all the money in that box was the property of Government. By removing the balance, if there was any balance, which we do not believe, he would have been guilty of misappropriation. It makes no difference that he removed it to a godown belonging to Government. He failed to deal with this excess as he was bound to according to his trust. It is to be noticed that there is a rule of Government, para. 1429 of Volume II, Manual of the Revenue Department, that required the accused every night to deposit in the Treasury any sum in excess of the hundred rupees for which he had given security. We are not concerned with judging the accused on the score of his failure to do this, but what is clear is this. This rule must have been known to the accused, and must have clearly indicated to him that it was, a fortiori, necessary to lodge in the Treasury any Government money in excess of that shown due to Government by the registers which he might have in his hands. He himself admits that he kept the accounts very remissly. When he found that he had excess sum, he was bound, therefore, to suspect that the registers were wrong, but it passes our imagination how he could think that he was entitled to retain the money for one moment.

The accused produced the evidence of two chaprasis to show respectively that when he handed over to his successor on the 15th June the sum of Rs. 335 9-9 in cash, he also removed from the box another Rs. 200 and that this sum was removed again from the malkhana and taken to the Treasury. The evidence of these chaprasis is open to doubt as they were not likely to have seen this, and moreover in his statement under examination the accused never specified this amount as being Rs. 200. It may be remarked, however, that the Trial Court should have enquired of the accused what the excess amount in his office cash box was, and should also have asked the witness Kali Charan what was the other money besides the Rs 50-4-0 which was handed over by the accused to him as "deficiency" on the 7th July. If these questions had been asked the defence of the accused would have been rendered more definite. At the same time we hold that the accused has entirely failed to explain his failure to credit Government with this sum either on the date of its receipt or when he gave over his balance. It is possible that the accused borrowed this money on the 16th April intending to re-place it, but that he was not in a position to do so until after the 15th June, with the consequence that the embezzlement was discovered. It does not appear that he embezzled any other amount.

For the above reasons, we allow this appeal and restore the judgment of the first Court. We find the accused guilty of an offence under s. 409, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The accused will surrender himself to the District Magistrate, Unao, for serving this sentence.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 84 OF 1923.
Present:—Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, KT., and Justice Sir John Bucknill, KT.
SADHU SARAN PANDEY—APPELLANT
versus
NAND KUMAR SINGH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Only one legal representative brought on record—Abatement—Knowledge of death—Diligence required.

Even if one of the legal representatives of a deceased party is brought on the record in time there is no abatement of the suit or appeal as the case may be. [p. 209, col. 1.]

Lilo Sonar v. Jhagru Sahu, 85 Ind. Cas. 25; 6 P. L. T. 313; 3 Pat. 853; A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 123; 3 Pat. L. R. 97, followed.

No doubt an appellant is required to be diligent in prosecuting his appeal, but after he gets the notice served on the respondent he is not required to watch the movements of the respondent and as to whether he is dead or alive. The law, therefore, is that he must make the application for substitution within 90 days of his knowledge of the death. [p. 209, col. 2.]

Application for setting aside the abatement in the above appeal.

Messrs. A. K. Roy and Ambicapada Upadhya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside abatement and substitution of the persons named in the petition as heirs of the deceased respondent. Notices of the appeal were served upon respondents Nand Kumar Singh, Ramsingar Singh and Mathura Prasad Singh. Thereafter Nand Kumar Singh died, in whose place the appellant substituted the name of his widow Musammat Ramkali Koer. At a subsequent stage it turned out that Nand Kumar had another widow named Sheoratan Koer and that Mathura Prasad Singh was also dead leaving his widow Sri Krishna Koer. The appellant, therefore, applied for setting aside the abatement and for substitution of the co-widow Sheoratan Koer as an heir of Nand Kumar Singh in addition to the first widow already brought on the record. They also applied for substituting Sri Kishna Koer in place of Mathura Prasad Singh

As far as Nand Kumar Singh is concerned there is no difficulty, for Ramkali. one of his widows, was brought on the record within time and the appeal did not, therefore, abate so far as he was concerned. In accordance with the authority of this Court in the case of Lilo Sonar v. Jhagru Sahu (1) and in consonance with r. 4 of O. XXII, the appeal against Nand Kumar Singh could not abate, as one of his heirs was already on the record. The bringing in of Sheoratan Koer on the record is only for the purpose of the final disposal of the appeal.

As regards Mathura Prasad Singh the contention has been that the application for substitution of his widow in his place was not made in time, nor was the application for setting aside abatement. There has been, no doubt, a great delay in making the application in this behalf; but the circumstances of the case show that the appellant came to know of the death as alleged by them at a time which is well within the time they are entitled to make an application for setting aside the abatement. The notice upon Mathura Prasad was duly served and the appeal has far advanced. No doubt the appellant is required to be diligent in prosecuting his appeal; but after he gets the notice served upon the respondent he is not required to watch the movements of the respondent and as to whether he is dead or alive. The law, therefore, is that he must make an application within ninety days of his knowledge of the death; but it has to be seen whether the date of knowledge has been falsely alleged. There is no reason why the appellant who has been prosecuting this appeal so diligently would allow the appeal to abate if he had known of the death of Mathura Prasad Singh earlier than what is stated in his application. Mr. Sambhu Saran says that the appellant must have known of the death of Mathura Prasad at least on the 20th of September 1924 when notice of a rent suit brought by the widow of Mathura Prasad against one of the appellants was served upon him. In support of this contention he has filed a certified copy of a notice of the aforesaid suit. The service return shows that the appellant refused to give the receipt. This in itself does not show that the summons or notice was actually served upon the appellant. Moreover, the notice to one of the appellants is not notice to all, and there is nothing to indicate that the appellant apprised the death of Mathura Prasad to the rest of the appellants. Each one of the appellants is entitled to prosecute the appeal and to apply for setting aside abatement and for substitution. Therefore the certified copy of the notice filed by Mr. Sambhu Saran is not conclusive upon the point.

In the circumstances of the case I would set aside the abatement and allow substitution as prayed for. The name of Sri Krishna Koer be substituted in the place of Mathura Prasad Singh, deceased. The name of Sheoratan Koer, co-widow of Ramkali Koer, be included as a respondent and a legal representative in place of Nand Kumar Singh.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Compromise petition presented to Executing Court—Compromise dealing with matters outside decree—Registration—Claim under compromise, how to be enforced.

A compromise petition presented to the Executing Court dealing with matters under the decree as well as extraneous to the decree does not require compulsory registration even so far as it relates to the latter.

Thazhathitathil Poovvanayi Ayissa v. Puthan Purayil Kundron Chokru, 58 Ind. Cas. 554; 43 M. 688; (1920) M. W. N. 431; 12 L. W. 35; 39 M. L. J. 77; 28 M. L. Where a compromise presented to a Court deals with a liability under a decree as well as a liability independent of it, the former can be enforced by a proceeding in execution and the latter by means of a separate suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 6th of August 1923.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of Pandit Kanhaiya Lal, J. dated 22nd May 1923:

"The plaintiffs sued for the recovery of money due on an unregistered mortgage-bond executed by Janki in favour of Har Sahai the ancestor of the plaintiffs on the 4th of January 1901. By virtue of that bond Janki had agreed to supply 99 maunds of grain by certain instalments and hypothecated certain property as security for the fulfilment of that engagement. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that Janki had failed to pay certain instalments, that a suit was filed by Har Sahai for the recovery of the instalments for 1960 to 1963 Sambat and a decree obtained, therefor, to be enforced by the sale of the mortgaged property and that in the course of the execution of that decree a compromise was arrived at on the 24th of August 1912 between Janki and his son Ram Ratan on the one side and the present plaintiffs who were the legal representatives of Har Sahai on the other, whereby the former agreed to pay Rs. 141 in satisfaction of the decree by certain instalments and 48 maunds of grain in satisfaction of the remaining instalments, not covered by that decree by certain instalments payable half yearly during a period of eight years.

The plaintiffs seek in the present suit to enforce the latter portion of the compromise. The Court of first instance decreed the claim in part. The lower Appellate Court dismissed it on the ground that the original mortgage merged in the compromise and that the compromise could not be enforced by a suit.

A perusal of the compromise, however, shows that by virtue of the compromise the quantity of grain payable was merely adjusted and the manner in which it was to be paid was settled but no other alteration was made in the terms of the original bond. In fact the mortgage of the property made by the original bond was maintained. In other words the compromise merely operated as an adjustment of the account of the instalments, not covered by the previous suit and as such it had merely the effect of determining the extent of the liability of the defendants without disturbing the terms of the original mortgage except in so far as it provided for the payment of the amount of that liability in a particular manner. The compromise dealt with the liability of the defendants under the decree and also with their liability independently of the decree. So far as the former was concerned the plaintiffs could only enforce it by a proceeding in execution. So far as the latter was concerned the matter covered by the compromise was entirely extraneous to the decree and could be enforced by a separate suit. The entire bond, so far as it was outside the scope of the previous suit, was merged either in the decree or the compromise and the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce it subject to such objections as may be otherwise entertainable or may be deserving of consideration. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court with a direction to re-instate it to its original number and dispose of it after determining the other points involved therein in the manner provided by the law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result."

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and Beni Bhadur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are given in the judgment of my learned brother Pandit Kanhaiya Lal delivered on 22nd May 1923. Under that order the appeal was remanded to the lower Appellate Court under O. XLI, r. 23 with a direction to re-hear it. The learned Judge held that the compromise of 24th August 1912 could be enforced by the plaintiff so far as it was extraneous to the decree for sale, No. 114 of 1907. The learned Judge thus upheld the finding of the Munsif and set aside the finding of the lower Appellate Court. On remand another flaw was discovered by the lower Appellate Court in the claim of the plaintiff. It held that the sulahnama not being registered did not create a charge on property of the value of over Rs. 100. This finding of the lower Appellate Court also is incorrect. This point has been discussed in a Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court reported as Thazhathitathil Poovvanayi Ayissa v. Puthan Purayil Kundron Chokru (1). There also after a decree a petition was presented under O. XXI, r. 2, to the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree certifying as required by the rule that the decree had been adjusted and praying that the petition setting out the terms that the decree had been adjusted should be recorded. In the Madras case the order passed was "recorded." In the present case also a similar phrase was used.

"Hasb sulahnama mutalba decree-dar qaim ho" (In accordance with the compromise the claim of the decree-holder be recorded.) In the Madras case also the compromise went beyond the decree and the decree-holder brought a suit for the recovery of the claim which was in excess of the decree. The Full Bench held that such a compromise was exempted from registration under the provisions of s. 17 of the Registration Act which laid down that any decree or order of Court need not be registered. Long prior to the Madras ruling of 1920 a Bench of this Court had held in 1905 that such a compromise, even though it was in excess of the decree, did not require registration [Raghubans Mani Singh v. Mahabir Singh (2).] In that case the compromise was made in a suit and went beyond the relief covered by the suit and related to land which was not covered by that suit. The Madras High Court pointed out that the decision of the Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindary Company (3) had settled the differences of opinion which had been referred to in the order of reference.

This appeal succeeds. I refuse to send it back to the lower Appellate Court. The litigation has been going on for years and almost continuously since 1907. The plaint in the suit to which this appeal refers was filed as far back as 3rd January 1921. It would be an abuse of the process of law not to put a stop finally to the litigation. I have read the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court so far as they are not covered by the judgment of my learned brother. There is no force in them. The learned Munsif has given very satisfactory reasons for his finding that the bond sued upon had been fully paid off. I have also read the objections by way of appeal and hold that there is no substance in them.

In the result I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the Munsif dated the 29th April 1921 and direct that the parties shall bear their own intervening costs.

NUR HUSSAIN SHAH AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Wakf institution and property—Removal from office — Effect — Decree — Execution, relief in.

A wakf institution is something distinct from the wakf property attached to the institution. Therefore, the mere removal of a gaddi nashin from the office does not imply his physical dispossession from the property of the institution.

Bawa Mangal Das v. Mahant Narayan Das, 56 P. R. 1895 and Tilok Chand v. Ram Chand, 37 Ind. Cas. 105; 95 P. R. 1916, followed.

An Executing Court cannot grant a relief which is not given by the decree itself.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 1st May 1925.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, Mr. N. C. Mehra and Lala Mehar Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents obtained a decree for the removal of the appellant from the wakf institution of takya Rasul Shahian, and for a declaration that the various gaddi nashins of the Rasul Shahi sect and Rasul Shahi Fakirs were entitled with the approval of the head gaddi nashin at Alwar, to appoint a new gaddi nashin instead of the appellant. In the execution of the decree, the learned District Judge has ordered the removal of the appellant from the wakf property attached to the takya, and the question in appeal is whether he was competent to pass such an order.

Mr. Tek Chand for the respondents has referred to a passage of the learned District Judge's order of the 1st May last in which it is stated that Counsel for the judgment-debtor said he had no objection to an order being passed for his client's removal from the wakf property attached to the takya, but objected only to an order that the decree-holders should be put in possession. With regard to this Mr. Aziz Ahmad for the appellant urges that the learned Judge was confusing the institution with the property attached to it, and that Counsel who appeared before him on behalf of the judgment-debtor meant only that there was no objection to the latter's removal from the institution. Possibly this is the case, as I notice that the learned Judge at the beginning of the order in question wrongly described the suit in which the decree had been passed as one for the defendant's removal from the wakf property. At any rate whatever her Counsel may have stated, the Court was not competent to order her removal from the property unless the decree justified it.

Now the decree ordered the appellant's removal only from the wakf institution, which is something distinct from the wakf property attached to the institution. It is argued for the respondents that the removal from her office as trustee or from the institution involves her removal from the wakf property which she held by virtue of being the trustee. It was, however, held in Bawa Mangal Das v. Mahant Narayan Das (1) which was followed in Tilok Chand v. Ram Chand (2) that the prayer for the removal of a Mahant from his office did not imply his physical dispossession from the property of the institution, and in any case the respondents cannot be given by the Executing Court a relief which is not given by the decree itself.

I hold, therefore, that the lower Court was not competent to order the appellant's removal from the wakf property attached to takya, and I accept the appeal and set aside the order. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Shebaitship, alienation of—Distinction between spiritual obligations and temporalities—Doctrine of benefit or necessity.

The office of a shebait, i. e., the spiritual rights and duties the fulfilment of which is the primary function of a shebait, is not alienable. The doctrine of benefit or necessity is confined in its application to an alienation of the temporalities of the idol. [p. 224, col. 1.]

There is a distinction between the shebait's obligation to perform the spiritual obligations of his office and his obligation to manage the temporalities of the idol. A shebaitship is primarily and mainly a sacred office and it does not follow that because in certain circumstances a shebait may be entitled to alienate the temporalities of the deity, in similar or certain circumstances he is entitled to transfer the spiritual duties and privileges which appertain to the office. [p. 218, col. 2.]

Messrs. H. D. Bose and A. K. Deb, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises an issue of deep and general interest to the Hindu community, viz., whether a shebait is entitled to transfer the rights and duties which appertain to his office.

On the 3rd August 1863 the Raja made his last Will which has been admitted to Probate, although the terms thereof have formed the subject of much litigation. Under this Will a large estate passed to the executors and trustees subject to certain trusts, but for the purpose of my judgment in this suit, I need refer only to those set out in the 12th, 15th, 16th clauses of the Will. Under the 12th clause it is provided:—

The executors and trustees shall pay to my sons or their heirs and representatives such sums for the sheba or service of my family idols and the usual pujas that are celebrated in my house and the periodical sradhas of my ancestors, of my late wife and of myself when dead as to the executors and trustees may seem fit and proper, but the executor, and trustees are not to be personally responsible for the proper performance of this trust, which is to devolve and be a burden and duty upon the recipient and recipients of the said sums.

Under the 15th clause provision was made for the mode in which the family dwelling-houses, including a certain garden-house at Sukchar, should be used. Under the 16th clause it is provided that—the clothes, ornaments, jewels and other articles for the use of the family idol, daily or on festive occasions and relating to the pujas and ceremonies are to remain in the common custody of my sons and heirs, provided nevertheless that the articles above mentioned shall not be appropriated to any private use of my sons or their heirs.

By a decree of the High Court (Peacock, C. J., and Macpherson, J.), dated 20th September 1869, it was declared that the bequests contained in the 12th and 16th clauses were valid, and as regards the 15th clause it was declared that in so far as the terms thereof related to the dedication of property to the family idol, Gobinjee, the same were valid, but in so far as the said clause related to the use of the family dwelling-houses and garden, the directions of the testator must be limited to the members of the family who were living at the time of his death. By a decree of the High Court (Macpherson, J,), dated 6th October 1871, it was inter alia ordered that the worship of the idols was to be performed by the three branches of the family in palas of one year in succession and that the "garden with baitakkhana at Sukchar be enjoyed by the person or persons entitled to perform the deb sheba while performing the same during his or her turn of worship." Since that date further litigation in connection with the terms of the Will has taken place, but it is unnecessary I think, that I should refer to these later proceedings except to mention that by a decree of the High Court (Sale, J.), dated 7th September 1899, the garden and house at Sukchar were included in the trusts under the Will of 3rd August 1863, provided that the same should be used in the manner prescribed under the decree of the 6th October 1871.

On the 13th September 1918 Girindra Narayan, the only son and heir of Raja Rajendra Deb, being entitled to a pala of the worship of the deities, referred to in the Will, executed in favour of the defendant an indenture of arpannama in the following form:—

This indenture of arpannama patra made this thirteenth day of September in the Christian Year one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, between Kumar Girindra Narain Deb, son of the late Raja Rajendra Narain Deb Bahadur of the Sovabazar Rajbati in Raja Nabo Kissen Street in the town of Calcutta hereinafter called the grantor of the one part and Robindra Narain Deb, son of Monindra Narain Deb of the same place of the other part hereinafter called the grantee (in which term is included his lineal male heirs and representatives unless the context is repugnant thereto) whereas Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K. C. S. I. of Sovabazar in the town of Calcutta died on the nineteenth day of April one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven leaving behind him three sons, viz., Kumar Mahendra Narain Deb, Kumar (subsequently Raja) Rajendra Narain Deb and Kumar Debendra Narain Deb and a Will bearing date the third day of August in the year of Christ one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three. And whereas a Probate was obtained by the executor therein named of the Will from the Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction of the Hon'ble High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal on first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty seven, and whereas the grantor herein Kumar Girindra Narain Deb the only son and heir of Raja Rajendra Narain Deb, deceased, was born during the lifetime of the said testator Raja Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and whereas under the terms and provisions of the said Will the grantor is sufficiently possessed of the right of worship of the family deity Sree Sree Iswar Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities in the manner indicated in cl. 12 of the said Will and as such sufficiently entitled to and possessed of the right of enjoyment of certain properties, privileges, rights and liberties particularly set forth in the said Will by cl. 12 and also by terms and provisions of the consent decree, dated 6th of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 and also under the decree in Suit No. 699 of 1899 in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction to any other rights, privileges in or any other deeds and documents and whereas the grantor herein is performing the daily worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Iswar Radha Gobinda Jew and other pujas according to his turn of worship and the annual sradh in compliance with the terms and provisions of the said cl. 12 of the said Will and in the manner indicated therein and the decrees and orders set forth above and is in full possession, enjoyment of the rights, privileges, etc., as set forth in the said Will of Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and the consent decree dated sixth day of October one thousand nine hundred and seventy-one made in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 and also of the decree of seventh day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine in Suit No. 699 of 1899 in the Original Side of the High Court and whereas the grantor has no male lineal descendant and has only a grandson Bireswar Mitra son of his deceased daughter Sreemuty Hemanta Kumari Dasi who the grantor holds and considers is unfit to perform the various orders and duties imposed upon him and enjoy the privileges by the terms and provisions of the Will of the late Raja Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and the decree set forth above by reason of his want of training and defective moral character and whereas the grantor hath given the grantee sound and regular training as to the way in which the said worship of the family deities Sree Sree Laksmi Narain Jew Salagram established and consecrated by his late father and also of the periodical sradh from his infancy and believes and considers the said grantee the best person to perform truly and faithfully the worship of the said deities and is best able to manage the properties and control the affairs in connection with the worship of the said family deities other pujas and sradhs of the late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur instead of the grantor and whereas the said grantee Robindra Narain Deb is great great grandson of the said testator Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Behadur, K. C. S. I., in the male line of succession and best able to perform the worship of the said deities. Now this indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the said grantee being a great great grand son of the said testator Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur in the male line of succession and by his character, education and training is best able to perform the worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities of late Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and of Sree Sree Laksmi Narain Jew Salagram as above stated and in consideration of the fact that the arrangement will be beneficial for the said deities as it will be conducive to the proper conduct of the worship the grantor Kumar Girindra Narain Deb doth hereby convey, confer, alienate and transfer his right, title and interest to and in the worship of the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities with all rights and privileges that he is entitled to under the Will of the said Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K. C. S. I. and the consent decree dated the 6th day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 on the Original Side of the High Court and by any other document for the performance of the said seva and puja to be held and enjoyed by him so long as he shall be alive and capable of performing the seva or service of the family deity, etc., and the usual pujas that are celebrated in the house of Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K. C. S. I. to be continued to be so held and enjoyed by his heirs in the male line of succession only on condition of their duly performing the seva and service of the said family deities, etc., with other usual pujas that are held and celebrated in the family Rajbati and not for any personal gain and that in the event of failure in the male line of succession of the same grantee the grantor doth hereby confer or convey and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities, etc., and privileges attached thereto under the Will of the late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur, K. C. S. I., and the consent decree of the sixth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or by any other deed or deeds in favour of Dwijendra Narain Deb the third son of Monindra Narain Deb and in his absence his heir or heirs in the male line of succession who may be living at the time to be held and enjoyed by him or them only on condition of his or their performing the seva or service of the said deities, etc., and in his or their absence the grantor doth hereby confer, convey, transfer and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities and the several pujahs and all rights and privileges attached to the same under the terms and provisions of the Will of late Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb Bahadur and those of the consent decrees of sixth day of October one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 and the decree dated seventh day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine in Suit No. 699 of 1899 in the Original Side of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal to the nearest male agnate that may be alive at the time to the exclusion of Sachindra Narayan Deb eldest son of Monindra Narain Deb and his representatives.

In witness whereof I do hereunto affix my signature.

On the 14th September 1918 Girindra executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of the defendant empowering him inter alia to represent Girindra in all matters connected with the trust estate, and to receive monies for the purpose of the deb sheba expenses. After executing the said documents Girindra went to Benares, and in his absence the defendant performed the Durga Puja of 1918. In December 1918 Girindra returned to Calcutta, and becoming suspicious of the manner in which the defendant was managing his affairs cancelled the said power-of-attorney, and on the 23rd June 1921 filed the present suit, praying inter alia that the said indenture of arpannama be declared invalid and void, and that the said indenture be cancelled, and for incidental relief. On the 20th April 1923 Girindra died, and on 3rd July 1923 an order was made substituting his two executors as plaintiffs in his stead. On the 7th March 1924 one of the executors died, and on the 14th April 1924 an order was made directing the present plaintiff, as the sole surviving executor to prosecute the suit.

The defendant has based his defence upon three grounds: (1) that the present plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit; (2) that Girindra did not execute the said indenture of arpannama with the intention thereby of defeating or delaying his creditors, as the plaintiff alleged, or in the alternative, if such was his intention, that the said creditors were thereby defeated and/or delayed; (3) that the transfer of Girindra's rights and interests in the turn of worship of the said deities was for the benefit of the deities, and that Girindra executed the said indenture bona fide in the interest of the dieties in order that the worship should be more fittingly celebrated and the endowment more effectively managed.

As regards the first ground of defence, the defendant urged that as the subject-matter of the suit related to a personal right of worship vested in Girindra as the heir of Rajendra, the cause of action, if any, which Girindra possessed did not pass to his executors, for actio personalis moritur cum persona. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention. Apart from the question as to whether, having regard to the interlocutory proceedings in this suit, it is open to the defendant to raise this contention, by para. 27 of the plaint the plaintiff alleged that his "turn of worship commenced from the 1st Bysack 1328 (14th April 1921), and he had begun to perform the worship of the deities in accordance with the testator's Will at his own expense. The plaintiff has been put to great hardship in consequence of the withdrawal of the funds by the said trustee at the instance of the defendant." This allegation is not denied in the written statement, and the executors clearly are entitled to recover from the trust estate the reasonable expenses of the palas which Girindra incurred, and this relief they cannot obtain unless and until the indenture is cancelled, or declared to be void. In my opinion, the cause of action is not merely of a personal nature, and the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit [Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Norendra Nath Mukerji (1).]

In support of the second ground of defence, evidence was led, and arguments were addressed to me for the purpose of casting aspersion upon the moral conduct; and impugning the financial dealings of the parties in connection with this debutter estate. Now, this is a dispute between relatives, and the parties are members of a well-known and distinguished family. It is very desirable, I think, that I should not embark upon a discussion of the matters raised in this ground of defence, for the result inevitably would be to embitter, and not to heal, the dissensions which have arisen among the members of this family; unless, indeed, I am compelled to do so in order to determine the issues raised between the parties.

It is a source of satisfaction to me that I am not called upon to express any opinion upon the second ground of defence, for, in my opinion, the terms of the indenture of arpannama are such that I must hold the indenture to be in law void and inoperative. It is to be observed that by the operative words in the indenture the grantor "doth hereby convey, confer, alienate and transfer his right, title and interest to, and in the worship of, the said family deity Sree Sree Radha Gobinda Jew and other deities with all rights and privileges that he is entitled to under the Will of the Raja Sir Radha Kanto Deb and the consent decree, dated the 6th October 1871, in Suits Nos. 155 and 220 of 1868 on the Original Side of the High Court, and by any other document for the performance of the said sheba and puja to Robindra, to be held and enjoyed by him so long as he shall be alive and capable of performing the sheba or service of the family deities." And later "doth hereby confer, convey, transfer and alienate his right of worship of the said family deities, and of the several pujas and all rights and privileges attached to the same to the nearest male agnate that may be alive at the time to the exclusion of Sityendra Narain Deb, eldest son of Monindra Narain Deb, and his representatives."

It is conceded that the rights and privileges conveyed by the indenture are solely those relating and attached to the worship of the deities, and that the line of succession to the shebaiti set out in the indenture is neither that laid down by the founder, nor that prescribed by the principles of the Hindu Law. It is contended, however, that inasmuch as the provisions of the indenture were "for the benefit of the deities," and the grantee was a member of the founder's family, the indenture was one that Girindra as shebait was competent to execute, and that the transaction should receive the sanction of the Court. I have to determine whether this contention is sound or not.

A Judge who is not a Hindu must needs approach the consideration of such a question with diffidence, but I have had the advantage of hearing the matter exhaustively argued by distinguished Hindu Counsel, and I have myself explored the case-law and such Hindu texts as bear upon the subject. The ancient sages for the most part are silent on the subject of shebaiti rights and duties, [per Seshagiri Aiyar, J., Annaya Tantri v. Ammakka Hengsu (2)], but the decisions are numerous, and conflicting and I find myself, therefore, at liberty—indeed I am constrained to express my own opinion on the matter.

Now, "sheba" means "service," and whenever an image or idol is set up and consecrated, there must needs be a shebait to serve and sustain the deity whose tabernacle the image is. The duties and the privileges of a shebait primarily are those of one who fills a sacred office. He must take the image into his charge and custody; he must see that it is washed and fed and clothed and tended, and that due provision for its worship is made: "We need not describe here in detail the normal type of continued worship of a consecrated image,—the sweeping of the temple, the process of smearing, the removel of the previous day's offerings of flowers, the presentation of fresh flowers, the respectful oblation of rice with flowers and water, and other like practices. It is sufficient to state that the deity is, in short, conceived as a living being and is treated in the same way as the master of the house would be treated by his humble servant. The daily routine of life is gone through with minute accuracy; the vivified image is regaled with the necessaries and luxuries of life in due succession, even to the changing of clothes, the offering of cooked and uncooked food, and the retirement to rest." [Per Mookerjee, J., in Rambrama Chatterjee v. Kedar Nath Banerjee (3).] The main concern of a shebait, therefore, is duly to carry out the sacred duties of his office. He may perform his spiritual functions personally or he may—indeed, if he does not possess the necessary qualifications to enable him to celebrate the worship of the deity he must,—appoint a qualified deputy to officiate in his stead. [Annaya Tantri v. Ammaka Hengsu (2).]

Now, it usually happens when an image is consecrated that property, moveable or immoveable, is dedicated to its use. This is the common, indeed, almost the invariable, practice. After dedication the proprietary title to the property is vested in the idol, the right to possess and the duty to manage the property in the shebait. Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (4).] "As regards the property the manager is in a position of a trustee. But as regards the service of the temple and the duties that appertain to it, he is rather in the position of the holder of an office or dignity" [Per Lord Macnaughten: Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (5).] There is "no distinction between the office and the property of the endowment; the one is attached to the other" [Per Sir Richard Couch in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (6)] but, in truth, it is the endowment which is attached to the office, not the office to the endowment, for while there may be a shebait without endowed property, there cannot be property dedicated to an idol without a shebait to manage it. "I might at once say that in respect of such a religious office, it is not the right of the office-holder to receive emoluments which is the important or principal right, but, in my opinion it is the right of the deity to have certain services performed to it which is a primary right. I also think that as regards the religious office itself, the duties of the office should be considered as the substance of the office, the right to receive the emoluments being only an appurtenance of the said duties......I am inclined to hold that it is the rights that are subordinate and appurtenant to the duties, and it is not the duties that are subordinate and appurtenant to the rights" [per Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Sundarambal Ammal v. Gogavanagurukkal (7).]

I have emphasised the distinction between the shebait's obligation to perform the spiritual duties of his office, and his obligation to manage the temporalities of the idol, because it is important to bear in mind that a shebaiti primarily and mainly is a sacred office, and that it does not follow, because in certain circumstances a shebait may be entitled to alienate the temporalities of the deity, that in similar or any circumstances he is entitled to transfer the spiritual duties and privileges which appertain to his office.

Now, on the question which falls for determination the authorities in India are numerous, but, as I apprehend them, the decisions sometimes are inconsistent, sometimes inconclusive, and if I refrain from examining them in detail, I do so, not out of want of respect for the learned Judges who were parties to the decisions, but because I am content to found my judgment upon the Common Law of India and the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which, to my mind, put the matter beyond controversy. In 1869 an appeal was heard by the Judicial Committee in which the issue was whether a shebait was entitled to sell certain jammas connected with a taluk which had been dedicated to an idol. The Judicial Committee held that "The taluk itself, with which these jammas were connected by tenure, was dedicated to the religious services of the idol. The rents constituted, therefore, in legal contemplation, its property. The shebait had not the legal property, but only the title of manager of a religious endowment. In the exercise of that office, she could not alienate the property, though she might create proper derivative tenures and estates conformable to usage." [Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (8).]

In 1875 in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand (9) Sir Montague Smith, in the course of the judgment, observed that "there is no doubt that, as a general rule of Hindu Law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it is inalienable......... But, notwithstanding that property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule, inalienable, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, competent for the shebait of property dedicated to the worship of the idol, in his capacity as shebait and manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks, and other like objects. The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them......It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol; and the possession and management of it must in the nature of things be entrusted to some person as shebait, or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol, and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so, the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted, and its worship discontinued, for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them."

In 1876 in Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (10) the issue was whether the urallers or managers of a pagoda were entitled to assign the conduct of the worship and the right to manage the property of the endowment to the Raja of Cherakel. The deed of assignment recited that "the pagoda and its dependent institutions belong exclusively to the four tarwads of the urallers; that they are in debt to the amount of Rs. 46,000; that as the property was insufficient to conduct the affairs of the pagoda, this debt was likely to increase, that the Cherakel was willing to pay off the debts and take over the pagoda and its property and conduct all the ceremonies, and that the urallers had received in cash Rs. 46,000 to pay off debts and Rs 10,000 for their own use. In consideration of the above the deed assigned over to the Raja all the property, moveable and immoveable, of the pagoda, and the uraima right of the four families, with the reservation of the right to join in the assembly for conducting the ceremonies and to receive the privileges attached thereto."

Sir James Colville who in this appeal delivered the opinion of the Board, observed: "The first question is, whether, independently of custom, persons holding such a trust are capable of transferring it at their own will. No authority has been laid before their Lordships to establish this proposition; principle and reason seem to be strongly opposed to such a power, and particularly to such an exercise of it as has taken place in this instance. The unknown founder may be supposed to have established this species of corporation with the distinct object of securing the due performance of the worship, and the due administration of the property by the instrumentality and at the discretion of four persons capable of deliberating and bound to deliberate together; he may also have considered it essential that those four persons should be the heads of particular families resident in a particular district, open to the public opinion of that district and having that sort of family interest in the maintenance of this religious worship which would insure its due performance. It seems very unreasonable to suppose that the founder of such a corporation ever intended to empower the four trustees of his creation at their mere will to transfer their office and its duties, with all the property of the trust, to a single individual who might act according to his sole discretion, and might have no connection with the families from which the trustees were to be taken. Such a transferee might be a powerful man, as probably this Cherakel Rajah is, and, therefore, the less amenable to public opinion, the less capable of being reached by the Courts, and the more likely to deal with the institution with a high hand. Mr. Mayne almost admitted that the broad principle delegatus non potest delegare would prima facie apply to such a case." After discussing the authorities, his Lordship added: "This being the state of the authorities, their Lordships are of opinion that there is no authority binding even on the Court of Madras which is inconsistent with the judgments under appeal; that the general principle affirmed by those judgments is correct; and consequently that the urallers had no power under what may be termed the Common Law of India to transfer their uraima right to the plaintiff, the Cherakel Rajah. But it is said that in India, and particularly in that part of India in which this pagoda is situated, custom must prevail against the general law. That such would be the consequence of a well proved and established custom their Lordships do not deny............... But their Lordships are of opinion that no custom which can qualify the general principle of law has been established in this case; and they desire to add that if the custom set up was one to sanction not merely the transfer of a trusteeship, but as in this case the sale of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee, they would be disposed to hold that that circumstance alone would justify a decision that the custom was bad in law."

In 1899 in Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velupandaram (6) a later Board of the Judicial Committee re-stated the same rule: "In Rjaa Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kully (10) this Committee held that an assignment by the urallers of a pagoda of the right of management thereof was beyond their competence under the Common Law of India, and that no custom to do so had been established. There is no proof of any custom in this case, and consequently these deeds of sale are void and do not give any title to the purchaser." Alienations by a shebait in contravention of the law as laid down in these decisions are void and need not be set aside: Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (10), Narayana Chettiar v. Lakshmanan Chettiar (11) and such an alienation may be declared void even at the instance of the alienor [Juggut Mohini Dossee v. Sokheemoney Dossee (12), Srimati Mallika Dasi v. Ratammani Chakervarti (13). The Judicial Committee have never deviated from the principles laid down in the above cases, and it is settled law that "in the absence of any custom or usage to the contrary or any term to that effect in the deed of endowment a religious trust or the right of management of a religious or charitable endowment or a religious office attached to a temple or any other endowment cannot be alienated by the holder [per Mookerjee, J., in Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (14).]

In the present case it is conceded that no usage obtains in the family which would render valid the indenture of arpannama, if otherwise it is void under the Common Law of India. I need not, therefore, embark upon the still unsettled question as to whether, and if so, in what circumstances, the Courts would sanction an usage under which rights of worship have been alienated by a shebait. Again, there is authority for the proposition that the consensus of all the persons interested in the worship may "give the estate another direction," [Raja Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (10), Khetter Chunder Ghose v. Hari Das Bundopadbya (15) and Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick (16)]: but so far as I know the Judicial Committee in no case have determined that such a consensus of opinion would justify a transfer of the spiritual rights and duties of the office of a shebait: Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (17). In this case, however, it is admitted that Girindra executed the arpannama entirely at his own will, and upon his own initiative, and that he neither invited nor obtained a consensus of opinion among those interested in the worship of the deities in favour of the course which he pursued. It is further urged that Girindra as shebait was competent and entitled to execute the indenture of arpannama provided that either of the following conditions was fulfilled: (1) that the assignment of the pala was to a member of the founder's family qualified to perform the duties of shebait, or (2) that the assignment was "for the benefit of the deities." As regards (1) it is well-settled that "according to Hindu Law, when the worship of a thakur has been founded, the shebaitship is held to be vested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, or there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution" [Gossamee Sri Gridhariji v. Ramanlalji Gossami (18).]

The High Court at Madras consistently has held that an alienation by a shebait of the corpus of the dedicated property, either to a member of the founder's family or to a stranger, is utterly void. Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami Gurukal (19), Narayana v. Ranga (20) and Sundarambal Ammal's case (7); see also Juggurnath Roy Chowdhry v. Kishen Pershad Surmah (21), Narayan v. Chintaman (22), Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar Maharajdev v. Keshaorav Govind Kulgavkar (23), Mallika's case (13) and Gobinda Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Debendra Kumar Roy (24). In Mallika's case (13) Banerji, J., observed that "It has been held in a uniform current of decisions, both in this and in the High Courts of Bombay and Madras, that a priestly office with emoluments attached to it is inalienable.................If it were necessary to give reasons for such a proposition so amply supported by authority, as the proposition contended for on behalf of the respondent is, I may say that it would be contrary to public policy to allow an office like this to be transferred either by private sale or by sale in execution of a decree. The defendant in this case is one of several shebaits to the idol, his turn of office extending for eleven days in a month. The emoluments of the office consist of votive offerings. And if a person professing a religion differing from Hinduism were to become the execution purchaser, it would lead to no end of complications and disturbances, which would be detrimental in the highest degree to the interests of other shebaits and of votaries generally."

It is not settled whether the renunciation of a shebaiti by the office-holder in favour of a sole immediate heir would be void: [Narayana v. Ranga (20).] It may be—though I do not decide—that such an alienation would contravene the doctrine of delegatus non-potest delegare: [Raja Vurma Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (10)], but if it be assumed that a shebait is competent to abdicate from his office, in my opinion, such an act would operate to transfer the office to the persons entitled thereto as reversioners under the foundation, or in default of any directions by the founder or of custom according to the principles of the Common Law of India. The office would not pass under or by virtue of any assignment of his office by the abdicating shebait whether it purported to be in favour of the sole immediate heir or of any other person, for every such assignment, in my opinion, is wholly void and inoperative. If the view of the position and status of a shebait which I have expressed is correct, it follows that the case of Moncharam v. Pranshankar (25) was wrongly decided and ought not to be followed. Rajeswar Mullick v. Gopeswar Mullick (26) and Gobinda Kumar Roy's case (24). As regards (2) it is urged that the assignment in suit is valid and should receive the imprimatur of the Court because the transfer of the pala was "for the benefit of the deities." In support of this contention the learned Counsel for the defendant referred to the decision of this Court in Nirodbarani Dassi v. Shiba Das Pal Dewasin (27) and the dictum of Mitra, J., in Rajeswar Mullick's case (26). With all respect to the learned Judges who decided these cases, for the reasons which I am about to state, I am of opinion that the decisions in Nirodbarani Dassi's case (27) and in Rajeswar Mullick's case (26) so far as it is founded upon the same reasoning, are not in accordance with the Law of India as enunciated by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and I cannot acquiesce in them.

The contention which learned Counsel has urged upon the Court, in my opinion, is founded upon a heresy which has crept into the Hindu Law, and ought to be exposed and eradicated. This is not the only branch of law in which the words "for the benefit" have caused error and confusion [see Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (28), Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (29).] Who is to determine whether any particular alienation is "for the benefit of the deity?" Is it the founder? Is it the persons interested in the worship? Is it the shebaits, or one or more of them? Is it the Court? I do not pause to hazard a conjecture, for, in my opinion, the doctrine contravenes the Hindu Law, and in any event cannot be extended to an alienation of the spiritual rights and duties of a shebait. The genesis of the heresy may be found, I think, in a misapprehension of certain observations of Sir Montague Smith in Prosunno Kumar's case (9): "The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager for an infant heir which was thus defined in a judgment of this Committee delivered by Lord Justice Knight Bruce: The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is under the Hindu Law a limited and qualified power; it can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate, but where in the particular instance the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance is the thing to be regarded." Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (30). From the above passage the doctrine has been evolved that although there might be no necessity for any particular alienation of debutter property, yet, if the transfer was "for the benefit" or "for the clear benefit" of the endowment, it could be upheld according to the Hindu Law. It is incumbent upon me, therefore, to examine more closely the rule propounded in Prosunno Kumari's case (9). It is to be observed that while Sir Montague Smith laid down that a shebait "may incur debts or borrow money for necessary purposes," his Lordship added: "The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them." Since 1875, the Judicial Committee have more fully defined the circumstances in which a shebait is empowered to alienate debutter property. In 1876 Sir Montague Smith, delivering the opinion of the Board in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (31) stated that the Rani Rashmoni, who had effected the alienation of the property then in suit "had, as the manager of the estate, power, if it were debutter dedicated to the idol, to alienate so much of it as was necessary to keep up the temple and worship of the idol; and if it were secular to alienate it if it became necessary to do so to preserve the rest of the family estate." And later in his judgment his Lordship, referring to Prosunno Kumari's case (9) observed that "in that case a shebait had incurred debts, and mortgaged the property of the idol for the purpose of the necessary sustentation of the worship of the idol; and this tribunal held that the position of the shebait was analogous to that of a manager of an infant, and that he had the same authority, which in both cases arises from the necessity of the case, to raise money for the benefit of the estate." In that case their Lordships held that the "sale of part of the land was justified by the imperious necessity of finishing the temple which had been commenced." In Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (32), Sir Andrew Scoble, delivering the judgment of the Board, observed that "it is well-settled law that the power of the mohunt to alienate debutter property is, like the power of the manager for an infant heir, limited to cases of unavoidable necessity." Again, in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (33), Lord Atkinson laid down that "if for the reasons above mentioned the grant of a lease in perpetuity of debutter lands at a fixed rent requires to be justified by unavoidable necessity, it is difficult to see why an absolute alienation in perpetuity of the same kind of land in consideration of a premium, should not equally require to be justified by the same kind of necessity, since it brings about quite as completely the same prejudicial results." His Lordship also observed that "the only specific point touching the present case actually decided in these three authorities was this: that a debutter estate may be mortgaged to secure the re-payment of money borrowed and applied to prevent its own extinction by sequestration. No indication is to be found in any of them as to what is, in this connection, the precise nature of the things to be included under the description 'benefit of the estate.' It is impossible, their Lordships think, to give a precise definition of it applicable to all cases, and they do not attempt to do so. The preservation, however, of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it from injury or deterioration by inundation, this and such like things would obviously be benefits. The difficulty is to draw the line as to what are, in this connection, to be taken as benefits, and what not." An examination of these authorities leads to the conclusion that the power of a shebait to alienate the corpus of debutter property is to be measured by the exigencies of the occasion. An alienation of such property, in my opinion, cannot, be justified unless it is impracticable duly to carry out the service and worship of the deity, and matters incidental thereto, or to preserve the dedicated property without incurring the expenditure, to defray which it is proposed to effect the alienation; and further, unless the required expenditure cannot be met out of the income of the endowment, and without alienating the corpus of the estate. In short, the shebait's power of alienation must be exercised for purposes of defence and not of aggrandisement, as a shield and not as a sword. Occasions which would justify the alienation of the corpus will not frequently arise, for "even in cases where, owing to causes beyond the control of the managers, such as famine, etc., the income falls off, the uniform and approved practice of the country has been to regulate the scale of the services with reference to the diminished income until the income returns to its normal condition, and not to keep up the services on a scale rendering the incurring of debts necessary. Nor is money ever borrowed, even for the purpose of repairs. One reason why a manager never thinks of mortgaging or setting the corpus for such a purpose is that he will ordinarily not be able to find a mortgagee or purchaser among the members of the community since the principle that property dedicated to God ought never to be diverted for other purposes, operates so strongly on the mind of the community that even innocent participation in such diversion is understood to be sinful, and to forbode evil to the participator......Nor should it be forgotten that, as shown by the formula with which grants and donations to charities usually conclude, the people take that to renovate is even more meritorious than to found. In such circumstances it is obvious that the manager's powers are quite limited. He can only do what is necessary for the services of the idol...and he need only preserve and duly manage what property may belong thereto. It is no part of his duty to effect improvements with reference to existing endowments when the funds in his hands do not admit of it; nor is he called upon to enter into transactions for the purpose of augmenting the funds of the institution. He cannot in any manner subject the institution in his charge to duties, obligations and burdens to which, with reference to the nature of the foundation or otherwise, the institution is not inherently or necessarily subject" [per Subramania Iyer, A. C. J.) in Nallayappa Pillian v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (34).]

Where there is an "imperious necessity" or an "unavoidable necessity" in the above sense compelling the shebait to alienate the property, such an alienation clearly is "for the benefit of the deity," but if there is no such necessity, the fact that the value of the estate will be increased if an alienation by sale, mortgage, exchange or otherwise is effected, will not justify such a transaction, although thereby it may be that the endowment can be benefited [per Subramania Aiyar, (A. C. J. in Nallayappa Pillian v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (34); per Lord Atkinson in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (33), Bhagwan Das Naik v. Mahadeo Prasad Pal (35) and Shankar Sahi v. Baichu Ram (36). As it is admitted that there was no necessity in the sense I have indicated which would justify the execution of the arpannama in suit, in my opinion, the contention that the Court ought to uphold the arpannama on the ground that it was or might be "for the benefit of the deities" is misconceived, and irrelevant, and I reject it.

I desire to add that, in my opinion, the rule of necessity extends only to an alienation of the temporalities of the idol. It does not, and, in my opinion, it cannot be made to apply to an alienation of the spiritual rights and duties, the fulfilment of which is the primary function of a shebait. To apply such a rule to the spiritual duties of a shebait would be to contravene the fundamental principle of the Hindu Law, and to violate the religious instincts of all orthodox Hindus. Indeed, in the nature of things there can be no necessity for a voluntary transfer of the spiritual duties of a shebait [Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (37)] and the doctrine that a shebait at his own will and pleasure is at liberty to alter the line of shebaits on the ground that to do so will be "for the benefit of the deity" offends against the Common Law of India and is in conflict with the uniform rulings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. For these reasons, in my opinion, the indenture of arpannama of the 13th September 1918 must be declared void and inoperative and there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The Receiver will be discharged. Each party will bear his own cost.

RAJJAB—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

*Muhammadan Law—Marriage—*Pre-nuptial agreement to live with wife's parents—Legality.

An agreement by which a Muhammadan husband binds himself to live presumably for all time, so long as the marital relationship continues, in his wife's house is invalid.

[Case-law reviewed.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 30th of July 1923.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellant.

Messrs. U. S. Bajpai and N. C. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of the validity of an agreement in relation to a Muhammadan marriage, which seems to me to be concluded by authorities which I feel compelled to follow, even if I did not agree with them.

A Muhammadan husband sues his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. The wife alleges that in breach of an agreement, made on the 1st of March 1921, (an ante nuptial agreement, she is entitled to, and has, in fact, divorced her husband. The lower Appellate Court held that there is no proof that the defendant exercised the option of divorce and it also rightly held that the agreement gave no power to the wife to divorce. In my opinion, the question of divorce is a side issue, which really does not arise. The real question is whether the agreement is binding upon the husband so as to disentitle him to bring a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The agreement is not correctly set out in the written statement. In fact, it appears to me to have been deliberately mis-stated in the written statement. The material portion of the agreement made by the husband before the date of marriage, as translated into English, runs as follows:—

"I shall live at the house of wife's mother and shall always live with my wife. If I do not live at her house or live at any other place, I shall have no concern with Musammat Khatun Bibi (the wife), daughter of Musammat Maiki (mother-in-law), and she will have a right to marry Musammat Khatun Bibi to whomsoever she likes. I shall have no concern with Musammat Khatun Bibi again. I shall not live at any other place without the permission of Musammat Maiki or Khatun Bibi."

Two things are clear from this agreement. The word "she" refers to the mother. There is no provision giving the wife power to divorce, or an option to exercise that power. The appellant contends that the power given to the mother to re-marry her daughter. is useless without a previous divorce, and that the right to divorce must be implied. That is in a sense true, but it is equally true that interpreting the agreement as it is, the power given to the mother is ineffectual, in fact, without a prior right of divorce residing in the wife. I do not think that it is legitimate to infer, or rather to insert into an agreement, a provision which is not there, in order to decide whether the agreement itself is valid or not, or whether it is against public policy. The appellant relies upon a passage in the 1894 Edition of Ameer Ali's book on Muhammadan Law, which, while recognising the obvious fundamental right of the Muhammadan husband to compel his wife to live with him, states that the law recognises express stipulation entered into at the time of marriage respecting conjugal domicile, and that, if a husband has agreed to let his wife live at her father's house, he cannot afterwards force her to leave it, which, of course, in this case he is trying to do by a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. No authority is quoted for that proposition, which probably is only true within limits, which the author has not fully explained. Further reliance is placed upon Hamidoolah v. Feizunnissa (1), where it is held that the Muhammadan Law permits the delegation by the husband to the wife of the power of divorce on certain occasions. That does not arise in this case, because the agreement contains no such delegation. The case also holds that an ante nuptial agreement with reference to the residence of the wife may be valid, if of a reasonable nature. The provision in that case was not that the husband should live at the wife's father's house, but that the wife should be taken to her father's house four times a year. Clearly that case has no bearing upon the present question.

On the other hand, there seems to be a fairly clearly current of authorities that an agreement by which the husband binds himself to live presumably for all time so long as the marital relationship continues, in his wife's house, is invalid, prima facie it would clearly be so, because it is inconsistent with the fundamental rule of Muhammadan Law, and it is an attempt to bind the liberty of the subject which, as a general, is against public policy. The question first arose in Hamid-un-Nissa Bibi v. Zohir ud-Din Sheik (2), where, without deciding the question because it was unnecessary to do so, the Court, which included the Chief Justice of Bengal, expressed great doubt whether such a stipulation could be valid in any case. That was in 1890. In 1904, in Abdul Piroj Khan v. Hussenbi (3), a Bench, including the Chief Justice, held that it was not competent for the husband and wife to enter into an agreement, by which the husband consented that his wife might live with her parents. That is different from this case. The permission there was not so strong: but, of course, it was a surrender of the husband's ordinary right to decide the residence for himself and his wife. In 1910, in Imam Ali Patwari v. Arfat-un-Nisa (4), it was held positively by Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr Justice Mullick, that a condition in kabinnamah, that the husband should live with a wife in her father's house and that she would be entitled to divorce him if he did not, was invalid in Muhammadan Law. That case is really applicable here. In 1916 another Court in Calcutta, neither of the members of which was a Muhammadan, took the same view after going into the law and considering the previous decision reported as Imam Ali Patwari v. Arfat-un-Nissa (4) to which I have already referred. That case is reported as Imam Ali Patwari v. Arfatunnessa (5). There is finally the authority of the Punjab High Court in 1920 Fatima Bibi v. Nur Muhammad (6), in which the matter was gone into very thoroughly and the judgment was delivered by a well-known Muhammdan Lawyer, Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

In the face of all these authorities, I hold that this agreement, to the extent to which it bound the husband to live with his wife at her father's house, was invalid and could not constitute a defence which was the real defence set up at the trial, to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. I am deciding the point somewhat differently to the way in which it was dealt with in the Court below, although in substance the decision is the same. No question, in my opinion, of a divorce arises in this case at all and, if it did, the finding of the lower Court that the so-called option in favour of the wife had never been exercised would be fatal to it in any event. The appeal must be dismissed with costs, in this Court on the higher scale.

Pleadings and proof—Suit for declaration of customary right—Custom found against—Common Law right as citizen, whether can be set up.

Where the plaintiffs who are shepherds in a village sue the defendants, the members of another community, for a declaration that they, the plaintiffs, are entitled by custom to take their procession on marriage and other festive occasions through the public streets of the village with music, dancing and torches by daylight, which they claim to be component parts of the procession itself, from time immemorial and the alleged customary right is not proved, the plaintiffs' suit must fail. Any right which the plaintiffs may have, based upon their Common Law right as citizens, must be vindicated in a separate suit. [p. 228, col. 1.]

Obiter.—Any member of the public has got the right to use a public street in any lawful manner and a declaration can be granted if he is prevented from so doing without proof of any special damage. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1921, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddapah, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1920.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th October 1923, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of remand by the District Judge of Cuddapah in a suit brought by the plaintiffs, the shepherds of a village called Thathireddipalli, for a declaration that they are entitled to take their processions on marriage and after festive occasions through the public streets of the village with certain ceremonials attached to it, which they claim to be component parts of the procession itself from time immemorial. They say that they are entitled to carry on their processions with music, dancing, torches by daylight and with vahanams. They allege in the plaint that the defendants, who are the Kapus of their place, threatend to obstruct them in exercisg this right of theirs.

The suit was first before the Subordinate Judge of Cuddappah and he held that the dispute between the parties was confined to the claim by the shepherds to carry torches during daylight, that that was a mere dignity or honour and that no declaration could be given as to that right it not being a civil right at all; and he, therefore, dismissed the suit. It was against that that an appeal was filed by the shepherds before the District Judge. The District Judge has come to the conclusion that it is not a question of a mere declation of a dignity or honour that is involved in this case but a right of procession along the public road in a certain manner accompanied by music, etc., which was obstructed and that therefore, this is a suit of a civil nature, the obstruction being really to the procession itself. The plaintiffs explain before us that they claim the right to take their processions with those accompaniments only as a matter of customary right, and they admit that unless they are able to establish that they have a customary right of carrying on their processions with daylight torches which is the main point in dispute between the parties, they are not entitled to a declaration but, if they do prove that, they would be entitled to the declaration claimed as without these customary component parts of the procession, the procession itself will be of no value, and the stoppage of the accompaniments will be tatamount, as the District Judge has held in the lower Court, to stoppage of the procession altogether.

Before disposing of this case, we think it would lead to quickness of despatch and convenience of parties if we call for a finding on the following issue:—

Whether the plaintiffs have a right by custom to carry on their procession along the public streets on the occasions mentioned in the plaint with daylight torches as claimed by them?

The Subordinate Judge will try this issue after taking evidence from both sides and submit his finding in three months. Ten days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Cuddapah submitted the following

FINDING.—In this case the High Court has called for a finding on the following issues:—

Whether the plaintiffs have a right, by custom, to carry on their procession along the public streets on the occasions mentioned in the plaint with daylight torches as claimed by them?

* * * * * * *

The weight of evidence and probabilities are against the plaintiffs and I find that the custom is not proved.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we called for a finding on the issue "Whether the plaintiffs have a right by custom to carry on their procession along the public streets on the occasions mentioned in the plaint with daylight torches as claimed by them?" A finding has been returned by the District Judge against the plaintiffs; he has held that it is not proved that the plaintiffs have made out such a custom as alleged by them. Ordinarily on this finding the appeal would have been allowed and the suit directed to be dismissed, but it is argued by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar for the plaintiffs who now appears for the first time in the case that we should go back upon what we held on the last occasion and hold that the plaintiffs have a right as members of the public to use public roads in any manner that they can lawfully use them and that it is not open to any other member of the public to prevent them from so doing unless they infringe some particular right of the other or they infringe any Magisterial orders or Police regulations or cause injury to any member of the public by so using. This argument was not urged before us at the time when the case was heard by us and we called for findings. In fact as stated in our judgment it was expressly admitted by the learned Vakil who then appeared for the plaintiffs that the plaintiffs based their right to take processions with the accompaniments named only as a matter of customary right and if they were not able to establish such a customary right they would not be entitled to a declaration.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the learned Vakil who appeared then was acting beyond his authority and the admission being on a question of law is not binding on the clients; but the argument overlooks the nature of the suit. The plaint says that by immemorial custom the plaintiffs in this suit and their castemen have the right from time immemorial to conduct processions in these streets with music and daylight torches. The Kapus the defendants denied this customary right and they stated that it was merely an attempt made by the plaintiffs to make themselves equal to the Kapus in caste status by carrying daylight torches and that the Kapus alone were entitled to this privilege and on that ground they objected to the declaration being granted. The issue was worded like this:—"Whether the plaintiffs have not the right to carry daylight torches in procession as claimed by them?" It was admitted before the Subordinate Judge as noted by him in para. 7 that the suit was for the vindication of a dignity, i. e., for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to carry torches during daytime on ceremonial occasions. He declined to give the plaintiffs a declaratory decree as prayed for holding that the case was one for a declaration of a mere dignity or honour unconnected with any office or temple and he was of opinion that the right was not one which Civil Courts ought to recognize. Before the appellate Court the District Judge starts his judgment by saying that the suit was for a declaration of the customary right of the Gollas of Thathireddipalli to go to their temple in procession through certain public streets with music and torches during daytime on marriage and other ceremonial occasions and for an injunction. In the course of his judgment no doubt he treated the right claimed as not different from the inherent right of every citizen to use the public streets in a lawful manner and said, "Admittedly the streets in question are public streets. All members of the public have, therefore, equal rights in them. Apart from any custom every citizen has an inherent right to conduct processions, civil or religious, through a public street, so as not to obstruct the use of it by other and subject to any directions a Magistrate may lawfully give to prevent obstructions of thoroughfare or breaches of public peace."

It was objected before us on the former occasion that this view of the case was not permissible considering the way in which the suit was framed, the suit being to vindicate a customary right. It is not without due care and deliberation that the plaintiffs confined their case to a vindication of what they call a customary right for the plaintiffs Gollas would have no doubt objected to the Malas and Madigas and other low castes exercising a right such as the one in question now. If the right is to be claimed as a right inherent in every citizen the Malas and Madigas would be equally entitled to the right of carrying daylight torches in their processions but the Gollas in their evidence carefully deny that any but the Kapus and themselves have got that right; so that it is clear that here we have not got to deal with the general question as to what the right of a member of the public is on the public road. It is in view of this contention that the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs who appeared on the last occasion admitted that unless he was able to establish his customary right his case must fail. We do not think, therefore, that it is open now to the plaintiffs or to the learned Vakil who appears for them to put his case upon a general inherent right of the public on public roads. The recent decision of the Privy Council reported as Manzur Hassan v. Muhammad Zamman (1) has put the matter beyond controversy that any member of the public has got the right to use a public street in any lawful manner and a declaration can be granted if he is prevented from so doing without proof of any special damage. This was the view taken by the Madras High Court and the Privy Council has accepted the Madras view as correct. But that case has no bearing on the present case, because such a case as this must necessarily fail when the custom is not proved. Any right that the plaintiffs may conceive themselves to have, based upon their position as citizens, they will have to vindicate by another suit, if they are so advised and if they find it necessary to do so. Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar, has quoted some cases to show that so long as this case is pending before us it is open to us to re-consider the decision already taken if we find that that decision is not correct to put matters right. It may be that the parties have not right to insist upon re-opening questions that had been decided before calling for a finding but I am clearly of opinion that it is open to the Court to do so if it thinks fit and it cannot be said to act without jurisdiction if it goes back upon the position taken by it previously so long as the case is not out of its hands. It is not necessary however to decide this point, for the point that has now been taken by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyer we have held is not open to him on the frame of the suit. We must, therefore, accept the finding of the District Judge, as against his finding nothing has been urged, and we hold that the customary right is not proved. In this view the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs.

Mr. Sasankajiban Roy and Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guho, for the Appellant.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—These two appeals are by defendants Nos. 3 and 1 respectively in a partition suit for setting aside an ex parte decree that had been passed for partition of certain properties. Defendant No. 3 is a pardanashin lady and her case is that she was never served. Defendant No. 1 who is appellant in Appeal No. 64 of 1924 says that he was unable to present his case to the Court owing to the negligence or collusion of one Bhola Nath an employer of his who had been entrusted by him with the conduct of the case. So far as the lady is concerned, defendant No. 1, the appellant in Appeal No. 63, it appears that the service was effected by serving summons on her third son who lives in the same house as the lady. Under the circumstances it seems to me that it must be taken to be a proper service on this lady and we have not the slightest doubt that she knew all about the suit and that she had ample opportunity of giving due and proper instructions with regard to the conduct of the case.

The result is that Appeal No. 63 of 1924 is dismissed with costs—hearing-fee, one gold mohur.

Defendant No. 1 filed a written statement in the suit but he was not present when the ex parte decree was passed on the 13th December 1923. So far as I can make out from the evidence which is very incomplete Bhola Nath on or about the 28th November when the suit was adjourned until the 13th December was present at the place of hearing and according to his story he left a rupee with some person to be handed over to the Pleader Girindra Mohan Datta in order that he might apply on the 13th December for further adjournment of the suit. Apparently, the fee never reached the Pleader Girindra and no application for adjournment was made and the suit was decreed ex parte. Now, no doubt, if there had been no negligence on the part of defendant No. 1 he should be allowed, under the circumstances, an opportunity of having the case re-heard. But I am not at all satisfied that he can be acquitted of negligence in the matter. Bhola Nath returned from Mymensingh some time after the 28th November and surely, it was the duty of defendant No. 1 to enquire in a suit of this nature as to what had happened at Mymensingh on the 28th November. If he failed to enquire he was, in my opinion, guilty of negligence and the Court should not assist him and if he did enquire then he knew that the suit had been adjourned until the 13th December and yet in spite of this Bhola Nath and he were both content to rely the fact that he had left the fee behind with instruction that the Pleader was to apply for adjournment on the 13th December. We think that they had no right to assume that the Court would grant an adjournment on the 13th December and that it was their duty to have made proper and adequate provision for the carrying on of the case if, as turned out, the adjournment was refused on the 13th December.

In the circumstances, holding as we do that the appellant was negligent in the case we do not think that we should be justified in setting aside the ex parte decree which has been passed. Parties should learn that they cannot have as of right an adjournment or if an adjournment is refused and the case proceeds that they cannot have the case restored as of right and it will be better for the conduct of litigation as well as for the community as a whole when this is realized.

The result is that this appeal is also dismissed with costs—hearing-fee, one gold mohur.

Ordinarily a plaintiff, having had a choice of forum, is not entitled to claim to be examined on commission outside the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is pending. Application for revision of an order of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 30th November 1925.

Messrs. K. Hussain, Syed Ali Khan and S. M. Wasi, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. W. H. Akbari and Ghulam Mohammad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order of the District Judge of Patna, directing a commission to issue for the examination of the opposite party and his wife at Dacca. The opposite party is a Reader in Arabic at the Dacca University; his wife is a girl aged about 19 who is the daughter of the petitioner. The petitioner had been appointed the certificated guardian of the girl and her property before her marriage to the opposite party. Last June when the opposite party was living in Patna, where his wife's property is situated, he made an application for the removal of the petitioner from the guardianship and for the appointment of himself in his place. The girl was then residing with her father. The wife was enceinte, and the opposite party, who had got the appointment of Reader in the Dacca University, took away his wife from her father's care to Dacca, and since then the opposite party and his wife have been residing in Dacca. In October or November last, when the case came on before the District Judge, the opposite party applied to be allowed to be examined on commission in Dacca, and, after hearing the objection of the petitioner, the District Judge ordered the commission to issue for the examination both of the opposite party and of his wife. The ground given by the opposite party for the issue of such commission was that his wife was likely to be giving birth to a child in the near future and that she would not be able to leave Dacca, nor would he himself be able to leave her in that condition; also as Reader in Arabic at the University, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for him to leave his duty.

The grounds taken before this Court are that, though a commission may be issued for the examination of a defendant or witnesses, it is irregular to grant such a commission in the case of the plaintiff who has had the choice of forum and must abide by his choice. It is also urged that it will cause great harassment to the petitioner if he has to go to Dacca, and also, if the girl is under the charge of her husband at the time the examination is conducted on commission, it is likely that the opposite party will be able to have influence with her.

With regard to the argument that in the case of a plaintiff, a commission should not issue outside the jurisdiction, the learned Advocate has relied on the case of Muhammad Akbar Ali Khan v. Herbert Francis (1). There the plaintiff, residing in London, had instituted a suit against the defendant, residing in Patna, in the Patna Court, and applied for his examination on commission in London. Das, J., after reference to the several cases, held that the plaintiff, having had the choice of forum was not entitled to claim to be examined on commission outside the jurisdiction. The cases of Sarat Kumar Ray v. Ram Chandra Chatterjee (2), Nadin v. Bassett (3) and Ross v. Woodford (4) were relied on. The general ground on which an application to examine a plaintiff on commission is refused is that the plaintiff had had his choice of forum and, therefore, should not be allowed to ask for his examination elsewhere than in the Court in which he has instituted his suit.

In the present case the opposite party had no choice of forum; he himself was residing in Patna and so were his wife and the petitioner and his wife's property was situate also in Patna. It was only because he received the appointment of Reader in Arabic at the Dacca University that he had to go to Dacca.

Under the circumstances of this case, I think that the order of the District Judge should be upheld. However, the issue of a commission to Dacca will cause the petitioner expense and trouble and I think it should be directed that the costs of the commission to the petitioner should be deposited by the opposite party before the commission issues, and I would direct accordingly. Also if it can be managed, the learned District Judge should direct that the examination of the wife of the opposite party should be conducted in the presence of an officer of the Court at Dacca elsewhere than in the opposite party's house.

Subject to these modifications, the application is rejected. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

versus
THE CHAIRMAN OF THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF THE DACCA MUNICIPALITY—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 102, 103, 113—Re-valuation of holdings without fresh determination of percentage rate—Legality—Privy and water taxes—Liability—Remedy of person aggrieved—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 96—Second appeal—Meaning of word—Finding of fact.

Section 102 of the Bengal Municipal Act provides that once a percentage has been fixed it shall remain in force until rescinded or until the Commissioners at a meeting determine some other percentage at which the rate will be levied from the next year. There is no provision in the Act which provides that every time there is a fresh valuation there must be a formal meeting to fix the percentage even though the Commissioners intend the same percentage to continue. [p. 232, col. 2.[

In some cases it is the owners and in others it is the occupier that is liable for privy and water taxes. A person who disputes his liability to be assessed has his remedy by way of an application to the Commissioners under s. 113 of the Act and until he has exhausted the remedies provided by the Act he cannot invoke the assistance of the Civil Courts. [p 233, col. 1.]

The finding as to the meaning of a word is a finding of fact and cannot be disturbed in second appeal. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 24th of November 1924, confirming that of the Additional Munsif of that place, dated the 26th of May 1924.

Sir Benode Chandra Mitter and Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Bhuban Mohan Basak on his own behalf and on behalf of the rate-payers of Dacca against the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Dacca for a declaration that the last assessment made by the Dacca Municipality is null and void, illegal and ultra vires and that there is no Municipal tax payable for the years 1923-24. He also prayed for a permanent injunction to restrain the Municipality from realising the taxes. His case was briefly as follows:—

On the 28th June 1922 the Commissioners passed a resolution that the general revision of the assessment of holdings be undertaken without delay as it was overdue. In pursuance of this resolution an Assessor was appointed to value the holdings and also an Assistant Assessor. Valuation was duly made and accepted and the new assessment was made. There was no change in the percentage charged on the valuation, which remained as it was before. This assessment was brought into force for the years 1923-24. The plaintiff complained that the assessment was illegal for the following reasons:—

(1) That the resolution of 28th June was illegally passed, the objection, if I understand it rightly, being that an amendment and substantive motion were put at the same time.

(2) That no percentage was fixed before the assessment and that under the resolution the Commissioners cannot assess any tax without first fixing the percentage.

(3) That Government and Railway buildings have not been properly assessed and many holdings have not been assessed at all.

(4) The Assistant Assessor had not power to assess any buildings.

(5) The privy and water tax being payable by the occupiers, assessment of the owners to pay it is illegal.

(6) That assessment of privy and water tax of houses let when the occupier was living elsewhere was illegal.

(7) That the assessment made being on a different basis is illegal.

(8) That as the money realised by the assessment exceeded the expenditure by Rs. 1,04,000, it was illegal.

A number of issues were framed.

The Trial Court for reasons which it is unnecessary to specify found against the plaintiff and dismissed his suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court where he was equally unsuccessful. He now appeals to this Court.

His grounds of appeal number some 20 but the following points only have been urged:—

(1) The meeting of the 22nd June 1922 resolved that there should be a new assessment and this means that there should be both valuation and fixing of the actual percentage.

(2) The percentage at which taxes are to be levied must be fixed before the valuation or rating list is prepared and that whenever there is a fresh valuation there must be a fresh fixing of percentage.

(3) That it is illegal to assess the water and privy tax on owners.

(1) The whole of the argument here centered round what did the Commissioners mean when in their resolution they resolved that there should be a fresh assessment. Did they mean both valuation and fixing of the percentage or did they mean only a valuation of holdings?

Sir Benode Mitter for the appellants contends they meant both valuation and percentage and that as they have not fixed the percentage the assessment is illegal. The learned Advocate-General contends that "assessment" was used loosely by the Commissioners to mean "valuation." It seems quite clear to me that what the Commissioners resolved to do at their meeting and what they meant in their resolution by the expression "assessment" is a question of fact. The lower Court of Appeal has found that by the expression "assessment" they meant a valuation of the holdings. In second appeal we cannot go behind this finding of fact unless it can be argued that it is based on no evidence. There is, however, no suggestion in any of the 20 grounds of appeal that this finding of fact was come to without any evidence and in these circumstances the appellant cannot be allowed to argue that it was not. It cannot be said that the determination of the point depends on the construction of any document. The document on the construction of which it is contended that the point depends is merely the record of the proceedings of the Commissioners and what we are concerned with is what the Commissioners mean by their resolution. It is not suggested that the record of the proceedings is inaccurate or that it does not represent what the Commissioners resolved. This disposes of the appellant's first contention.

(2) The decision on the second point requires the consideration of certain sections of the Municipal Act, viz., s. 96, s. 97, 97-A, s. 102 and s. 103. Sir Benode Mitter contends that the Commissioners have not complied with s. 103 of the Act and hence their action is illegal.

Section 103 runs as follows:—

"As soon as possible after the percentage at which the rate is to be levied for the next year shall have been determined under the last preceding section, the Commissioners shall cause to be prepared a valuation and rating list, which shall contain the following particulars—

(f) amount of rate payable for the year;

(g) amount of quarterly instalment."

Section 102 which is referred to in this section provides that at a meeting to be held before the close of the year next preceding the year to which the rate will apply the Commissioners shall determine the percentage on the valuation of holdings at which the rate shall be levied and the percentage so fixed shall remain in force until the order of the Commissioners determining such percentage shall be rescinded and until the Commissioners at a meeting shall determine some other percentage. Sir Benode Mitter argues that if s. 102 and s. 103 are read together it is clear that the valuation and rating list can only be prepared shortly after a meeting has been held to fix the percentage and that as no such meeting was held after the valuation was made the assessment was illegal. I do not think that this is necessarily the interpretation to be placed on these sections. Section 102 provides that once a percentage has been fixed it shall ramain in force until rescinded or until the Commissioners at a meeting determine some other percenrage at which the rate will be levied from the next year. The reasonable interpretation to be put on this section then is that the rate fixed continues unchanged and is to be considered as the rate for the year until altered. It might be said that by implication the rate is to be considered as fixed each year at the same rate until changed and is although there is no formal meeting to do so. The Commissioners by holding no meeting to change it by implication fixed the rate at the old rate. There is no provision in the Act which provides that every time there is a fresh valuation there must be a formal meeting to fix the percentage even though the Commissioners intend the same percentage to continue.

It no doubt might be argued that the Commissioners should after they have made a valuation take into consideration the percentage rate and consider how much money they require and, therefore, what the rate should be No doubt if the Municipality was properly managed, as a business concern should be, this would be done, but the fact that it has not been done does not, I think, render the assessment invalid.

I do not think reading the Act as a whole that it is required that whenever a fresh valuation is made the Commissioners must hold a meeting to fix the percentage. I think it is open to them by not holding any meeting to levey the rate at the old rate of percentage on the new valuation.

(3) The last point to be dealt with is the privy and water tax.

It seems to be the case of the appellant that the privy and water tax is payable by the occupier and it is illegal to assess owners to privy and water tax. Section 279 (3) provides that the water rate shall be paid by the occupier and s. 281 provides that such occupier may recover ¼ share from the owner.

Section 282 provides that when the house is unoccupied the owner will pay ¼ rate. Section 312 provides that if the house is occupied by more than one tenant severally it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to recover the rate from the owner. With regard to privy tax the provisions are more or less similar. It is thus clear that in some circumstances the owner and in other circumstances the occupier is liable. There is, therefore, nothing illegal in assessing an owner to pay privy and water tax. It may be, however, that the owner is wrongly assessed in some cases while in other circumstances the assessment is legal, for it cannot be said that in no circumstances is the owner liable. The Municipality may owing to ignorance of the facts assess the owner where they ought to assess the occupier and vice versa. The aggrieved person has his remedy under s. 113 which provides that a person who disputes his liability to be assessed may apply to the Commissioners under s. 113. Clearly this was the remedy open to the plaintiff of which he did not avail himself.

Until the aggrieved person has exhausted the remedies which the Act provides he cannot invoke the assistance of the Civil Courts. This point is also decided against the appellants.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

B. B. Ghose, J.—I agree. The first point argued in the appeal that the resolution of 28th June 1922 of the Commissioners was not given effect to is based on the ground that there has not been revision of "assessment" of holdings but only a valuation. This depends upon the meaning of the word "assessment" as used in the resolution. The Court of Appeal below has held that the word is not necessarily of wider import than the word "valuation." It is argued that this is a question of construction and may be raised in second appeal. The expression "construction" as applied to a document includes two things: first, the meaning of the words; and secondly, the effect which is to be given to them. It is well-settled that the meaning of words is a question of fact in all cases. The effect of the words is a question of law. This distinction between the meaning and the legal effect of expressions used must be always borne in mind. This question cannot, therefore, be raised in second appeal. Moreover as the learned District Judge points out the word "assessor" and "assessment" have been rather loosely used in the Municipal Act itself.

The second and most important question is whether the valuation and rating list prepared under s. 103 is null and void, as the procedure prescribed in s. 102 of the Bengal Municipal Act has not been followed. Section 102 provides that the Commissioners at a meeting, before the close of the next preceding year to which the rate will apply, shall determine the percentage on the valuation of the holdings at which the rate shall be levied, and the percentage so fixed shall remain in force until that order is rescinded or some other percentage is determined. This seems to imply that when once the percentage is determined that will continue in force for each succeeding year so long as it is not altered in the manner provided in the section. It follows that if there is no intention to rescind or alter the percentage which has been once fixed it is not necessary that the Commissioners should at a meeting determine that the same percentage on the valuation should remain in force. Stress, however, is laid upon the opening words of s. 103 by Sir Benode which runs as follows:—"As soon as possible after the percentage at which the rate is to be levied for the next year shall have been determined under the last preceding section............" and it is contended that this provision shows that a valuation and rating list cannot be prepared unless the percentage is determined under s. 102 after a new valuation and Sir Benode further argues that it is necessary that this should be done in order to ascertain the gross amount of taxes to be levied after a re-valuation. It appears to be quite reasonable and proper that the percentage should be determined after a new valuation. But the question is whether the omission to do so renders the preparation of the valuation and rating list null and void. It seems to me upon a consideration of the relevant sections in the Act that the passage relied on is only for the purpose of instruction and guidance of the Commissioners in order to enable them to give notice in due time of the rates to be levied for the next year, or in other words, as directory only. No time is fixed for doing the act, and no imperative language is used that there should be a fresh determination of the percentage on a re-valuation, and there is the provision that if there is no fresh determination the percentage previously fixed shall remain in force. The omission to fix a percentage after the re-valuation did not operate to the prejudice of any person, as the old rate continues. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the omission to hold a meeting does not carry with it the consequence of nullification of the preparation of the list under s. 103.

With regard to the third point relating to the water and latrine tax, the plaintiffs are not, in my opinion, entitled to maintain the suit. It has been found that these plaintiffs are liable to pay the rates. They are not persons in the same interest, as provided in O. I, r. 8 of the C. P. C., with persons who might have been illegally rated, if there are any such. If the rating on the plaintiffs is excessive that is not a matter for the Civil Court to revise. The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 37, 43—Insolvent's failure to apply for discharge—Annulment of adjudication—Protection of creditors, provision as to.

A Court has no option but to annul adjudication where an insolvent fails to apply for an order of discharge within the time specified by the Court. But with a view to protect the creditors the Court should pass an order under s. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act vesting property of the debtor in a person appointed by it.

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 12th November 1924, reversing that of the Judge, Insolvency Court, Delhi, dated the 19th June 1924.

Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Petitioners.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Din Dial was adjudicated an insolvent and a date was fixed for him to apply for his discharge. He failed to present an application for his discharge on the date fixed. The view of the Courts below appears to be that this was due to the fact that the insolvent had been held to be guilty of fraudulent preference in respect of some creditors. Such transactions were cancelled and the amounts paid to the creditors were refunded to the Official Receiver. The insolvent, therefore, took advantage of s. 43 which makes it incumbent on the Insolvency Court to annul his adjudication. The insolvent thought that this would enable him to receive the assets in the hands of the Official Receiver and to hand them over to those creditors to whom he had given fraudulent preference before. On an application made by some of the creditors the adjudication order was annulled on the 12th June 1924. This order was cancelled by the District Judge on appeal by other creditors who represented that the annulment of the adjudication would cause them serious loss in the manner already mentioned.

This is a petition by some of the creditors who claim that the order of annulment should be restored as the provisions of s. 43 are mandatory and the Insolvency Court had no alternative but to annul the adjudication on the insolvent's failure to apply for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court. Messrs. King King & Co., who are represented by Mr. Moti Sagar before me claim to be the biggest creditors and they oppose this petition. Both parties are agreed that their object is to prevent the insolvent from getting possession of the assets which were originally in the hands of the Official Receiver. It appears to me that the order of the learned

District Judge cannot be sustained. The insolvent having failed to apply for an order of discharge the Insolvency Court had no option but to annul his adjudication. But in order to protect the creditors under s. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the proper order of the Court in this case should have been that the property of the debtor shall vest in a person appointed by the Court. This would have obviated the necessity of any further proceedings before the District Judge. I accept this revision, set aside the order of the District Judge and restore that of the Insolvency Court annulling the adjudication of the insolvent Din Dial, and add a further direction that the property of the insolvent shall vest in Lala Basheshar Nath Goela under the provisions of s. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The parties will bear their own costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1271 OF 1923.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata between co-defendants—Necessary conditions—Res judicata, constructive—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10—Endowment in favour of deity—Adverse possession, how established.

In order to constitute a decision res judicata between co-defendants three essential conditions must be fulfilled: (1) that there should be a conflict of interests between co-defendants, (2) that it should be necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give the plaintiff the relief appropriate to his suit, and (3) that the judgment should contain a decision on the question as between co-defendants. [p. 237, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

The tendency of Courts is to apply the doctrine of constructive res judicata as founded on Explanation IV to s. 11, C. P. C., within very narrow limits as between plaintiffs and defendants and there is scarcely any room for its application as between co-defendants. [p. 238, col. 1.]

For application of s. 10, Limitation Act, two conditions must combine, there must be a trustee with an express trust and an estate or interest vested in the trustee. Therefore, the section is inapplicable to the case of an endowment in favour of a deity. [p. 240, col. 2.]

No particular form of an expression is necessary to constitute adverse possession; it is always a question of animus which has to be gathered from all the circumstances. [p. 242, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 27th March 1923, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 13th December 1920.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose (with him Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter), for the Appellant.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose (with him Mr. Jyotish Chandra Pal), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff asked for a declaration that a certain house situated in the town of Burdwan is a part of an estate of which he alleges he is now one of the trustees, and also for recovery of possession thereof.

The trust was created by one Annada Prosad Ghose by a deed which was called a Niyam-Nirbandhapatra in 1305. He died in the year 1308. Shortly after his death his daughter Katyani instituted a suit being No. 438 of 1901 wherein she prayed for a declaration that the deed executed by her father was void and inoperative and in the alternative she prayed for construction of the deed. In this suit she impleaded as defendant her step-mother Haribhabini, and the trustees named in the deed and also other persons in whose favour certain bequests had been made by the deed. The deed, it may be observed here, purported to dedicate certain properties to the family deity Sri Sri Iswar Sridhar Jieu and creates an endowment for the sheba of the said deity and for meeting the expenses for certain religious observances and the feeding of the guests connected with the worship of the said deity. Certain bequests were also made in favour of others. He appointed himself as trustee to act during his life; and, to act after his death as trustees, nine other persons were named. No provision was made in the deed as regards Haribhabini and she took no active part in the suit. Three of the trustees named in the deed, namely, Sarada Prosad Choudhury, Makhan Lal Choudhury and Kuladananda Roy as well as others with whom we are not concerned at this stage contested the suit. During the trial of the suit Katyani, the plaintiff, withdrew her case as to the validity of the deed. She pressed her case so far as the construction of the deed was concerned and the deed was construed. One of the clauses of the deed which dealt with the house which forms the subject-matter of the present suit was construed and it was held that Annada Prasad Ghose had made an absolute gift of it with the exception of its western room to Makhan Lal Chowdhury one of the trustees named in the deed. Similarly, all the other clauses of the deed were also construed. Subsequently Kulada Prasad and Sarada Prasad Choudhury, two of the aforesaid trustees, took out Letters of Administration in respect of the properties covered by the deed and administered the properties. The present suit has been instituted by Kulada Prasad Roy as shebait of Sri Sri Sridhar Jieu and as a trustee in respect of the trust properties left as aforesaid by Annada Prasad Ghose for ejecting the defendant-appellant, who is the son of Makhan Lal Choudhury, on a declaration that the house in question is the debutter property of the said deity. The suit has had a long and chequered career. The decision, which is now under appeal, has been in plaintiff's favour.

The questions which arise for our consideration, upon the arguments addressed to us, are four in number: 1st, whether the decision in Suit No. 438 of 1901 operates as res judicata; 2nd, what is the true construction of para. 21 of the deed; 3rd, whether the suit is barred by limitation; 4th, whether the defendant has acquired a title by adverse possession.

The contention of the appellant on the question of res judicata is two-fold: It is urged in the first place that the previous decision operates as res judicata as all the requirements for the application of that doctrine as between co-defendants are present in the case, and nextly, it is said that even if strictly speaking that doctrine cannot be applied, then the Court having construed the deed in the presence of all the parties interested, its conclusions are binding on them all on general principles. To this contention a preliminary objection is put forward on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent. The objection is to the effect that this contention is not entertainable at this stage.

It would be convenient, first of all, to dispose of the preliminary objection The suit was dismissed in the first instance by the Trial Court on the ground of res judicata. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision and remanded the suit for determination of the other issues involved. Those issues were then decided by the Trial Court and the records together with the decision on those issues were sent back to the District Judge and then the appeal was finally decided by him. It is said that the appellant should have appealed against the order of remand which was founded upon a decision adverse to him on the question of res judicata, and that, not having done so, he is now precluded from challenging that decision in this appeal by reason of the provisions of s. 105, sub-s. (1) of the C. P. C. This preliminary objection must, however, be overruled as the order of remand on the face of it purports to have been one under O. XLI, r. 25 and it was expressly declared by the learned Judge to have been made by him under that rule upon a petition filed by the appellant with the object of finding out its true nature and effect.

In order to deal with the contention of res judicata upon the principle as embodied in s. 11 of the C. P. C., and when it is to be applied to parties who were in the position of defendants in the earlier suit, tests have from time to time been laid down by learned Judges, but these tests own their origin to a well-known rule which was expressed by Wigram, V. C., in Cottingham v. Shrewsbury (Earl) (1) in these words: "If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants the Court will try and decide that case, and the co-defendants will be bound. But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains." The same rule was suggested by Jessel, M. R. in Kevan v. Crawford (2) when he said: "What right has a Court of Justice to investigate a claim by title paramount by one co-defendant against another? I am not aware of any. The answer is, if you wish to assert these claims you must assert them in a proper action..............Where a plaintiff obtains relief against one or more defendants, and there are subordinate questions either necessary to be gone into to work out that relief completely for the benefit of the plaintiff or necessary to adjust the rights of the defendants consequent on the relief so obtained by the plaintiff, the Court may, by enquiries in Chambers, work out the equities between the co-defendants. But there is no case produced in which any such enquiries were directed where the plaintiff's case wholly failed." It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the observations, which I have quoted above, go to indicate that it is only when some relief is granted to the plaintiff that the adjudication of a conflict as between co-defendants will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit as between them. It will be seen, however, that the cases of Cottingham v. Shrewsbury (Earl) (1) and Kevan v. Crawford (2) were both instances where, when after the determination of questions which were necessary to be determined in order to give relief to the plaintiff and when the plaintiff was out of the way, as it were, it was sought to have certain matters gone into and adjudicated upon as between the defendants, it being alleged that the adjudication might be binding between the latter for the future as having finally adjusted their rights. This peculiar feature of the cases, therefore, necessitated those observations. They were not cases in which any question arose as to whether any previous decision operated as res judicata in respect to the cases themselves. To accept the respondent's contention in this respect would be to hold that a decision will be res judicata only if the suit ends in a particular way. Such a position is hardly tenable. On the other hand there are many reported decisions in which notwithstanding the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, the decision has been held to operate as res judicata as between co-defendants: e. g., Venkayya v. Narasamma (3), Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. Zamorin of Calicut (4) and Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi (5). The true rule was enunciated by West, J., in his judgment in the case of Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (6) in these words : "There must be a conflict of interest amongst the defendants, and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. Without necessity the judgment will not be res judicata amongst the defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have collectively been defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group." This statement of the rule has been accepted as settled law in the generality of cases. Madhavi v. Kelu (7), Ahmad Ali v. Najabat Khan (8), Chajju v. Umrao Singh (9), Balambhat v. Narayanbhat (10), Muhammad Kuni Rowthan v. Visvanathaiyar (11) and Magni Ram v. Mehdi Husain Khan (12). The rule has been stated in some other decisions as requiring the fulfilment of three essential conditions : (1) that there should be a conflict of interest between co-defendants, (2) that it should be necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give to the plaintiff the relief appropriate to his suit, and (3) that the judgment should contain a decision on the question as between co-defendants. Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (13) and Jadav Chandra Sarkar v. Kailash Chandra Singh (14). Courts are reluctant to apply the doctrine as between co-defendants unless clear indications appear of the presence of all the requisite conditions, and in the generality of cases where it has been applied, it has been applied with great caution [observations of the learned Judges in the case of Jadav Chandra Sarkar v. Kailash Chandra Singh (14)]. So chary are the Courts of applying this doctrine in the case of co-defendants that in some cases the Courts have enunciated the rule as limited to cases of active contest, e. g., Ramanuja Ayyangar v. Narayana Ayyangar (15), Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. Zamorin of Calicut (4), Ramaswamy Reddi v. Abhoy Chetty (16), Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi (5), Muhayadeen Alli Sahib v. Bacha Sahib (17), Nand Lal Pal v. Naresh Chandra Deb (18), and Mohendra Nath Biswas v. Shamsunnessa Khatun (19).

Bearing these principles in mind, when we come to examine the facts of the present case we find that Makhan and Kuloda were arrayed as defendants in the suit of 1901. The validity of the deed was challenged by Katyani, and she also prayed for a construction of the deed on the ground that "if the deed was held to be operative there was a chance of her rights being injured and, therefore, it was necessary to determine what rights she has in her father's estate under the deed, and if the said deed be not construed, her rights and that of her heirs will not be settled." Makhan, Kulada and Sarada jointly filed a written statement in that suit presumably for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's claim. The whole of the written statement deals with the validity of the deed and challenges Katyani's right to have it construed. It does not appear that they set up any claim, far less any conflicting claims, to the house which is now in suit. The deed was construed as it had to be for the purpose of finding out what the rights of Katyani and her heirs were. Under cl. 21, she was found to have no rights and it was held on a construction of the said clause that the house had been made an absolute gift of to Makhan and his heirs. In the decree that was drawn up it was only declared that the deed was construed. To apply the doctrine of res judicata to the case a contest will have to be presumed from the mere fact that Kulada might and ought to have contested the title of Makhan, that is to say, the doctrine of constructive res judicata founded upon Explanation IV to s. 11 of the Code will have to be invoked. The tendency of Courts is to apply this doctrine within very narrow limits even as between plaintiffs and defendants; and there is scarcely any room for its application as between co-defendants. At any rate, there is no authority that this doctrine may be applied as between them in a case where they made a joint defence to the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff got some relief, which was said to be a "nominal" one in the judgment, but none under cl. 21 of the deed. The view of the Court as to the meaning of the clause was embodied in the judgment—but the course of the proceedings do not suggest that any conflict inter se as between Kulada and Makhan was decided, such as might give Kulada a right of appeal. One defendant may under certain circumstances prefer an appeal against another, although the plaintiff's suit has been wholly dismissed in respect of adverse findings in the judgment; but such an appeal is maintainable only when the adjudication has been upon a real conflict as between the co-defendants. In the present case no such conflict is discernible. There was a joint defence and the construction of the deed seems to have been made in order to find out the rights of the plaintiff and her heirs. It is difficult to see how Kulada could have appealed against the decree as against Makhan; and, if he could not then on the principle laid down in the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Brojo Behari Mitter v. Kedar Nath Majumdar (20), the previous decision cannot be held to operate as res judicata. This principle has been followed in a recent decision of this Court in the case of Gopal Jew Thakur v. Radha Binode Mondal (21).

It is also contended that on the principles which are applicable to suits for partition or for construction of a Will, the decision must be held to be binding as against all the parties to the suit. Suits for partition have always been regarded as standing on a different footing. A decree for partition made in a suit instituted by a member of a joint Hindu family is res judicata as between all co-sharers who are parties to the suit. Nalini Kanta Lahiri v. Sarnamoyi Debya (22). A decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property of which partition is sought, and when properly drawn up, it is in favour of each share-holder or set of share-holders having a distinct share; Pursotam Rao Tantia v. Radha Bai (23), Sheikh Khoorshed Hossein v. Numbee Fatima (24), Dost Muhammad Khan v. Said Begam (25), Assan v. Pathuma 26) and Ashidbai v. Abdulla Haji Mahomad (27). In the last mentioned case, it will be observed, it was laid down that where a plaintiff brings a suit for partition and fails, it is not open to any of the defendants to claim that the partition suit should go on in order that the share of one or more of the defendants may be determined. The difference is probably attributable to the fact that a conflict between the plaintiff and each defendant or set of defendants involves necessarily, in most cases, a conflict between the defendants or sets of defendants inter se. Where in a prior suit for partition certain parties were arrayed as co-defendants and the decision in that suit did not decide any question of partition amongst them inter se that decision does not operate as res judicata. Muhammad Ahmad v. Zahur Ahmed (28).

Judgments, orders or decrees which come within s. 41 of the Evidence Act partake of a conclusive character for certain limited purposes on the footing of their being judgments in rem. Cases of construction of deeds which all the parties to a litigation submit before the Court in order to ascertain or adjust their respective rights fall within the principle that where the parties to a litigation submit a question for the decision of the Court and the Court gives a decision on being so invited that decision binds all the parties for the future.

Lastly, it is contended that even if the rule of res judicata as embodied in s. 11 of the Code does not apply the decision is conclusive on the general principles which relate to the conclusive character of judgments inter partes. Reliance has been placed as regards this branch of the contention upon certain cases which have now to be considered. The case of George Henry Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (29) is one of these cases. In this case it was pointd out by the Judicial Committee that the question of res judicata is not completely governed by s. 11 of the C. P. C., that the said section prevents the re-trial in a subsequent suit of an issue which was directly and substantially in issue in a previous suit and does not deal with cases where the same issues arise in the same suit but at a later stage of it. Their Lordships quoted with approval the pronouncement of the Board made in the case of Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari (30) as to the applicability of the generel principles which prevent a case being twice litigated. The next case relied upon is that of Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (31). In that case it was held that a decision of a competent Court even in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, will operate as res judicata and the same question cannot be re-opened in subsequent litigation as between the parties, it having been erroneously supposed in the Courts in India on a misapprehension as to the effect of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rangoon Botatoung Company v. Collector of Rangoon (32) that the judgment, since it arose out of proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, could not operate as res judicata. The case of Badar Bee v. Habib Merican Noordin (33) cited in the judgment of the last mentioned case is also referred to. From the judgment of their Lordships in that case it is clear that there was a previous decision inter partes in which it had been held that the defendants were estopped from questioning a decree which made certain declaration but they did not appeal from that decision as the interest then at stake was of trifling value and afterwards attempted to question its correctness when the interest at stake was much larger. Their Lordships observed: "It is not competent for the Court in the case of the same question arising between the same parties to review a previous decision not open to appeal. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor can the residuary legatees be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were not admissible there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute."

These cases do not in any way qualify the provisions of s. 11 of the C. P. C., so far as regards cases which come within the scope of that section, or affect the question of res judicata, when a previous decision of a suit is alleged to operate as a bar in a subsequent one as between persons who were co-defendants in the previous suit. As observed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (34) the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction.

For the foregoing reasons I agree with the learned District Judge in holding that the decision in the suit of 1901 does not operate as a bar on the question of construction of cl. 21 of the deed upon which the title of the appellant rests.

I now proceed to consider the second question, namely, the construction of the clause. I have very carefully read the deed several times, especially as I have been unable to agree with the view taken of it by several Bengali Judicial Officers whose interpretation of the deed, which is in Bengali, is naturally entitled to every respect. The governing intention of the author of the deed is to create an endowment in favour of the deity Sri Sri Iswar Sridhar Jieu and the feeding of the guests connected therewith, the house is item No. 1 of Schedule Uma which along with the properties in the other schedules, namely, ka to gha are dedicated in cl. 1 for the worship of the said deity and the feeding of the guests connected therewith. Clause 21 opens with a clear and unambiguous statement making the said house together with the surrounding lands and trees, etc., as debutter property of the deity. To construe the remainder of the clause it will have to be seen whether there is anything therein which is necessarily repugnant to the intention so unequivocally expressed in the opening words. The wording of the whole deed is somewhat clumsy but the meaning of the clause does not appear to be ambiguous. The clause has been put into English by the learned Subordinate Judge and I adopt his translation with some slight variation. It would run thus:—

"My Burdwan lodging house (consisting of) a dalan (pucca building) with lands on all sides and trees, etc., is given to debutter. But so long as Sreeman Makhan Lal remains in Burdwan, after educating his son (and) on making him a trustee in his place will enjoy and remain in possession (of the same) oirup uttaradhikarirupey and he will remain on paying taxes and making necessary repairs. But the western room in which I put up remains mine. When the trees dry up Makhan Lal will be entitled to use them as fuel. There is a talk of purchasing the lands to the west and north of the dalan (pucca building) on payment of their price. In future Sriman Saroda, Rajendra or Jegesh will be entitled to build houses. But if any (of them) quarrels with each other, the trustees will disappoint them all. (As to) the house and garden given to Mukshoda by me, no one will have any concern therewith. He will enjoy and remain in possession thereof, putrapoutradhikramey (from generation to generation)." The learned Subordinate Judge has translated the words "oirup uttaradhikarirupey" as "in the same way as an heir" and in this, in my opinion, he was in error. In my opinion the words mean "as successor in the same way," that is to say, as trustee appointed in the place of Makhan Lal and possessing the same rights and privileges as Makhan Lal. It is noteworthy also that these properties find no place in any of the eight schedules at the end of the deed, namely, schedules 1 to 8 wherein bequests in favour of certain persons are specified. Other grounds have been given by learned District Judge in support of the view he has taken and I agree generally with his reasoning. In my opinion, beyond the right to enjoy the properties in the manner indicated and subject to the conditions prescribed, no other right, far less any absolute interest, was created in favour of Makhan.

The question of limitation has next to be considered. On this question the point to be considered is whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to the case. For this section to apply it will have to be held that the property became vested in Makhan in trust for a specific purpose, that is to say, two conditions must combine; there must be a trustee with an express trust and an estate or interest vested in the trustee; in other words, the trust must have been created for some specific purpose and the property must have become vested in the trustee with the object of carrying that purpose into effect. In this connection, the true effect of the deed has to be construed.

(34) 29 C. 707; 6 C. W. N. 825; 29 I. A. 196; 4 Bom. L. R. 793; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 323 (P. C.).

The deed expressly dedicates the properties, including the house which is mentioned in schedule uma for the worship of Sri Sri Iswar Jieu and the feeding of the guests connected therewith. In the opening lines of para. 21, the house is expressly dedicated to the said deity. In para. 2 the trustees are appointed for the purpose of "protecting, managing and so forth" the properties so dedicated. In para. 1 Annada Prosad Ghose declares thus.—"To all those properties I shall have in future no right other than that of mere superintendence. All the aforesaid properties shall come under the management of the trustees named below from the moment I shall depart from this place for good." The different paragraphs of the deed lay down rules for the guidance of the trustees. In para. 15 it is repeated that the properties are dedicated for the worship of the deity and the feeding of guests. In several places in the deed the estate is called the debutter estate. The effect of the deed clearly, in my opinion, is to vest the properties in the deity and not in the trustees for a specific purpose. The mere use of the word "trustee" is of no consequence if what I have said is the real import of the deed The distinction between the two classes of cases has been pointed out in the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (35) where their Lordships after quoting the words of s. 10 of the Limitation Act observe thus: "The language of s. 10 gives the clue to the meaning and application of Art. 134. It clearly shows that the article refers to cases of specific trust, and relates to property 'conveyed in trust'. Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Muhammadan system is any property 'conveyed' to a shebait or a mutwalli, in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Muhammadan Law, the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the waqif, and vest in God Almighty. The curator, whether called mutwalli or sajjadanishin, or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a 'trustee' as understood in the English system." After this pronouncement it is difficult to maintain that s. 10 has any application to the case of an endowment in which there is a dedication in favour of the deity, as I hold there has been in the present case. To my mind it is clear that the properties vested in the deity and the management, control and possession remained in the so-called "trustee." Certain passages from some of the later decisions of the Judicial Committee were cited before us on behalf of the respondent, namely, from the decision in the case of Srinivasa Chariar v. Evalappa Mudaliar (36), Subbaiya Pandaram v. Mahamad Mustapha Maracayar (37), Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (38) as apparently qualifying to some extent the pronouncement of the law as made in Vidyavaruthi's case (35). This matter, however, need not be discussed, for so far as regards the cardinal principle to which I have referred, the law must be taken to have been finally settled. For the contention that s. 10 applies to the case reliance was placed on behalf of the respondent upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkatavarada Iyengar (39) but that was a case of an executor and trustee appointed under a Will. In the present case as I have already said the mere use of the word 'trustee,' signifies nothing. The Article which would apply in a case of this nature is either Art. 142 or Art. 144. For this proposition reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Abdur Rahim v. Narayan Das Aurora (40).

So long as Annoda was alive there is no question that the deity was in possession through him. On the death of Annoda, Makhan came to be in possession, but in view of his knowledge of the deed, it must be taken that he came into possession in the fiduciary character conferred on him by the deed, and the possession of the deity must be presumed to have continued unless it is proved that Makhan set up a title hostile to the deity. The onus is on Makhan to show that he did not come in in that character or if he did, that his possession subsequently became adverse to the debutter either by disclaimer or by open and clear assertion of a hostile title. It is, therefore, immaterial whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 applies, and the real question is whether Makhan's possession at any time became adverse and if so has this possession continued for a sufficient length of time to extinguish the plaintiff's title and create a title in Makhan and the appellant.

This brings us to a consideration of the last question which arises in this appeal, namely, whether the appellant and his father Makhan has been in adverse possession for a period of twelve years. On the facts found, Makhan contested the suit of Katyani, but did not do any other act as trustee under the deed. The learned District Judge remarks in his judgment that in the written statement Makhan claimed the house as his own, but in this he has been in error. Nor, on the other hand, was the learned District Judge, in my opinion, right in treating the filing of the written statement in Katyani's suit as acceptance of the trusteeship. No doubt an executor trustee by proving the Will is deemed to have accepted the trusts of the Will; Mucklow v. Fuller (41). But the filing of a written statement, such as it was in the present case, asserting the validity of the deed and opposing its construction when its validity was challenged by Katyani, in my judgment, does not go so far. At any rate it was not inconsistent with Makhan having accepted the position of a "trustee" not in respect of all the properties included in the deed but only in respect of such of them which were found by the Court at that time to have been dedicated to the deity. On the question of adverse possession the learned Subordinate Judge held that Makhan through his Pleaders in the suit of 1901, must have set up a hostile title to the property, and that as the plaintiff was one of the Pleaders such assertion must have been to the knowledge of the plaintiff.

Though there is no direct evidence of this assertion of a hostile title, yet all the circumstances point to such an assertion having been made on behalf of Makhan by his Pleader and that to the knowledge of the plaintiff who was also one of the Pleaders for Makhan in that suit. The decision of that suit as also of several suits which subsequently came on, all affirmed the view that Makhan was the absolute owner. It is not unreasonable to suppose,—in fact any assumption to the contrary would be most unreasonable,—that Makhan continued to possess the property with the knowledge of the plaintiff on the assertion of the title which was found in his favour in several successive suits. No particular form of expression of an intention is necessary to constitute adverse possession; it is always a question of animus which has to be gathered from all the circumstances. The character of the possession of Makhan since the time of those suits, till the time when the appellant has been in possession has remained the same, and the one conclusion that follows is what has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, that there has been adverse possession for over twelve years, and the plaintiff's title has been extinguished.

The appeal, therefore, must be allowed, the decree of the learned District Judge reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court.

Suhrawardy, J.—In Katyani's suit she invited the Court to construe the deed of endowment for the purpose of finding if any term of it was invalid so that the property not validly dedicated would descend on her as the heir of the settlor. She did not ask the Court to construe the terms of the deed in order to determine the real nature and effect of the settlement. The construction in Katyani's suit upon cl 21 of the deed, therefore, is not, in my opinion, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 8—Abatement—Legal representatives brought on record subject to just exceptions—Nature of order.

Where a Judge of the Lahore High Court passes an order subject to just exceptions setting aside abatement and bringing legal representatives of a deceased party on the record, the order in accordance with the usual practice of the Court must be considered as conditional and not an absolute one.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 31st January 1921.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, Bakhshi Sohan Lal, R. B., and Bakhshi Mehr Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— A preliminary objection has been raised in this appeal on the ground that the appeal has abated. It seems that the sole respondent Malik Gur Shahi died on the 15th of July 1925 and no application was made to bring the legal representatives on to the record until the 18th of November 1925. On the application made on that date a Judge of this Court passed an order subject to all just exceptions setting aside the abatement and bringing the legal representatives on to the record. The respondents have now put in an affidavit which shows that on the 8th of October 1925 the appellants either came to know of the date of the death of Malik Gur Sahai and who his legal representatives were or could with ordinary care have come to know both of the factum of death and who his legal representatives were. The appellants admit that on the 8th of October 1925 they came to know of the death, but in their affidavit they alleged that they had spent the time between the 8th October and 18th November 1925 in enquiring about the date of the death of Malik Gur Shahi and the names of his legal representatives. It appears that on the 8th October 1925 a suit which had been brought by Malik Gur Shahi against the present appellants in the Bahawalpur State on the basis of the decree now appealed against had been dismissed in default and his legal representatives had applied for restoration on the ground that Malik Gur Shahi had died and hence was absent unavoidably. It is thus clear that by inspecting the record in the Bahawalpur State the appellants could have come to know on the 8th of October or thereabout both the date of the death of Gur Shahi which is mentioned in that application and who were his legal representatives whose names are given in that application. The appellants have urged that the order bringing the legal representatives on to the record having been passed it must be taken that the abatement was set aside ex parte and, therefore, there can now be no hearing of this point. It is sufficient in reply to this contention to say that the order passed on the application of the 18th November 1925 was an order passed in accordance with the usual practice of this Court subject to all just exceptions and was conditional not an absolute order.

Secondly, the appellants contend that in the circumstances of the case the delay should be excused. But we are unable to see how the appellants can justify their long delay between the 8th October and 18th November 1925. The appellants seem to have awaited the appearance of one Kishen Chand in a suit in order to ascertain the names and addresses of the legal representatives of Malik Gur Shahi. There is nothing to show that this was the only way in which they could have obtained the requisite information. We hold, therefore, that the appeal has abated and no sufficient ground has been shown for setting aside the abatement, and it is dismissed with costs accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Pleadings, amendment of, in second appeal—Co-owners—Suit for rent by one.

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, one of the joint owners cannot singly bring a suit for his share of rent. He may sue for the enforcement of the entire claim by making other co-owners as party defendants.

The High Court in second appeal will not allow an amendment of plaint where the objection as to incompetency of one of the joint owners to bring a suit for his share of rent was raised in both the Courts below and no amendment was applied for.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, 24-Perganahs, dated the 3rd July 1923, modifying those of the Munsif, Third Court, Alipore, dated the 30th June 1921.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Mukerjee (with him Babus Indu Bhusan Mukerjee and Biraj Mohan Mazumdar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—These two appeals arise out of two different suits for rent brought by the plaintiff against a numberof defendants. Defendant No. 12 is the appellant before us; and the only point that requires consideration is whether the plaintiff's suits are maintainable as framed. The plaintiff claims 1/6th share of the rent alleging that that is due to him on account of the holdings.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the co-sharers who own 2/3rd share in the estate were collecting their share of the rent separately for a considerable time, and the plaintiff and his brother were collecting their 1/3rd share jointly. But the plaintiff and his brother started collecting their shares separately from the beginning of 1321 B. S. The claim is for the rent of the years 1319 to 1322 B. S. Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiff's suit for the rent of his 6th share.

The principal ground urged on behalf of the appellant is that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain his suit for his 1/6th share of the rent. It is urged that the fact that the plaintiff and his brother Gopi Kishore were collecting their 1/3rd share jointly might raise an inference that the defendants had agreed to pay the rent for the 1/3rd share belonging to the two brothers jointly and the rent for the other 2/3rd share to the other co-sharer, but there is nothing to show that the defendants ever consented to pay the plaintiff the rent for his 1/6th share separately. The question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff and his brother being joint proprietors with regard to the 1/3rd share of the rent payable to them the plaintiff is entitled to enforce his claim to the 1/6th share of the rent as against the defendants without their consent. Obviously he is not so entitled. The plaintiff alone may sue for the enforcement of the entire contract between him and his brother by making his brother a party defendant. But he is not entitled to enforce a part of the contract between himself and his brother on the one hand and the tenants on the other.

It is argued on behalf of the respondents that the defendants are not in any way prejudiced by this procedure and it is supported by the case of Raj Narayan Mitra v. Ekadasi Bag (1) which has been cited by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is difficult to say that the defendants would not be prejudiced by such a claim of the plaintiff, because the defendants would be liable to be harassed by two suits where one could only have been brought. Moreover if the defendants had succeeded in establishing in the present suit their other plea that they were not liable to pay any rent on account of the jama being non-exist and obtained a decree in their favour the brother of the plaintiff would not be bound by such a decree. The case of Raj Narayan Mitra v. Ekadasi Bag (1) was a different one in which the parties prayed for apportionment of rent by a decree of the Court in the presence of all the parties.

The result, therefore, is that it must be held that the suit as framed by the plaintiff in which he does not show under what circumstances he is entitled to enforce a portion of the claim as maintainable must be dismissed.

A belated prayer was made that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint. But we are not inclined to grant that application in second appeal having regard to the fact that this objection had been taken by the defendants in the Trial Court as well as in the Court of Appeal below and no application for amendment of the plaint was made at all except at the close of the arguments here.

Another point was urged on behalf of the appellant that by a decree of this Court passed since the decision of the appeal in this case in the lower Appellate Court it has been declared that defendant No. 12 is not liable to pay any rent for the jama. We are unable to decide the question in the present appeal as the proper materials have not been placed before us with regard to the identity of the lands concerned in the declaratory decree.

On these grounds the appeals must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 9 (2), 25 (2)—Formal statement of claim, putting in of—Uncertified copy of sale-deed, sending of—District Court, amount to be awarded by.

Section 9 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act requires all persons whose land is taken under the Act and who have any occasion to advance any specific claims to the land which require to be considered, to state the nature of their respective interests in the land and the amount and particulars of their claims to compensation for such interests. Merely placing before the Collector an uncertified copy of the sale-deed of the land of which the land acquired formed a part does not satisfy the requirements of the section.

A District Court, when acting under s. 25 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act, cannot award a sum exceeding the amount awarded by the Collector.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th May 1922.

Lala Hargopal, for the Appellant.
The Government Advocate and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a reference under the Land Acquisition Act. Three kanals, 12 marlas out of a large area that had been acquired by Government belonged to the Orient Bank. An award was made on the 26th April 1920 under which the Orient Bank which was in liquidation was to receive Rs. 197-10 as compensation for the said 3 kanals 12 marlas. On the 14th June 1920, an application was made on behalf of the Orient Bank in liquidation by the joint liquidator to the Collector in which objection was taken to the amount awarded. It was admitted in this application that the Bank had not thought it necessary to put in any formal statement as required by s. 9 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. In this application no specific amount of compensation was claimed, but it was asked that a reference should be made to the District Court relating to the value of the property acquired. This reference was made in due course and in it, it was stated that notice under s. 9 of Act I of 1894 had been served on the Orient Bank on the 14th August 1919. No appearance was made on behalf of the Bank before the Collector but an uncertified copy of a sale-deed in favour of the Orient Bank was sent to the Collector which was returned. It will be seen that up to the date of the reference no specific amount had been claimed as compensation for the land acquired. On the 8th November 1921 another application was filed on behalf of the Orient Bank by the joint liquidator to which was attached the original sale-deed. It was pointed out that the joint liquidator had on the 16th November 1920 made a statement in Court claiming Rs. 300 per kanal for the land acquired. On this application the learned District Judge recorded an order that the whole case had been finished and judgment was about to be delivered. For that reason nothing could be done on this application. The learned District Judge's award confirmed the Collector's award, that is to say, the award of Rs. 197-10 was maintained. Against this order the Orient Bank in liquidation has preferred this appeal through Mr. Hargopal.

On behalf of the respondent the learned Government Advocate has raised an objection founded on s. 9 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act which requires all persons whose land is taken under this Act and who have any occasion to advance any specific claims to the land which require to be considered, to state the nature of their respective interests in the land and the amount and particulars of their claims to compensation for such interests. Admittedly no such claim was ever made to the Collector, that is to say, that no specific amount was ever stated by the Orient Bank in liquidation as being what they wanted for their land. Mr. Hargopal has urged that the fact that on behalf of the Orient Bank an uncertified copy of a sale-deed was placed before the Collector was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section. That sale deed purports to convey to the Orient Bank an area of 4 kanals and some marlas of land for Rs. 1, 200. The land acquired is 3 kanals 12 marlas out of the land referred to in the sale-deed. The mere fact that the Collector was notified that this land had formed a portion of a plot of land purchased by the Orient Bank Limited cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as the statement of the amount claimed by the Bank as compensation for the land acquired. It was not until the 16th November 1920 that Mr. Mukerji, the joint liquidator, stated that the amount he claimed was at the rate of Rs. 300 per kanal. The learned District Judge has not acted under the third subclause of s. 25, and, therefore, under the second clause of that section he could not award a sum exceeding the amount awarded by the Collector. This view is supported by Secretary of State for India v. Gobind Lal Bysak (1) and the Secretary of State for India v. Bishun Dutt (2). In these circumstances the appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Mears, C. J.—This is the appeal of Rai Shiva Prasad against the judgment of a learned Single Judge of this Court, whereby in effect he dismissed the plaintiff's claim for ejectment against a tenant and incidentally, and what is of more practical importance, declared certain acts of the Court of Wards to be ultra vires.

On the 17th of September 1909 Shiva Prasad and Shambhu Prasad, brothers, of full age, on their own application had their estate put under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. On that date the Act of 1899 was in existence. By 1919 presumably the estate had been cleared of its embarrassments, and the time was arriving when the Court of Wards wished to be free of this superintendence, and on the 18th of December 1919 there was an agreement executed by the Court of Wards and by a lady named Gopi Kunwar, who was the mother of the plaintiff and defendant. The Court of Wards were of opinion that there should be a partition of the estate before it passed out of their control, and that gave rise to a question as to the position of the lady Musammat Gopi Kunwar. It transpired that she was willing on the partition to have maintenance instead of any share in the estate of her late husband By the agreement of the 18th of December 1919 the lady expressed herself satisfied with the appointment of Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji as arbitrator, and shortly before that date Mr. Wallach and Dr. Sen had been appointed the representatives of Shiva Prasad under the provisions of s. 58 of the Court of Wards Act of the United Provinces (IV of 1912). For the purposes of this case we assume that with regard to the appointment of Mr. L. M. Banerji there was no discussion, no agreement between the parties' representatives, Mr. Wallach and Dr. Sen. The procedure adopted by the Court of Wards in the appointment of Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji was based upon the view taken by the Court of Wards that just as they had an undoubted right to appoint a representative on behalf of each such ward without the ward being in a position to raise any questien as to the representative, so equally they had a right to appoint any person as arbitrator and in the words of s. 58 to "require the said representatives to submit the question or dispute to the arbitration of such person." That is the position for which the plaintiff contends today, asserting that what the Board did shortly prior to and on the 18th of December 1919, was done entirely within the powers of the Court of Wards, and was in every way regular and proper. The question of the propriety of the acts of the Court of Wards came up in rather a curious manner. There is no evidence to suggest that Shambhu Prasad or his representative Dr. Sen, ever raised any question that the appointment of Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji should in the first instance have emanated from Mr. Wallach and Dr. Sen. The arbitration was held, the matter was debated before Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji and he on the 31st of January 1920 gave an award. We are not concerned with the details of that award other than the question of four shops in Benares. These together with other immoveable property were allotted to the plaintiff as his share, and the plaintiff served notices upon four tenants that the shops had become his by virtue of the award, and that henceforth rent was to be paid to him. Rent in fact was paid in respect of these four shops down to the 31st of January 1921, and then it appeared that Shambhu Prasad instigated the tenants to refuse to pay the rent to Sheo Prasad and on a suit for ejectment being brought the tenants set up the story that they had in fact paid the rent to the co-owner Shambhu Prasad. In that suit Shambhu Prasad asked to be impleaded. For some reason not very clear to us the Munsif did allow his application. When he appeared in this action he raised the question as to the validity of the acts of the Court of Wards, and he contended that he was not bound by the award, that the appointment of Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji was invalid, and he sought in that way to abtain from the Court a decision that although by the award the shops had been declared to be the sole property of Shiva Prasad, nevertheless by virtue of the invalidity of the acts of the Board the partition was null and void in law, and, therefore, he still remained co-owner with Shiva Prasad of these shops. The case was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who said that he was not going into the question with regard to Shambhu Prasad's complaint against the Court of Wards, and intimated his view that if Shambhu Prasad was dissatisfied with the validity of the award, he should take appropriate steps, or should have taken appropriate steps in the Civil Court. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, and the District Judge having considered s. 58 of the Court of Wards Act, came to the opinion that the award was a valid one. From that decision Shambhu Prasad appealed, and although Mr. Harper had stated that the only question raised in the appeal before him was as to the validity of the award, the discussion in the second appeal before Mr. Justice Lal Gopal Mukerji ranged over a diversity of subjects. We have decided today that we could not allow Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana to argue that the whole arbitration was ineffective inasmuch as no question or dispute had arisen between the two wards. Whether there was a question or a dispute was a matter of fact, appropriate to be decided on evidence given in the Court of first instance, if Shambhu Prasad desired to challenge the propriety of the proceedings on that ground. A reference to the written statement filed by him indicates that indeed there was a dispute between the parties relating to jewellery, and the burden of his complaint in the written statement was not that there was no question of dispute but that the question of jewellery was not a matter referred to the arbitrator. However on the ground that this point was not taken in the Court of first instance and before Mr. Harper we refuse to allow it to be discussed before us.

The first point which was argued by Counsel on behalf of Shambhu Prasad was that when he and his brother by their own free will requested the Court of Wards to take their estate under its superintendence, the Court of Wards at that time was working under the Act of 1899 ; and that in that Act is to be found no provision analogous to s. 58 of the Act of 1912, and that, therefore, the parties who voluntarily requested the Court of Wards to superintend their estate in 1909 cannot be bound or affected by any subsequent legislation. This argument has appealed to Mr. Justice Lal Gopal Mukerji ; but we find ourselves in disagreement with the contention of Shambhu Prasad. We are of opinion that when parties like the present plaintiff and defendants submitted their request to the Court of Wards that their estate should be taken under its superintendence, they must have contemplated that legislation might be passed which might affect their rights, and that the Court of Wards Act of 1899 was no more an immutable eternal Statute than any other Statute. In is an impossible position for Shambhu Prasad to take up, namely, that he is entitled to be bound by only the provisions of a wholly repealed Act, and that neither he nor his estate has any concern with subsequent legislation designed to meet the working of the Court of Wards Act in the interest alike of the Court of Wards and the people whose estates are subject to its jurisdiction. By cl. (1) of s. 2 the Act of 1899 was repealed in toto. Clause (2) saves certain acts which had already been done, and pronounces that those acts which had been done by virtue of the repealed enactment should, as far as possible, be deemed to have been done under this Act, namely, the Act of 1912. We find ourselves unable to appreciate how it can be said that the voluntarily putting up of an estate into the hands of the Court of Wards in the year 1909, amounted to a bargain, or created in Shambhu Prasad any right to insist that during the continuance of the estate in the hands of the Court of Wards no legislation which should be passed should affect him or the estate. We take it that the Local Government had full power to repeal the Court of Wards Act in 1912, as in fact they did and to substitute for it such an enactment as seemed in their opinion to be for the greater benefit of the estates and persons whose estates it held and for the Court of Wards. We, therefore, hold that Shambhu Prasad was bound by s. 58, and that there was on the true construction of that section no obligation on the part of the Court of Wards to await an agreement between the representatives, whom they had appointed, as to an arbitrator who should sit to decide the question or dispute. The contention of Shambhu Prasad was that if he were bound by s. 58 he could not resist the appointment of a representative on his behalf, nor would he have any say as to who that representative should be ; and similarly Shiva Prasad could not resist the appointment of a representative but it was argued on his behalf that as soon as the representatives were appointed, it was their duty to agree between themselves as to a suitable arbitrator and to submit the name of that arbitrator to the approval of the Court of Wards. We think that that was a strange construction of the section, because the section when looked at as a whole is imperative in its terms as between the Court of Wards and the wards. It appoints a representative for a ward, whether the ward likes the representative or not. Having appointed the representatives for as many wards as may have disputes amongst themselves, it requires the representatives to submit the question or dispute to arbitration of such person or persons as it may approve. We think the word of importance in the latter part of the section is "require" and we think that this section contemplated an absolute right in the Board to nominate any representative they chose and a further absolute right to require those representatives to conduct the cases of the wards whom they were representing before such a person as the Board might approve, and that in practice the Board indicated their approval of the person as arbitrator to the representatives, and whether the representatives liked the appointment or not they were required to submit the question or dispute to that approved arbitrator. In other words no choice by this section is given to the ward as to the representative who should appear for him nor is any choice given to the representative as to the arbitrator. All that is required is that the arbitrator shall be approved by the Court of Wards and thereupon the representatives are required to conduct the case before him. In that view of the section the decision of Mr. Harper was in every way right.

In these circumstances we are of opinion that we must allow the appeal of Shiva Prasad and set aside the decision of the learned Single Judge of this Court and restore the decision of the District Judge. We, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and fees of both hearings in this Court, which in the special circumstances we certify at Rs. 50 in each of the four cases, making one fee of Rs. 200.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 54—Appeal, proper stage for—Apportionment of claims—Duty of District Judge.

Section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act contemplates only an appeal from a final award or part of a final award. Where a question as to apportionment has been referred to the District Judge, unless he has decided that question there is no final award which can be appealed against.

A District Judge is bound to decide the question of apportionment when it is referred to him and the existence of a civil suit between the parties does not affect his jurisdiction to decide that question.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th May 1922.

Lala Gopal Chand and Mr. Bishen Nath, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—By Notification No. 18061 H, dated the 19th October 1918, a certain area of land was acquired by Government for the extension of Lahore Cantonment East Station Yard. A portion of the land so acquired consisted of a plot 0 90 acre-8 kanals 14 marlas in area situated in Mauza Ganj on which stood a saltpetre factory. Three persons claimed to be interested in this land and factory, namely, Lala Kanshi Parshad, his brother Lala Deo karan Das and one Harnam Singh, who demanded a sum of Rs. 32,000 as compensation for the factory. There was also a dispute between the said three persons as to the ownership of the factory. Lala Kanshi Parshad claimed to be the sole owner and as such entitled to the entire amount awarded; his brother claimed to be a co-sharer to the extent of one-half, while Harnam Singh claimed that he was entitled to a 1/3rd share. On the 13th May 1920 the Collector under Act I of 1894 made an award relating to this area by which a total sum of Rs. 4,616 9-3 was fixed as the amount of the compensation. Harnam Singh accepted the award which was, however, objected to by the other two. The Land Acquisition Officer thereupon referred the matter to the District Court. Acting under the provisions of s. 30 of Act I of 1894 he also referred the question as to the apportionment of the amount awarded. All the references were dealt with together by the learned District Judge who affirmed the award so far as it related to the amount of compensation, but declined to adjudicate on the question of the apportionment. The reason given for this is that a civil suit was pending, at the time of the acquisition relating to the ownership of this factory.

Lala Kanshi Parshad and Lala Deokaran Das preferred separate appeals against the amount of compensation awarded by the learned District Judge. Harnam Singh was not made a party to either of these appeals.

At the hearing Mr. M. S. Bhagat for Lala Kanshi Parshad asked to be allowed to make Harnam Singh and Deokaran Das respondents in his appeal (No. 2933 of 1922) and further prayed that the question of apportionment should be gone into.

Mr. Gopal Chand for Lala Deokaran Das stated that his client did not wish to make Haranam Singh a party in his appeal (No. 2327 of 1922).

The learned Government Advocate raised a preliminary objection to the effect that both appeals were incompetent as being premature. It was urged that s. 54 of Act I of 1894 only contemplated an appeal from a final award, or part of a final award, of the Court, and that until the learned District Judge had decided the question as to apportionment there was no final award which could be appealed against. There seems to be no doubt that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the existence of a civil suit, in which the ownership of the factory was in question, affected his jurisdiction to decide the question referred to him. As I read the provisions of Act it was incumbent on him to decide the question. In the present case, however, his refusal of jurisdiction is obviously erroneous for the reason that the civil suit referred to was between Kanshi Parshad and Deokaran Das alone and had no concern with Harnam Singh.

In the circumstances I am of opinion that the learned Government Advocate's objection is well-founded and that both appeals are incompetent [see Ardeshir Mancherji v. Assistant Collector, Poona (1).] I would, therefore, dismiss both appeals with costs, but in order to avoid further trouble and delay I would direct the learned District Judge to dispose of the reference regarding the apportionment of the compensation as speedily as possible.

In view of the above in Kanshi Parshad's appeal I would not allow the additional grounds of appeal or the addition of parties.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

Stuart, C. J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki dismissing their suit to recover certain property on the ground that it had been wrongfully alienated by the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and Lal Bahadur who had adopted plaintiff No. 3. The alienation had been effected by a deed of simple mortgage on the basis of which a decree had been passed and the property in question had been brought to sale in execution of that decree. The mortgage deed was executed on the 19th March 1920 by Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur. It was executed for a consideration of Rs. 24,000 made up in the following manner:—

	Rs.
In satisfaction of the amount due on a deed of mortgage dated 24th August 1911 executed by certain Paran from whom Shankar Dayal and Lala Bahadur had inherited certain property ..	7,000
In satisfaction of the amount due on deed of mortgege dated 4th June 1914 executed by the same Paran	3,000
In satisfaction of the amount due on a deed of mortgage dated 29th November 1915 executed by Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur	2,000
In satisfaction of the amount due on a deed of further charge dated 23rd August 1918 executed by Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur	4,000
In satisfaction of the amount due on three deeds of further charge dated respectively the 18th September 1912, and 16th January 1916 and the 17th August 1917 executed by Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur	4,000
In satisfaction of the amount due on a promissory note dated 24th September 1919 executed by Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur	2,500
Total ...	22,500
Received in cash prior to the date of execution	569
Devoted towards expenses of executing the deed	240
Paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar ...	691
Total ...	1,500

On the 23rd March 1922 the mortgagee obtained a decree against Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur on the basis of his deed for Rs. 26,822 and costs. This decree was put into execution and the date fixed for the sale of the property was the 20th November 1923. On the 17th November 1923 this suit was filed by Kedar Nath aged 16 and Siri Ram aged 10, the sons of Shankar Dayal and Sripat aged 4 who is said to be the adopted son of Lal Bahadur. Sripat's real father was Shankar Dayal. The allegations in the plaint were mainly that Shankar Dayal and Lal Bahadur had no right to alienate the family property as there was no legal necessity. It is to be noted that there was no suggestion made in the plaint that the debts were tainted with immorality.

It is thus seen that this was a case where the property had been put up to sale in execution of a decree obtained against the fathers and that the decree in question was final. The property had not actually been sold but the mortgage had become merged in the decree and no longer subsisted. This being the case we hold that if the sons desired to dispute the judgment-debt the burden of proof was upon them to show that the debt was incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. We accept the view which was taken by Mr. Daniels, Judicial Commissioner in Gauri Shankar v. Jang Bahduar Singh (1). This decision was considered in an Appeal No. 356 of 1925 [Nand Lal v. Umrai (2)] which has been decided to-day by another Bench of which my learned brother was a member. I wish to note that I am in complete concurrence with the decision of that Bench which has bearing upon the decision of this appeal. Holding this view it is necessary for us to see whether the debts or any of them are proved to have been incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose. Although it was not pleaded in the plaint that the debts had been contracted for illegal or immoral purposes the plaintiffs were allowed to take the position in the case that the debts were contracted for illegal and immoral purposes. An issue was framed and considerable evidence was received upon the point. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved this evidence. We think that he rightly disbelieved it. We have read the evidence ourselves and are satisfied that it has been fabricated in order to support the case. The witnesses who gave evidence appear to us to be absolutely untrustworthy. We, therefore, find that none of the debts were contracted for immoral or illegal purposes and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Raza, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—On the 29th of September 1920 one Dulo executed a deed of sale relating to certain land which under this deed was sold to Muhammad Nathu and Dilwar Ali Khan, the consideration being a sum of Rs. 27,300. It was said by the vendees that Rs. 11,889 had already been paid to the vendor, the balance of the money being payable at the time of registration. The vendor, however, alleged that he had only received a sum of Rs. 3,500. On the 27th of January 1921 the vendees applied to the Registrar to have the deed of sale compulsorily registered. This application was sent to the Sub-Registrar, the proper officer, by the Registrar who, on the 31st of January 1921, issued notice to the parties. The vendees were very dilatory and frequently allowed the proceedings to go by default. Finally, on the 5th of April 1921 the Sub-

Registrar apparently acting under s. 25 of the Indian Registration Act, passed an order to the effect that the document would be accepted for registration on payment by the vendees of the penalty provided by that section. Notice of this order was directed to be sent to the vendees who, however, refused to accept service. On the 26th of May 1921 the vendees again applied to the Registrar to have the document compulsorily registered. This application was sent at once to the Sub-Registrar who dismissed it on the 27th of May 1921 as the vendees had failed to appear in support of it. In the order dismissing this application the Sub-Registrar pointed out that the vendees had been constantly absent during these proceedings whereas the vendor had been present and that it was evident that the vendees were merely harassing the vendor. This order of the Sub-Registrar was an order refusing to register within the meaning of s. 72 of the Registration Act and as such was appealable to the Registrar. The vendees on the 24th of June 1921 preferred an appeal to the Registrar. The appeal, however, was dismissed on the 15th of September 1921, the order being announced to the vendees' Counsel on that date. On the 15th of October 1921 the vendees prepared a plaint praying that the said sale-deed should be registered. The plaint, however, does not appear to have been filed in Court till the 18th of October 1921, the 16th and 17th being public holidays. Under s. 77 of the Indian Registration Act a period of thirty days is prescribed for the institution of a suit under that section. As the plaint itself was dated the 15th of October 1921 no objection on the ground of limitation was taken before the Trial Court, the suit being contested on other grounds, one of the grounds being that the requirements of law had not been fulfilled and that, therefore, the Registrar acted rightly in refusing to register the document, the requirement of law in this connection being that the vendees had failed to comply with the direction to pay the penalty. The Trial Court fixed one issue, namely, "Did the plaintiff comply with all provisions of law to have the document registered? This issue was decided against the plaintiff, and I think rightly. Nevertheless the Trial Court granted the plaintiffs-vendees a decree to the effect that the document should be registered on their paying the penalty ordered by the Sub-Registrar. The learned Trial Court based its decree on Hazuri Mal v Kutab-ud-din (1) and Nawab v. Arjan Das (2). A reference to these authorities, however, shows that they have no bearing on the case at all.

Against the decree so passed Dulo has preferred this appeal to this Court, and at the Bar it has been urged that the suit was barred by limitation having been instituted after the period prescribed by s. 77. Mr. Gopal Chand on behalf of respondents-vendees admitted that the suit should have been filed not later than the 15th of October 1921. He urged that this point of limitation had not been raised in the Court below nor in the grounds of appeal to this Court. No doubt that is the case, but the question of limitation can be raised at any time and I think has rightly been raised in this Court. It is obvious from the record that, although the plaint is dated the 15th of October 1921 and the necessary Court-fee labels affixed on the plaint bear that date, nevertheless the actual institution of the suit must be held to be the 18th of October 1921, as that is the date on which it is shown as having been presented and that is date on which the Court-fee labels have been cancelled. It follows, therefore, that the suit having been instituted after the prescribed time should have been dismissed. In this view of the case it is not necessary to discuss the merits in detail and I would only say that the record of the Registration Department shows clearly that the vendees, although apparently desirous of getting the document registered, were equally desirous of postponing the date of registration as long as possible. That is, to my mind, evidenced by the fact that in every case they waited till the last possible moment before they took action; when filing their suit they clearly overreached themselves and I consider that the orders of the Registrar and the Sub-Registrar were justified. I would, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Fforde, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Mesne profits, indivisible, claim for—Death of some of respondents—Legal representatives not brought on record—Abatement in toto.

Where plaintiffs-appellants claim for mesne profits is based on the allegation that the defendants-respondents jointly dispossessed them from the land in collusion with one another, the claim is one that is not divisible and where in appeal the legal representatives of the deceased respondents are not brought on the record the appeal abates in its entirety.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 14th December 1921, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 27th February 1915.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babus Purna Chandra Chandra and Subodh Chandra Dutt), for the Appellants.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukerji (with him Babus Charu Chandra Ganguli and Biraj Mohan Majumdar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued for recovery of possession with mesne profits from 32 defendants. Their case was that they had taken settlement of some 98 bighas odd of land from defendant No. 32 or rather his predecessors in-interest. Outof this area of 98 bighas they were only in possession of some 63 bighas odd and their case was that defendant No. 32 in collusion with the other defendants had dispossessed them from these 35 bighas, The suit was decreed by the first Court. On appeal to the District Court a part of the claim was disallowed. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court and the High Court allowed the appeal in part and the decision of the learned District Judge so far as he dismissed the claim for the lands of schedule (ga) was set aside and the case was remitted to him so that he might re-consider the question of the land of schedule (ga).

The learned District Judge allowed the Appeal No. 28 in part and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was modified to a certain extent which is unnecessary to specify. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

The respondents have raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is incompetent for want of necessary parties. They point out that four persons Abdul Hossain, Gudath Biswas, Abdul Aziz and Gooljan Bibi who were appellants in the lower Court and who were also respondents in the present appeal have died and their heirs have not been brought on the record. This is admitted by the appellants themselves. It is clear that the appeal cannot proceed in their absence. The case of the plaintiffs was that all the defendants jointly dispossessed them from the land in collusion with each other and they sued for mesne profits from them all. The claim of the plaintiffs is not divisible. The appeal is, therefore, in competent for want of necessary parties and must fails.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The same question is involved in these three connected appeals. The plaintiff is an owner in the estate, in which the land is situated, and is also an occupancy tenant in agricultural land in the estate. He, therefore, has two qualifications of which one is superior and the other inferior. The vendee has the superior qualification but lacks the inferior. The contention is that on the strength of the additional inferior qualification the plaintiff has a right to pre-empt. His suits have failed in both the lower Courts and the question has been argued before us by Mr. Tek Chand for the appellant and Mr. Badri Das for the respondent. Both are agreed that there are only three rulings on this or a similar question, i. e., Jai Deo v. Bhagwan Das (1), Naba v. Pathana (2) and Khair Din v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (3). Mr. Tek Chand contends that Jai Das v. Bhagwan Das (1) does not lay down sound law and that it is to be inferred or deduced from Khair Din v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (3) and from the wording of s. 15 (b) and (c) that the additional inferior qualification strengthens the plaintiff's claim. On the other hand it is pointed out that the word used is 'vest' and once the right has vested there is the end of the matter and it cannot re-vest or additionally vest and this is the view taken in Jai Deo v. Bhagwan Das (1) which is a clear and conclusive authority. The section lays down the order in which pre-emptors stand and once the place of a pre-emptor has been determined it cannot be affected by the fact that he does or does not hold any further or additional qualification, which, in the absence of the first, or main qualification could or would be taken into account. Mr. Tek Chand contends that it stands to reason that where we find the qualifications under one head equal we must look to any additional qualification in order to decide between the rival claimants, and he points to the fact that in s. 15 (b) a co-sharer, who is also an agnate is treated as superior even to a nearer agnate who takes the additional qualification and, therefore, he says, we find credit given to a mere numerical superiority of qualifications. To us it appears that the wording of this sub-section points exactly to the contrary conclusion. The Legislature in s. 15 (b) (2) did provide for a compositor double qualification in the case of an agnate, who is also a co-sharer, and the fact that it did not do so in the case of a co-owner, who is also an occupancy tenant, shows, in our opinion, that it was not intended that the combination of these two qualifications should prevail over the simple qualification of a co-owner. It is also true that there is some connection between the co-sharer and the agnate, that is to say, between the two qualifications when combined in the same person whereas there is no connection between the co-ownership and the occupancy tenancy. We hold, that the decision of the learned District Judge is perfectly correct, and that no number of additional inferior qualifications can improve the status of the man claiming in virtue of belonging to a superior class. In both Khair Din v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (3) and Naba v. Pathana (2) the position was the reverse and the two claimants shared the inferior qualification but one of them had a superior qualification and, naturally, in virtue of that superior qualification he ousted the rival claimant.

We dismiss the appeals with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 10—Court-fee decreed to Government in pauper suit—Right to future maintenance, liability of, to be proceeded against—Method of recovery.

The right of the Government to recover the Court-fee decreed as payable to Government from a pauper plaintiff is not unenforceable, merely because plaintiff's property is confined to a right to future maintenance. The proper method of recovering such Court-fee is by the Court appointing a Receiver to collect the maintenance amount and pay to Government (by instalments if necessary in order that plaintiff may have something to live upon) the fee due by the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—We cannot subscribe to the respondent's contention that Government cannot under a decree recover the Court-fee decreed as payable to Government from a pauper plaintiff, whenever plaintiff's property is confined to a right to future maintenance. That contention is negatived by the Privy Council ruling in Rajindra Narain Singh v. Sunder Bibi (1) which also indicates the proper method of recovering such Court-fee. That method is by the Court appointing a Receiver to collect the maintenance amount and pay to Government (by instalments if necessary in order that plaintiff may have something to live upon) the fee due by plaintiff. The appellant's execution petition as it stands does not ask for relief in that form, and it should be amended. We grant leave to amend it accordingly. The amended petition is forwarded to the lower Court for disposal in the light of the Privy Council decision quoted above. Each party will bear his own costs in this appeal.

Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Sylhet, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 5th March 1925, in S. C. C. Suit No. 89 of 1923, (In T. Suit No. 891 of 1919 of the Sadar Munsif, First Court, Sylhet).

Babu Prya Nath Dutt and Satyendra Kishore Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule has been issued at the instance of the defendant No. 3 in a suit tried by a Court of Small Causes. The plaintiff claimed wasilat from certain defendants of whom the defendant No. 3 was one. Previous to the institution of this suit the plaintiff had instituted a suit to establish his title to an undivided 5-annas share in a certain land and also for recovery of possession and mesne profits. The claim for mesne profits was subsequently withdrawn. That suit ultimately ended in a decree in favour of the plaintiff as regards a 4-annas and 10-gunda share in the lands and a decree for joint possession of the lands with the defendants. Thereafter the present suit was instituted. It is not necessary to refer to all the proceedings in connection with this suit. It is said that at first it was instituted as a suit for compensation in the Court of the Munsif but ultimately it was found that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain it as it really was a suit for recovery of mesne profits and it was filed in the Court of Small Causes. The suit was ultimately tried by a Subordinate Judge vested with the powers of a Judge of Small Cause Courts. He decreed the suit and the present application is directed against that decree.

Two points have been urged on behalf of the petitioner in this Rule. I propose to deal with the second point first as, in my opinion, having regard to the defence which the petitioner took in the Courts below he is not entitled to succeed on that point. His contention is that mesne profits which have been awarded in the present case should have been, if at all, allowed to the plaintiff not on the basis of the produce but only on the basis of the rents which were being actually realized from the tenants. It appears that in the plaint in the title suit previously instituted, the plaintiff made an allegation to the effect that he was in possession of his 5-annas share (that was the share which he claimed in the suit) by realizing rent from the tenants, that the defendants had mutated their names notwithstanding the plaintiff's objection and had dispossessed the plaintiff from his share. It is said that as the land was in the occupation of tenants, the learned Judge should have awarded mesne profits not on the basis of the produce but on the basis of rent. The proposition is perfectly a sound one and it has abundant authority in support of it. But in the present case looking in the written statement of the defendants, and I have looked into it very carefully, I do not find the slightest suggestion of this contention anywhere in it. On the other hand the defence avers that the produce of the lands was not really at the rate alleged in the plaint but at a different rate. That was the only objection with regard to the mode in which the mesne profits were to be calculated. My attention has been drawn to the cross-examination of some of the plaintiff's witnesses and it has been argued before me that the cross-examination has been directed to bring out the fact that the plaintiff was realizing paddy rent from his tenants. It is argued that the cross-examination shows that the defendant's contention in the Court below on this point was what is now argued before me. I am, however, unable to say that the question as to whether mesne profits should be assessed on the basis of produce or on the basis of rent was seriously disputed on the side of the defence. The learned Judge says in his judgment "the defendants are liable on the produce basis according to the definition of mesne profits. He is not a tenant but a trespasser. I accept the plaintiff's evidence of the value and the quantity produced as it appears to be reasonable". I understand from this passage that the learned Judge found that in so far as the share which did not belong to the defendants they were trespassers. In this the learned Judge may or may not have been right. But to determine the question which has now been urged before me would require an investigation of disputed facts which the Court below was, in my opinion, never asked to investigate. I am unable to accede to this contention inasmuch as to do so would be to allow the defendants to make out a case which does not appear to have been made in the Court below.

The other contention which has been urged on behalf of the petitioner is to the effect that the decree of the learned Judge cannot be sustained as admittedly the plaintiff and the defendants were co-sharers having different shares in the property and inasmuch as there is no finding either in the title suit, or in the present suit for mesne profits, that there was any dispossession by the defendants in respect of the plaintiff's share. It is urged on behalf of the opposite party that the fact that a decree for joint possession was passed taken in conjunction with the fact that in the plaint in the original suit there was an averment as to dispossession by the defendant should be considered to mean that the defendants had actually dispossessed the plaintiff. I am unable to say that this is a sufficient answer to the defendant's contention. There may have been more reasons than one as to why the decree for joint possession was passed and it does not follow from the mere fact that such a decree was passed that the Court meant to find that there was dispossession by the defendants. In the judgment in the present case also there is absolutely no finding with regard to this matter. It is well-settled that in case of co-sharers if a decree for mesne profits or for compensation is to be passed it must be found that there was dispossession. If any authority is needed for the proposition reference may be made to the unreported* decision in the case of Gora Chand Chatterjee v. Keshab Chandra Khawas, (L. P. A. No. 164 of 1911 decided by Jenkins, C. J. and Chatterjea, J.), where it was held that in order to award mesne profits as against a co-sharer, there must be a finding of actual ouster and that mere excess of enjoyment does not in itself amount to an ouster. In the present case there is no finding of ouster and inasmuch as in the absence of a finding to this effect the decree cannot possibly be sustained, I set aside the decree against which the present Rule is directed and direct the case to be sent back to the Court of the learned Judge in order that he may arrive at a proper finding on this question It will be open to the learned Judge if he thinks necessary to do so to allow the parties to adduce fresh or further evidence on this point. Having regard to the circumstances of this case I am of opinion that each party should bear his own costs of this Rule.

SAIN DASS—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439 (2) (6)—Alteration of sentence, issue of notice for, to accused—Right of accused to show cause against conviction—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 377—Evidence to substantiate charge—Criminal trial—Defence, weakness of.

Where a notice under s. 439 (2), Cr. P. C., is issued to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be altered, sub-cl. (6) of the section becomes applicable and the accused becomes entitled to show cause against his conviction. [p. 257, col. 2.]

Evidence to support a charge under s. 377, Penal Code, must be very convincing as it is very easy to bring such a charge but extremely difficult to refute it. [p. 258, col. 1.]

The guilt of a person accused of a crime has to be established by the evidence for the prosecution and not by the weakness of the defence. [ibid.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspore, with his No. 46 of 11th January 1926.

FACTS.—The accused Sain Dass has been convicted by a Magistrate and the conviction has been upheld by me on appeal, of attempting to commit sodomy on a boy of 12. My judgment, a copy of which is attached, gives the facts in detail.

GROUNDS.—The appellant has been sentenced to six months' simple imprisonment by an inexperienced Magistrate. He is 19 years of age, and it is hard to imagine a sentence more unsuitable for a youth with tendencies of this kind. He is to sit in Jail day after day staring into vacancy. Apparently the Magistrate could not pass a sentence of whipping for an attempt at sodomy, and in any case I would not suggest whipping after so long a period has elapsed, but in the interests of the prisoner himself I suggest that the simple imprisonment be converted into a term of rigorous imprisonment. The exact length of the term is not very important; in my opinion, three months would be ample.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Sain Dass son of Ishar Dass, a Khatri of Pathankot, was convicted of having attempted to commit sodomy on a boy named Muhammad Ishaq of the same place. The boy is said to be of 12 years of age and Sain Dass is about 19. Under s. 377/511 of the Indian Penal Code he was sentenced to six months' simple imprisonment. He appealed to the Sessions Court and the learned Sessions Judge, after making a remand for certain enquiries to be made, maintained the conviction and sentence. At the same time he reported the case to this Court under s. 438 of the Cr. P. C. recommending that the sentence of imprisonment should be altered from six months' simple imprisonment to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that Sain Dass has been in Jail now for almost three months. As notice was issued to Sain Dass under s. 439 (2) of the Cr. P. C., to show cause why the sentence should not be altered as above stated, sub-cl. (6) of that section becomes applicable and he was, therefore, entitled to show cause against his conviction. Mr. Fakir Chand on his behalf has urged that the evidence on the record is such as did not warrant the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below. The evidence against Sain Dass consists of the statements of the boy Muhammad Ishaq, Ismail (P. W. No. 3) Chiragh (P. W. No. 4) and Chuhar P. W. No. 5. As the offence of sodomy was not completed it is quite unnecessary to discuss the medical evidence. Suffice it to say that that evidence shows that there were no marks of injury either on the boy or on Sain Dass. Now, the story for the prosecution is that shortly after the 8 A. M. train had left Muhammad Ishaq went on to the Railway line to collect coal and that he was there seized by Sain Dass who picked him up and threw him into an empty truck about 6½ feet from the ground the doors of the truck which was an open one, being closed at the time. Having thrown Muhammad Ishaq into the truck Sain Dass himself got into it and there in broad day light forcibly attempted to commit sodomy. Attracted by the cries of this boy Chuhar (P. W. No. 5) asked Chiragh and Ismail to see what was going on. Chuhar himself did not go to the truck. Ismail (P. W. No. 3) and Chiragh P. W. No. 4 went to the truck, and according to Ismail saw the boy lying naked with his head down and the accused standing by his side folding his dhoti. The boy was weeping and saying that Sain Dass was committing an unnatural offence. Chiragh (P. W. No. 4) says that at the instance of Chuhar he and Ismail both got into the truck and found Muhammad Ishaq lying there naked and Sain Dass actually committing an unnaturae offence. The boy was weeping. A charge of this nature is one very easy to bring and very difficult to refute. Therefore to my mind the evidence in support of such a charge has to be very convincing. Ismaïl is a man of 25 and Chiragh is 30 years of age. Although, according to them, they found Sain Dass committing this disgusting offence nevertheless they never said anything to him. It has been urged that the whole story is improbable and that it is improbable that in broad day light at a time when people were bound to be about Sain Dass would have forcibly seized the boy thrown him into a wagon and there forcibly attempted to commit this unnatural offence. After a careful consideration I am forced to the conclusion that the story is an improbable one. It has to be borne in mind that the case for the prosecution is that the boy was not a willing participator in this offence. Therefore Sain Das' action was nothing less than rape, and I find it a little hard to believe that a shop-keeper such as Sain Dass would have seized a boy such as Muhammad Ishaq in a public place and attempted to commit such an offence in the manner alleged. It may be that the view taken of the defence evidence by the Courts below is correct and that it is a fabrication. Nevertheless the guilt of a person accused of a crime has to be established by the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence for the prosecution in this case is not to my mind convincing.

In these circumstances I am constrained to set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that Sain Dass be released forthwith.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Evidence before Committing Magistrate—Admissibility at trial—Weight to be attached.

Section 288 of the Cr. P. Criminal appeal from an order of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur at Ranchi, dated the 27th October 1925.

Messrs. Anand Prosad and Sudhansu Rajan Sen Gupta, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—The six appellants with three others were charged with offences under ss. 302 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. They were charged with committing murder by intentionally causing the death of Musammat Ghasin and with being members of an unlawful assembly with the common object to kill and cause hurt to Musammat Ghasin in prosecution of which common object the said Musammat Ghasin was beaten by the members of the assembly causing her death. The trial was held with the aid of four assessors. Three of the assessors were of opinion that it was doubtful if Musammat Ghasin was dead or alive and missing and that the evidence was not sufficient to convict the accused. One assessor was of opinion that Musammat Ghasin had been killed but that the charge under s. 302 had not been proved. He considered that the charge under s. 147 had been proved. The learned Judicial Commissioner agreed with the assessors that the charge under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, had not been established against any individual accused. He, however, came to the conclusion that a riot had been committed and that those who took part in the riot were guilty under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. He was of opinion that the six appellants were guilty under s. 147 and convicted them under the said section and sentenced them to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years. He acquitted three of the accused, being of opinion that the evidence against them was not sufficient.

This Court in admitting the appeal also directed notice to issue on the appellants to shew cause why they shall not be convicted of an offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. We have, therefore, to consider not only the question as to whether the conviction under s. 147, Indian Penal Code, should stand, but also as to whether the evidence on the record leads to the conclusion that the appellants were guilty under s. 302, Indian Penal Code.

The appeal has been very ably and fully argued by Mr. Anand Prasad on behalf of the appellants and the learned Assistant Government Advocate, with his usual fairness, has conceded that the evidence is not sufficient to convict the appellants of an offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. I propose, however, to discuss the evidence as regards both the offences.

Musammat Ghasin was a widow living with her only son Lohra Kumhar, a child ten years old. The appellant, Bigna Kumhar, is her husband's brother and her house was situated in the same angan as that of Bigna. The other appellants are all related with each other, and with Bigna.

The prosecution case is that the deceased Musammat Ghasin was supposed to be a witch or possessed by some evil spirit and that she was the cause of illness of several persons in the village. The appellant, Bucha Kumhar, had a son named Bandhan and he died on the 1st of May 1925. The prosecution case is that the appellants believed that the death of Bandhan had been caused by the witch-craft of Ghasin. The appellants and one Tipru Sawasi, who is a Bhandari of the landlord of the village, went to bury the body of Bandhan and there was some talk about the death of the boy having been caused by Musammat Ghasin and there was a proposal that Musammat Ghasin should be got rid of. After the burial a meeting is said to have taken place in the house of Bucha after sunset, to which Tipru was also called, where it was resolved to kill Ghasin. Tipru says that he warned them not to do so, and that he went straight from the meeting to Musammat Ghasin and told her to run away as there was a proposal to kill her. It is said that at about midnight the deceased Musammat Ghasin and her son Lohra were sleeping on a khatia in a room facing the verandah of her house when the appellants went and Bigna called Ghasin and asked her to come out. She did come out and according to one version, Bigna caught her by the throat and threw her down and according to another version, Harakh caught and threw her down. They are said to have throttled her and to have trampled upon her and killed her and to have carried her either dead or alive.

Now this is said to have taken place on the night of the 1st May 1925. Nothing happened until the 17th of May. The boy, Lohra, used to live with his uncle, the appellant Bigna. On the 17th of May, Lohra's sister's husband, Kandna and his father, Mahesh who live at Mouza Tingaria went to Musammat Ghasin's house and enquired of Lohra as to where she was, and then Lohra is said to have told them at once that she had been killed by the appellants and others and that her body had been thrown away. They apparently did not believe him, and they took him to the house of Dukhan and Ladhu, who are the brothers of the deceased woman and lived at Mouza Timra: and there they enquired as to whether Musammat Ghasin was there. On being informed that she was not there, Lohra told them about her death and they all resolved to go to the thana and lodge the First Information. It appears that Kandna and Mahesh before going to Timra, had gone to the chaukidar, Sohrai and informed him; but that Sohrai told them that he would first go to the village and enquire into the matter and then go to the thana the next day. The First Information was lodged at the thana at Karra on the 18th of May 1925 at about 2 P. M. by the boy, Lohra. He was accompanied by the chaukidar Sohrai, by Mahesh and Kandna and by his maternal uncles Dukhan and Ladhu. He stated that Bigna Kumhar came to the house at about midnight and asked his mother to open the door and that his mother opened the door and that the other appellants then came up and they all accused her of being a witch and of bringing about the death of Bucha Kumhar's son. Bigna is said, in this First Information Report, to have seized his mother by the throat and knocked her down and the other appellants to have kicked and fisted her and killed her by trampling. Lohra stated in this First Information that he was awakened when Bigna first came to the house and that he had seen all that had happened. He further stated that Bigna had warned him not to speak about the affair to any one and that he was threatened and that they would kill him if he told anybody about it. He stated that on the previous day when his sister's husband Kandna and the latter's father Mahesh came to his house and enquired about his mother, he told them that she had been killed.

Now the evidence of this boy, Lohra, is the most important evidence in the case. He is the only eye-witness of the occurrence and if his evidence is believed, the whole of the occurrence as stated by him is proved. The other important evidence is that of Tipru Sawasi, the Bhandari of the village. The cause of the murder is said to be the general belief that the deceased woman was a witch. It is said that the appellants and others believed that she was the cause of the illness of the people in the village and that the death of Bucha's son was the immediate cause of the murder. There is no doubt upon the evidence that there was some sort of belief in the minds of the accused and others that the illness in the village was caused by Ghasin. But it seems that the belief was not that she was really a which but that she was herself possessed by some evil spirit. In Chait or Baisakh preceding the occurrence there appears to have been a panchayat, which Tipru and others attended, and there a proposal was made to take steps to drive away the evil spirit from her and that one of the panchayat undertook to do so if he was given expenses for making certain sacrifices. This appears to have been a friendly proposal to relieve, Musammat Ghasin of the evil spirit which possessed her. The evidence is that during the illness of Budhan and others, Musammat Ghasin used to go and see the sick men and there was no objection to her doing so. She used to go and visit the appellants and others and to dine with them and no objection appears to have been taken to this. There does not appear to be any strong feeling in the mind of the accused and others to get rid of Musammat Ghasin herself on account of her being a witch. Therefore, although there appears to be some sort of belief in the mind of the accused of Musammat Ghasin being either a witch or possessed by some evil spirit, and although it has been established by the evidence that Bucha's son died on the 1st of May, the evidence falls short to prove that the appellants resolved to kill Musammat Ghasin on account of such a belief and on account of the death of Bucha's son.

The meeting of the villagers at the funeral and the resolution to dispose of Musammat Ghasin is deposed to by Tipru alone. As regards his evidence it is clear that one cannot place great reliance upon it. He made conflicting statements before the Committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court. The learned Judicial Commissioner has relied upon his evidence before the Committing Magistrate which was admitted under s. 288 of the Cr. P. C. It was contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the evidence before the Committing Magistrate was not admissible at the trial. Reliance was placed upon the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872" introduced into the section by the Amending Act of 1923. By this Amending Act, the evidence of a witness taken before a Committing Magistrate may be treated as evidence in the case, if such witness is produced and examined at the trial "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act". These words have introduced a certain amount of ambiguity in the section. One cannot be certain as to what is exactly meant by these words. Under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, the evidence of a witness examined before a Committing Magistrate would not be admissible in evidence except under s. 145 or under s. 155 of the Evidence Act for the purposes of the witness being examined as to his previous statement and relevant matters in question or with the intention to contradict him with the statement made by him in previous depositions or generally in order to impeach the credibility of the witness; or under s. 157 for the purpose of corroborating the testimony of the witness given at the trial. To my mind s. 288 makes the previous evidence of a witness taken before a Committing Magistrate, evidence admissible at the trial and the limitation imposed to such admission by the introduction of the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act" merely means, as laid down by this Court in Jehal Teli v. Emperor (1) that such evidence can be used at the trial for all purposes so long as the evidence is evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act. In other words, that the deposition recorded by the Committing Magistrate can be utilized at the trial if the matter contained therein is according to the rules of evidence laid down in the Evidence Act of evidential value. To limit the admissibility of such evidence at the trial only to cases where the evidence is admissible under the Evidence Act would be to frustrate the object in enacting s. 288 of the Cr. P. C. In my opinion the previous deposition of Tipru taken before the Committing Magistrate was rightly admitted at the trial.

The question, however, is as to what is the weight of such evidence. This point has been discussed in a number of cases some of which have been noticed by the learned Judges in the case of Jehal Teli v. Emperor (1). In addition to this, reference may be made to the case of In re Bachala Peda Somudu (2). It is difficult to lay down any precise rule as regards the weight to be placed on a piece of evidence admitted at the trial. Each case will depend upon its own peculiar fact and the nature of the other evidence adduced in the case. It can, however, be said that if a witness makes two contradictory statements, his evidence cannot be implicitly relied upon and must be taken with a good deal of caution. In Jehal Teli's case (1) after consideration of the cases bearing on the point, the learned Judges observed as follows:—

"I think, therefore, that the principle is quite clearly settled by this line of cases that unless there is clearly present, besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilized in support of a conviction".

I entirely agree with this expression of opinion and unless Tipru's statement before the Committing Magistrate is materially corroborated by other evidence or is shewn by facts clearly established by other evidence that the statement made by him before the Magistrate was a true statement, the conviction ought not to be sustained upon such evidence.

Now Tipru's account of the meeting of the villagers at the funeral is not corroborated by any other evidence in the present case. Tipru also speaks of the subsequent meeting at the house of Bucha where he says he was called by Harakh. Here also there is no sufficient corroboration of his statement. He tries to keep himself aloof as much as possible from any participation in the meeting and from the resolution come to at that meeting. He says that at the meeting he endeavoured to dissuade the appellants from committing murder and that from the meeting he went to Musammat Ghasin's house and warned her. In this he is no doubt corroborated by Lohra, but the subsequent events throw a good deal of suspicion upon the truth of this story. It is said by Tipru in his examination-in-chief that he told Mussammat Ghasin to clear out as they were talking of killing her, but she did not make any answer. In cross-examination he says that Ghasin told him that she would run away. Lohra says that when the appellants came at midnight and Bigna called out Ghasin, she at once came out. But it seems incredible to suppose that Musammat Ghasin would readily come out from her room on being called by the appellants at the dead of night when she had been warned previously that they were preparing to kill her that night. The door was closed from inside and it was expected that she would at least try to prevent the assailants from entering the house and would not open the door quietly and come out on being called. To my mind the account given by Tipru of the meeting at Bucha's house and of warning Musammat Ghasin has not been satisfactorily proved.

Then as regards the occurrence itself it is entirely based upon the evidence of Lohra. He is a boy of ten years of age. He states that he went to sleep with his mother on one khatia, the door of the room was closed and Bigna called his mother saying that she was wanted and his mother at once went out. Then Bigna, Harakh, Boro, Phagu, Bucha, Ranghia and Dhirju beat her. They pressed her throat and trampled on her and all the time he remained quietly on the khatia. He says that his mother was assaulted just in front of the door and he recognized the accused by their voices and also saw them and they continued to assault her till she was dead. They then shut the door and took away the body. He raised no alarm because Bigna said to him that if he did, he would kill him too. In the morning he asked Bigna where his mother was and he told him that she had gone on a visit to her relatives. In cross-examination he says that when Bigna came in the night he was awake and so was his mother They were awake because they had heard that she was going to be killed and yet as soon as she is called, she opens the door and comes out. He says that there was no light inside the house. It was dark outside: there was no lantern nor was there any moon. It is hard to believe that under those circumstances the boy would be able to identify who the assailants of his mother were. He could, perhaps, have recognized Bigna by his voice when he called out Musammat Ghasin to come out, but I am not prepared to believe that he could identify all the appellants in the dark night when he was still on his khatia and did not move from it and the whole place was in darkness. Then although he states that he saw that his mother had been throttled and trampled and killed, yet when Bigna told him the next morning that his mother had been on a visit to her relatives he readily believed that story and he quietly lived in the house of Bigna for 17 days without informing any person about the occurrence. The conduct of Musammat Ghasin herself after she was warned by Tipru and of Lohra after the occurrence until the 17th of May raise a good deal of suspicion as regards the truth of the account given by the witnesses Tipru and Lohra.

Then we come to the question as to whether Musammat Ghasin has actually been killed. The prosecution wanted to establish this by the fact of certain bones and ornaments of the deceased having been discovered on account of certain statements made by Bigna to the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector says that Bigna made a statement to him and first took him to a place on the borders of Kedli and Galiondo saying that the body had been buried there. He went there but the body was not found buried at that place. After that Bigna showed him another place on the borders of the villages Birsirang and Kedli, but there also the body was not found. The Sub-Inspector says that on a raised ground above the river and a water-course and a little jungle which appeared to be an unfrequented spot, he found some bones and bangles, some long heirs and a piece of molia sari with red borders and a jaw with eight teeth and two loose teeth and one leg bone. This was on the 18th May. On the next day he says that he found the rest of a red bordered sari, a bead necklace, a bangle and armlets and the sole of a foot. The bones were sent to the Sub-Assistant Surgeon on the 23rd of May. His opinion was that the bones were of an adult human being probably that of a female. The lower jaw from its colour, smoothness and thickness did not seem to be a member of the group of other bones. In his opinion the jaw did not appear to belong to a female. The jaw, according to him, could not belong to an adult because it had 14 sockets for the teeth whereas an adult should have 16. In his view the jaw bone appeared to be that of a boy between 14 and 17 years. The bones were taken to the Sub-Assistant Surgeon by the chowkidar Soma. He stated in his deposition before the Committing Magistrate that he brought the bones to the doctor, the doctor gave him a letter to be taken to the thana and returned the bones saying that he had finished with them and the witness says that as he was not directed to take the bones to the thana he disposed of them on the way. Now it is said that the same bones were again produced before the Civil Surgeon on the 25th of June. The Sub Inspector says that the bones were returned to him on the 23rd of June by the chowkidars Soma and Bijua and that in the meantime they were with the chowkidars; that after the 23rd June he kept them at the thana. The Civil Surgeon says that on an examination of the bones it was impossible to determine the sex, but that the bones were of an adult. He was of opinion that the lower jaw could belong to the same set of bones.

Now if the opinion of the Doctor be correct that the jaw bone was that of a male and if it could belong to the same set of bones, it is impossible to come to a definite finding that the bones produced were the bones of a female. Moreover, we have it in the evidence of Tipru that the bones were found beyond the boundaries of his village, that bodies were buried, half a mile from the village : but the bones were found two and a-half miles from the village and that he could not say if there was at that place, the burial ground of another village. The learned Judicial Commissioner was also of opinion that it could not be said with any amount of certainty that the bones were the bones of Musammat Ghasin, but the fact of the discovery of her ornaments and her sari led him to believe that Musammat Ghasin had been killed. The ornaments were ordinary ornaments and not of much value. The witnesses who identified the ornaments and the sari admitted that there was nothing to distinguish those articles as having belonged to Musammat Ghasin and that they were ordinary articles commonly worn by the women in the locality. One of the ornaments found was an ornament worn by boys and not by women and it was found around one of the bones. The explanation offered was that this ornament belonged to Lohra, but that it was too big for him and it was generally worn by his mother. Lohra, however, was not asked about it. As regards the sari it appears that a whole sari was not discovered but several pieces of a sari were discovered and that one of those pieces had not got a red border which the others had. It is deposed to by Kandna and Mahesh that they had seen Musammat Ghasin wearing that sari and it is also deposed to by her brothers as being the sari which she was wearing when they saw her in her house. I do not believe this evidence. It is rather remarkable that she would be putting on the same sari on each of the occasions deposed to by the witnesses. The sari itself is said to be an ordinary motia sari which is generally used in that part of the country.

I now come to the confession of Bigna. It appears that on the 27th of May 1925 he made a statement before the Sub-Divisional Officer in which he stated that on a Saturday or Sunday at the end of Baisakh, Harakh, Hathi, Sibu Kumhar, Dhirju Naua, Ramjia, Phagu, and Bora Kumhar killed Musammat Ghasin and threw away her corpse. The Sub-Divisional Officer then asked him as to what had happened and he stated that when Bucha's son died, Phagu called him (Bigna) and said "see the child is dead, why have you killed him, have you eaten him or what have you done, say or else I will kill you and throw you away, if you go by what your sister-in-law says we shall kill you, if you go by what we say nothing will happen to you"; that there was a meeting about sunset in the angan of Ranghia and Bucha; that it was decided to kill his sister-in-law. He gave the names of all the appellants and of others as being present. He says that he was also present as Boro and Phagu had gone to call him. He then says that they came during the first part of the night when Harakh called his sister-in-law saying that he wanted to speak something to her and asked her to come out for a drink of Haria. His sister-in law said that she would not go at night and that Harakh said that he had got something to tell her and thereupon his sister-in-law came out of the room and sat in the verandah: Harakh asked her if she had Haria, to which she replied that she had not got Haria. Harakh then seized her by the throat, Phagu seized her legs and some of the others trampled and some kicked her; Sibu thrust cloth in her mouth and Harakh throttled her to death. On being asked as to where did he see the occurrence from, he said that Harakh woke him and took him to the spot and told him that if he would lodge information they would kill him. That is why he did not give information. On being asked where did they throw the corpse of his sister-in-law, he said that after they had killed her they immediately carried her corpse and buried her in the sands in Karo river on the boundary between villages Bilsiring and Kadli.

Now the question is whether this is a confession at all and whether it could be used as evidence not only against Bigna but also against the other accused. Section 30 of the Evidence Act is quite clear. Confessions of an accused can be used against other accused persons who are tried jointly with the accused making the confession when such confession affects the person making it. A confession must be a confession of guilt. The statement made by Bigna could, in no sense, be considered to be a confession of guilt. He does not inculpate himself in any way. He states that he himself was accused by Phagu as being instrumental in killing the son of Bucha and he was himself threatened with being killed. He accounts for his presence there as he was called there by Phagu and Boro. His statement does not make it out that he was a member of the assembly with the common object of killing or causing hurt to Musammat Ghasin. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that his statement is not a confession at all which can be used in evidence either as against Bigna or against the other accused. This confession was retracted subsequently and it was stated that he had made the statement at the instance of Tipru.

It is then contended that his statement to the Police which led to the discovery of the bones and the ornaments could be used as evidence. It is clear that the bones were not discovered on account of the statement made by Bigna. His statement was that the body was buried at a certain place. The Sub-Inspector went there and did not find the body there. He next stated that it was removed to another place and there also no trace of the body was found. The bones were discovered at a third place and as I have said above the bones have not been proved to be the bones of Musammat Ghasin. In the circumstances the charges under s. 302 cannot stand.

The charge under s. 147 also cannot stand as it is based entirely upon the evidence of Tipru and Lohra, whose evidence is not sufficient to prove that the appellants were members of an unlawful assembly. The learned Judicial Commissioner has found that the present accused persons were members of the unlawful assembly on account of the discovery of the stains of human blood on the cloths of the accused. A motia chadar was found on the person of Ranghia; a dhoti was found on the person of Boro; a chadar was found in the house of Boro; a dhoti was found on the person of Phagu; a chadar was found on the person of Bucha and another chadar on the person of Bigna on all of which were stains of human blood. These cloths were discovered about three weeks after the occurrence and it is hard to believe that if the stains of blood were the stains caused by the murder of Musammat Ghasin the accused persons would not have taken the ordinary precaution of washing the stains from the cloths. In my opinion the finding of the stains of blood on the cloths is not a circumstance which would prove the complicity of the accused in the crime.

After careful consideration of the entire evidence in the case, I am of opinion that the charge under s. 302 has not been established and that the charge under s. 147, Indian Penal Code, has also not been sufficiently proved as against the accused. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellants and direct that they be set at liberty.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, illus. (b)—Approver—Corroboration—Corroboration of approvers inter se—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411, offence under—Corroboration required.

An approver is unworthy of credit as against each accused unless corroborated in material particulars. [p. 265, col. 1.]

One approver cannot corroborate another approver unless there is something on the record to show that they had no chance of collaboration before giving evidence. [ibid.]

The evidence that the accused appeared before certain panchayats which made certain enquiries into certain thefts or that they received moneys (bhungas) promising to restore property cannot be corroborative evidence of an offence under s. 401, Penal Code. [p. 265, col. 2.]

The corroborative evidence of witnesses that the assembling of the accused at a particular well was always followed by a theft is not sufficient corroboration where none of the witnesses ever reported to the Police at the time of the occurrence of any one of the thefts that it was preceded by a meeting of the accused at a particular well. [ibid.]

Appeal from an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 7th April 1925.

Dr. Sir Mian Muhammad Shafi, KT., for the Appellants.

Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Hasna, who has several previous convictions against him and was under arrest on a charge under s. 458, Indian Penal Code, made an offer to the Police to give information about a gang of thieves who had been associated with him for the purpose of habitually committing theft, if he were made an approver. This was agreed to and Hasna accepted a tender of pardon and his statement was duly recorded by a Magistrate on the 22nd and 23rd February 1924. In consequence of the information given by him, Barkat, Ghafur and Hasham were arrested on the 23rd February and they accepted a tender of pardon on the 11th, 14th and 18th March respectively. The result of the Police investigation was that seventy men in all were arrested out of whom sixty-two were sent up for trial on a charge under s. 401, Indian Penal Code. Some were discharged by the Committing Magistrate and the trial of the remaining forty-seven commenced in the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Karnal, on the 11th October 1924 and ended on the 7th April 1925 on which date the judgment was announced acquitting thirty-seven men and convicting ten only. Seven out of these ten convicts have lodged a joint appeal through Mr. Muhammad Rafi, one has appealed through Mr. Shamair Chand and two have appealed separately through the Superintendent of the Jail in which they are confined.

The principal witnesses for the prosecution are the four approvers who are admittedly men of no character and whose evidence against as many as thirty-seven men was not relied upon by the Court below. Mr. Amar Nath Chona, who appears for the Crown, frankly concedes that the evidence of any one of these four approvers cannot be said in this case to corroborate others as there is nothing on the records to show that they had had no chance of collaboration before giving evidence, and that their evidence according to the general rule is unworthy of credit as against each accused unless corroborated in material particulars. It will not be out of place to give here a few excerpts from the judgment of the lower Court relating to these approvers. "In the case of Fajra whom he (Hasna) named as present in four thefts, while he was actually in the Police custody when those thefts occurred, that he named Ali Mohammed accused on account of personal grudge as an accomplice in the Panipat Barber theft although he was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment in the Jind State at the time of that theft," "that though Hasna was the head of this alleged gang he could not identify in Jail 8 persons out of those accused."

"In my opinion all these defects are due to the anxiety on the part of these approvers to implicate a large number of persons to simply feed their personal grudge and consequently they have said many things which were not true or which could not be supported."

"I am distinctly of opinion that it is not proved that Hasna had any central gang consising of a very large number of persons as alleged."

"All the four assessors who gave their opinion separately are unanimously of opinion that there was no gang of Hasna formed for purposes of committing habitual thefts or robberies."

Now the corroborative evidence that has been relied upon as against almost every appellant is (1) that he took part in one or more of the thirty-two thefts which, according to Hasna, were committed by the members of his gang from time to time and (2) that the members of the gang associated with each other. Against some of the appellants there is the further evidence that they appeared before certain panchayats which made enquiries into certain thefts or that they received moneys (bhungas) promising to restore stolen cattle. But it is clear that the evidence that a panchayat made an enquiry into a theft and called a person before it as a suspect, or that a person accepted money and agreed to make a search for stolen animal and to restore it to the owner, does not as against that person prove any of the ingredients of the offence punishable under s. 401, Indian Penal Code.

The principal witnesses who give evidence with regard to association and whose names are given in the margin,* deposed that the accused used to assemble at the well of Bundu (P. W. No. 152) and that whenever they assembled there a theft was committed in Panipat. But though they include two Lambardars, one Zaildar and one Sufedposh, none of them ever reported to the Police at the time of the occurrence of any one of the thefts that it was preceded by a meeting of the so-called members of Hasna's gang at Bundu's well, and that their assembling at that well was always followed by a theft. This being so their belated story cannot be given credence to. The learned Counsel for the Crown frankly states that he cannot say whether this evidence of association is sufficient to uphold the convictions.

*Bundu (P. W. No. 152), Muhammad Ishaq (P. W. No. 158), Zahur Ali Khan (P. W. No. 159), Mazhar-ul-haq (P. W. No. 160), Balla (P. W. No. 162), Umra (P. W. No. 163), Allah Din (P. W. No. 164), Hasham Ali (P. W. No. 167) and Alli (P. W. No. 168).

With these preliminay remarks I proceed to examine some of the cases separately and take up the appeal of Sahelu first.

As already stated Hasna gave a list of 32 thefts and the lower Court has held that Sahelu took part in two of them, i. e., Nos. 8 and 11 of the list. But in an earlier part of the judgment the Court has held that theft No. 8 was not proved. As regards theft No. 11, Counsel for the Crown admits that on the evidence on the record it cannot be said that Sahelu took part in it.

The theft seems to have taken place and the property stolen was two bullocks which were recovered through Barkat approver who received Rs. 160 as bhunga from the owner Molu (P. W. No. 32). It was stated that this bhunga was paid to Barkat in the presence of Sahelu and Dossu, that is to say, Sahelu and Dossu happened to be with Barkat when he received this amount. But Molu who paid the bhunga had paid two visits to Barkat previously and the amount had already been settled with him. Sahelu and Dossu were, therefore, in no way concerned in the bargain for and acceptance of the bhunga by Barkat,

That Sahelu attended twelve panchayats is of no consequence because he being a badmash having been bound down five times under s. 110 of the Cr. P. C., it was quite natural for the panchayats to call him as a suspect whenever a theft was enquired into by them.

With regard to his association with Hasna etc. the Assistant Sessions Judge has referred to the evidence of Banwari and Nanak (P. Ws. Nos 230 and 231). Banwari is himself an old badmash whose name has been on the Police Register No. 10 for fifteen years. Nanak is a lambardar: and his story was that he saw Hasna, Sahelu and two others taking away a bullock and came to know the next day of the theft of a bullock belonging to some Arains of Panipat who came to him and informed him of the theft. But neither did the Arains nor did Nanak himself give information to the Police that Hasna, Sahelu etc., were seen taking away the bullocks. The story now told, therefore, does not appear to be probable.

Kale Khan was said to have taken part in two thefts Nos. 17 and 20. There is no independent evidence that he did so, and neither of these thefts was ever reported to the Police. Kale Khan urged that he could not be a member of Hasna's gang because Hasna had stolen his own horse.

Nathu was stated by the approvers to have taken part in thefts Nos. 9, 10, 13 and 30. The lower Court held that theft No. 10 was not proved and thefts Nos. 9 and 30 were never reported to the Police and as regards No. 9, the so called complainant Jamal-ud-din (P. W. No. 25) made conflicting statements on different dates from which it appears that the theft deposed to by him never took place.

With regard to Munshi son of Bhika, the lower Court remarked that he being a resident of Gharaunda, where Ghafur also resided, his association with the latter and others was not of very great importance, but that he was seen in their Company outside of his village also. But his conviction was based mainly on the evidence of the approver as the lower Court remarks: "There is no reason why these approvers falsely implicate him."

As regards Dossu, it was proved that in 1920 he pointed out Lala Chatar Bhuj's stolen bullock in Hasna's house. Hasna, therefore, bore him a grudge and has sufficient reason to implicate him.

It is not necessary to deal with the cases of the remaining appellants individually. The approver's evidence and the evidence as to association being unreliable none of them could be convicted. I, therefore, accept all the appeals, set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the appellants be released forthwith.

Calcutta Police Act (V of 1866), s. 78-A—Procedure in Police investigation—Inherent powers of Police.

Attendance and questionings of any person during Police investigation under s. 78-A, Police Act, are intended to take place within the Presidency Town itself. But if information is to be obtained from a person outside the Presidency whose attendance cannot be procured for some reason in the Presidency Town the procedure laid down in cl. (3) of the section is to be followed. [p. 268, col. 1.]

There are no inherent powers possessed by the Police. All investigations by the Police in the Mofussil must be controlled by the Cr. P. C. and in Calcutta by the Police Act itself or by any Circular Orders issued. [p. 268, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This Rule was granted by my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose sitting with Mr. Justice Mukerji and the object of the Rule was to secure the quashing of an order of commitment passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The statement contained in the petition upon which the Rule is based is that on the 10th November one Girija Bhusan Sarkar on behalf of his mother-in-law preferred a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, charging the petitioner and the petitioner's son and another person with forgery, cheating, theft etc., and it is said that the Chief Presidency Magistrate, therefore, took cognizance of the complaint under s. 190, Cr. P. C., examined the complainant under s. 200 and directed an enquiry under s. 202 and that under these circumstances a certain statement which was taken from the petitioner by an Investigating Police Officer is not admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 162 of the Cr. P. C. I do not think, however, that this contention is well-founded. If one turns to the original application which was made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate one finds that it is made in general terms. It stated that a certain Satya Charan Mitter died and that he was the holder of certain Government securities and that some difficulties having arisen after his death with regard to these securities it was necessary that certain enquiries should be made, and the actual application that was made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate was for a stop order in respect of the securities referred to in the petition and for a direction on the C. I. D. Police to make enquiry into the matter. The order passed on that application by the Chief Presidency Magistrate was to send the matter to the C. I. D. for enquiry and report, and with regard to the stop order the Magistrate stated that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the order at that stage. I think, therefore, that the arguments based on the contention to which I have referred are not well-founded and that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was merely acting under the provisions of s. 156 (3) of the Cr. P. C., which empower the Magistrate to order an investigation in the terms stated in the section. But the real point that we have got to decide is based on a consideration of the powers of the Calcutta Police under the Calcutta Police Act. The facts being as I have stated they clearly show that s. 162, Cr. P. C., does not directly apply, for the investigation that was directed was carried on by the Calcutta Police under the provisions of the Calcutta Police Act, and it appears that what happened was that after the Chief Presidency Magistrate made his order the petitioner's son having been already arrested the Police Officer went to the petitioner and took from him a statement which is now sought to be used in evidence against the petitioner, and on the strength of which he was committed by the Magistrate for trial at the Sessions, it being admitted that apart from this statement obtained from the petitioner the evidence on the record is not sufficient to justify the committal, and indeed the Magistrate very frankly so states.

Turning to the provisions of s. 78-A of the Calcutta Police Act, which is the Act applicable as the Cr. P. C. does not apply to the Calcutta Police except as expressly indicated in that Act, one finds that according to the provisions of s. 78-A (1) the Commissioner of Police, if in the course of any investigation he thinks a cognizable offence has been committed can by an order in writing require the attendance before himself or any officer serving under him not below the rank of an Inspector, who is investigating a cognizable offence, of a person within the limits of Calcutta or within a radius of 30 miles. Sub-section (2) provides that the Commissioner of Police can examine orally the person who attends in accordance with the order passed under s. 78-A (1) and that the person so attending is bound to answer all questions. Then comes sub-s. (3). That provides that the Commissioner of Police may forward to the Superintendent of Police of the District in which any person from whom any information is required relating to the facts or circumstances of the case under investigation is believed to be, such questions and such statement as may be necessary for the purpose of obtaining the information desired, that is to say, the scheme of s. 78-A in my reading of the section is to enable the Commissioner of Police to procure the attendance before him or any officer deputed in that behalf of any person for the purpose of obtaining information from such person; and as I have already stated sub-s. (2) authorises the oral examination of the person whose attendance is procured. Then under sub-s. (3) the Commissioner of Police is empowered to obtain the assistance of the Superintendent of Police in a District outside Calcutta for the purpose of having questions put to a person from whom information is desired but who for some reason cannot attend. As I understand s. 78A (1) and (2) the attendance and questionings are intended to take place within the Presidency Town itself; and sub-s. (3) only comes into force if for some reason it is difficult or unadvisable to require the attendance of the person from whom information is desired within the precincts of the Presidency Town itself. Now what the Investigating Officer apparently did in this case was to go to Howrah and take from the petitioner a statement which contains the evidence upon which the committed order has been made by the Magistrate. I do not think, therefore, that he was acting under the provisions of either s. 78A (1) or (2), nor do I think that he was in fact acting under the provisions of s. 78-A (3), for I do not understand that any requisition was made to the Superintendent of Police of Howrah for the purpose of procuring the information which was desired, and if in fact the Investigating Officer had been acting under the provisions of sub-s. (3) he would by virtue of cl. (3) of the Police Act III of 1888, be acting under the direction of the Superintendent of Police of Howrah and the matter would accordingly be governed by the provisions of s. 162 of the Cr. P. C., for that Act, of course, applies to Howrah. I think, therefore, we are met with this difficulty that if what the Police Officer says he did falls within s. 78A (3) then s. 162, Cr. P. C., applies for the reasons I have indicated. But, in my opinion, the Investigating Officer was not acting under s. 78-A at all, and the question, therefore, we have got to see is whether he was justified in the course which he took, and whether the statement which he took from the petitioner is under the circumstances admissible in evidence.

It is suggested by the Advocate-General that the Calcutta Police Act does not contain all the powers vested in the Calcutta Police and then there are in existence certain Circular Orders which give or may give wider powers in this matter than are contained in s. 78-A, but no such order has been produced before us and I do not think we are justified in assuming that such an order exists. Then a further contention is urged before us. It is said that the power to investigate contains an inherent power to take a statement such as this and that accordingly under the general law this particular statement is admissible in evidence against the accused, and we are referred in support of this argument to the case of Queen-Empress v. Nilmadhub Mitter (1), which is a decision of the Full Bench of this Court, as an authority for the proposition that there are certain powers inherent in the Police which are not expressly set out in the four corners of the Calcutta Police Act; for instance, it is said that there is no provision in the Calcutta Police Act providing for the taking of confessions; and yet according to the decision of the Full Bench the confession that was taken in that case was admitted in evidence although as I have stated there was no power to take confession expressly included within the provisions of the Calcutta Police Act. But in that case the confession was taken within the town of Calcutta itself and consequently that case cannot be prayed in aid to support the procedure adopted here. And we are not prepared to assent to the proposition that in criminal matters there is this inherent power such as the Advocate-General contends exists. All investigations by the Police, it seems to me, must be controlled, in the mofussil, by the Code of Criminal Procedure and in Calcutta by the Police Act itself or by any Circular Orders issued. I am not prepared to say that in a matter of this nature we can safely import a power such as the Advocate-General seeks to import of taking statements generally by the Police apart from the provisions of any Act and then put the statements so taken in evidence against the person by whom they were made. I think that would be to strike at the principles, to preserve which the provisions of s. 162, Cr. P. C., were enacted and would introduce a very dangerous principle.

For the reasons, therefore, we have indicated I think the Rule should be made absolute and the commitment order of the petitioner should be quashed.

C. C. Ghose, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 402—Assemblage of accused—Preparation for dacoity.

Where the accused belonging to different villages are found at a lonely well at a long distance from their homes fully armed and equipped for committing dacoity, a conviction under s. 402, Penal Code, is maintainable.

Queen-Empress v. Bholu, 23 A. 124; A. W. N. (1908) 16, Bhola v. Emperor, 84 Ind. Cas. 860; 22 A. L. J. 1028; L. R. 5 A. 156 Cr.; A. I. R 1925 All. 62; 26 Cr. L. J. 380 and Karmun v. Emperor, 34 Ind. Cas. 1000; 6 P. R. 1916 Cr.; 17 Cr. L. J. 280; 37 P. W. R. 1916 Cr., referred to.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30 of the Cr. P. C., at Amritsar, dated the 25th November 1925.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. C. Soni, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Five persons, Waryam Singh, Labh Singh, Teja Singh alias Amar Singh and Chanda Singh of different villages in the Lahore District and Khuda Baksh, alias Chola, of the Amritsar District have been sentenced under s. 402, Indian Penal Code, the first four to four years' rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 100 each and the last to seven years' rigorous imprisonment on the ground that he is a previous convict. Each of these persons was also tried separately for an offence under s. 19 of the Arms Act, namely, being in possession of a chhavi. They were sentenced under that section each to three years' rigorous imprisonment but it was ordered that the sentences under s. 402, Indian Penal Code, and under the Arms Act should run concurrently. In effect, therefore, there is only one sentence upon each person. Against their convictions and sentence they have appealed.

It has been clearly established that the Sub-Inspector of the Police Station, Ajnala, in the Amritsar District received information about 8 P. M. on the 20th August 1925 that the five appellants who were all strangers had collected at the Jhalarwala well about 1½ miles from Ajnala with the object of committing a dacoity in the well-to-do village of Chamyari about two miles away from that well. Accordingly two Sub-Inspectors of Police, two Zaildars, a Sufed-posh and others set out and surrounded this lonely well which has a grove of trees. They drew the cordon tighter and finally arrested the five appellants in front of the small house there. Each of them was carrying a dang while concealed on the person of each was the blade of a chhavi which fitted his dang. In addition Waryam Singh had a house-breaking implement while Chola had eight candles and Chanda Singh ten patakhas. There was also a horse there tied to a tree.

Waryam Singh, his servant Labh Singh and Teja Singh alias Amar Singh, stated that they were going to Dhurian village to get the cattle of Waryam Singh and were arrested at the Ajnala ekka stand. Chanda Singh also said that he was arrested at that place when he was going to Ludoke. Chola explained that he was going to get medicine when he was arrested at Ajnala. This means that these five appellants were arrested on three different occasions inside Ajnala according to their own story.

Certain witnesses have been examined to show that Waryam Singh had cattle grazing at Dhurian and that he was going there when he and the two others already mentioned were arrested at the Ajnala ekka stand by the Police. Similarly Chanda Singh produced evidedce to the effect that he was arrested there on another occasion. Chola, however, produced no evidence.

It is clear that the defence put forward is false and has not been established by the evidence produced by the appellants. There is not the slightest doubt that they were caught as already described at the lonely well in question, fully armed and equipped for committing a dacoity. In these circumstances they were properly found guilty under s. 402, Indian Penal Code, see Queen-Empress v. Bholu (1), Bhola v. Emperor (2) and Karmun v. Emperor (3). These appellants belong to different villages and were at long distances from their respective homes and they could have been there for no other object. There was no reason why any of the prosecution witnesses should have got up a false case against the appellants. The sentences are not excessive, seeing that the last sentence on Chola was one of four years under s. 457, Indian Penal Code, and that dacoities are very rife in the Amritsar District.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 236, 237—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 467, 471—Charge of abetting forgery—Conviction for using forged document—Legality.

An offence of abetment of forgery is quite distinct from one of using a forged document. In a trial on a charge of abetment of forgery, an accused cannot be convicted for an offence of using a forged document. [p. 271, col. 1.]

Before a person is convicted under a particular section of the Penal Code or of any other enactment it is imperative that subject to the provisions of s. 237, Cr. P. C., he should be formally charged with having committed the offence specified in the section and be given an opportunity to defend himself against the specified charge. [p. 271, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Cachar, dated the 4th June 1925.

Babus Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee and Satyendra Kishore Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ashraf Ali, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant before us has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Cachar under ss. 467/471, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six years. He was put on his trial along with four others—Shajid Ali, Atar Ali, Yakub Ali and Salim Mia, they being charged under s. 467 with forgery and he being charged under s. 467 read with s. 109 of abetment of forgery. The four others were acquitted. The trial was with the aid of three assessors who found the accused guilty of having abetted the forgery of a certain document.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused Shajid Ali had written out a kobala by which Mahomed Yusuf, and Sultan Mahomed purported to convey to the accused, Harun Rashid, 120 bighas of land for Rs. 4,000, the consideration being accounted for as follows, namely, Rs. 2,000 due to Harun Rashid on account of a certain debt and Rs. 2,000 commission due to him from them. In other words, no money was alleged to have been paid at the time of the execution of the kobala. The three witnesses to the execution of the kabala were the accused Atar Ali, Yakub Ali and Salim Mia who were discharged by the Judge as not knowing that the deed was a forgery. As regards the accused Shajid Ali, there was evidence that he had written out the kabala in question. The assessors found him guilty of forgery but the learned Sessions Judge, being of opinion that there was nothing to show that Shajid Ali did not write out the kobala bona fide at Harun's request, acquitted him as stated above. The charge against the appellant Harun Rashid was that he had abetted the forgery of a valuable security which was forged in consequence of his abetment.

The evidence goes to show that he presented the kobala for registration at the Sub-Registrar's Office. The Sub-Registrar thereupon called on the alleged executants to attend and thereafter the alleged executants appeared and denied execution of the document. The learned Sessions Judge found on the evidence that there could be no doubt whatsoever that the kobala in question was a false document. It was clearly a valuable security and its very nature showed that it was made with intent to cause the alleged executants to part with property. It was, therefore, a forged document. He found that there was no evidence worth the name that Harun had abetted the forgery by entering into a conspiracy to procure the forgery, but he was of opinion that the transaction as disclosed in the evidence pointed rather to Harun having committed an offence punishable under s. 471 of the Indian Penal Code, i. e. Harun had used the document as a genuine one knowing that it was a forgery and that the recitals in the said document were all untrue and that his intention was to cause wrongful loss to the alleged executants. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that Harun should have been charged under ss. 467/471, Indian Penal Code, the user of the forged document being its presentation to the Sub-Registrar for registration. He accordingly convicted him under the said sections and sentenced him as stated above.

On behalf of the appellant it has been argued that he having been tried on a charge of abetment of forgery cannot be convicted under s. 471 of using a forged document as genuine without a trial having been held on a charge under s. 471, Indian Penal Code. It appears from the record that the learned Sessions Judge relied upon the provisions of s. 237, Cr. P. C., as authorising him to convict the appellant under s. 471, Indian Penal Code. It, therefore, becomes necessary for us to examine the provisions of s. 237, Cr. P. C., and see whether the procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge is legal. Section 237, Cr. P. C., runs as follows:—"If, in the case mentioned in s. 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it." It will be seen that s. 237 is only applicable to cases which properly fall within the scope of s. 236 of the Cr. P. C. which says: "If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences." We do not think that s 236 and s. 237 can apply in this case. The charge was abetment of forgery—an offence which is complete when the document was written and signed. But the conviction is for a subsequent act. The forgery purports to be on the 30th March 1924. The date the document was presented for registration and used was the 31st July 1924. The user is, therefore, a distinct and different offence for which the accused is entitled to be separately charged.

Before a person is convicted under a particular section of the Indian Penal Code or of any other enactment it is imperative that subject to the provisions of s. 237, Cr. P. C., he should be formally charged with having committed the offence specified in the second and be given an opportunity to defend himself against the specified charge. That has not been done in this case and we are constrained to hold that the conviction and sentence in the present case cannot stand. The result, therefore, is that the conviction and sentence in this case are set aside and the case is sent back in order that the appellant may be re-tried according to the provisions of the law after framing suitable charges. The appellant will remain on the same bail as he is on now, pending further orders of the Sessions Judge.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, SIMLA—COMPLAINANT—PETITIONER

MUKAND SINGH—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162, 250—'Vexatious' case, meaning of—Acquittal—Compensation—Police diaries, use of.

An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant is to cause annoyance to the person accused and not merely to further the ends of justice. [p. 272, col. 1.]

Where a report regarding the conduct of the accused, a Municipal Supervisor, was made by the Municipal Engineer, on which the President set a more or less informal inquiry on foot through the Police, and the report of the Police showed that the Supervisor had been guilty of falsification of accounts but the accused was acquitted on trial, it cannot be said under the circumstances that the object in instituting the proceedings was primarily to annoy the accused. [p. 272, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Magistrate is not justified in referring to the statements made in the Police diaries unless and until the witnesses have been confronted by these statements. [p. 272, col. 2.]

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 16th February 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Simla, dated the 17th December 1924.

Mr. C. H. Cardon Noad, Dewan Ram Lal and Sheikh Muhammad Umar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—B. Mukand Singh Work Supervisor lately in the employment of the Municipal Committee, Simla, was sent up for trial by the Police under s. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code. He was acquitted by the Trial Magistrate and a sum of Rs. 100 was awarded to him by way of compensation under s. 250 of the Cr. P. C. An appeal was lodged by the Municipal Committee, who had been ordered to pay the compensation and this was dismissed by the Sessions Judge. A revision has been admitted from that order.

Without going into the facts or questioning the correctness of the findings Counsel has urged that, although the accusation had been held to be unproved and unsubstantiated, there is no reason for holding that the case was false in the sence in which this word is used in s. 250 of the Cr. P. C., or even vexatious in the sense in which the word is used in that section. On the latter point Counsel relies on Emperor v. Kouro (1), where it is explained that an accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant was to cause annoyance to the person accused, and not merely to further the ends of justice. A report was made regarding the conduct of this Supervisor by the Municipal Engineer on which the President, the Deputy Commissioner, set a more or less informal inquiry on foot through the Police, and the Superintendent of Police reported four days later that his inquiry showed that the Supervisor had been guilty of falsification of accounts. The matter went before the Committee and at a meeting of the 17th February 1921 it was resolved that instead of proceeding further with the case the Committee decided to give one month's notice to B. Mukand Singh and to dispense with his services. On receiving a notice to this effect B. Mukand Singh protested against being treated in this way without any explanation being demanded from him. To this the Secretary of the Committee replied that if he wished to furnish any explanation the Committee was prepared to consider it. He replied that it would be of no avail to do so as his services had been dispensed with and asked for the payment of his Provident Fund or rather the Municipal contribution towards it. This was refused on the ground that the order of discharge combined with the failure of Mukand Singh to furnish any explanation made that order tantamount to an order of dismissal. The Commissioner set aside this order so far as it related to the payment of the contribution and the Commissioner's order was enforced by the Local Government. Subsequently Mukand Singh made a further claim for two years' pay and on this the Committee ordered the matter of the falsification of the accounts to be proceeded with and a report was duly made to the Police. Mukand Singh was chalaned and acquitted.

What has been shown, therefore, is that the Committee withheld a sum of money which they were not entitled to withhold and that on a claim being made, which they considered unjustifiable, they ordered the question of the falsification of accounts which had once been dropped to be re-opened. I do not agree with many of the findings of the Magistrate which Counsel has been unable to substantiate, such as that the Police was unduly influenced by the representatives of the Municipal Committee, Simla, or that the investigating Officer was dissuaded by the Municipal Counsel or Municipal Engineer from examining witnesses whom he should have examined, or that the Committee was responsible for any shortcoming, if there be any shortcoming, in the investigation. I find that the Magistrate was not justified in referring to the statements made in the Police diaries unless and until the witnesses had been confronted by these statements. I cannot discover, nor has Counsel been able to show me, how it is clear that up to the date of the institution of the present proceedings Mukand Singh was ready any time to submit a complete explanation of his case to the Muncipality. On the contrary the position seems to have been precisely reverse. I do not find that it is shown in any way that the Committee persevered with this case knowing or suspecting it to be untrue and I do not find it established that the object in instituting the proceedings was primarily to annoy the accused.

I, therefore, set aside the order of compensation. The sum, if paid, will be refunded.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 16th January 1922.

Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Appellants,

Mr. S. N. Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—The plaintiffs are appellants. They are (1) Francis Henry Manisty, (2) James Boyd Simpson Hill and (3) Henry Walter Dunlop Hill. The defendants are (1) Julian Veitch Jameson and (2) Mrs. Georgina Gertrude Munro Jameson. Defendant No. 2 is the wife of defendant No. 1.

The plaintiffs brought an action to enforce a simple mortgage set forth in an Indenture (Ex. 1), dated the 15th January 1920, and confirmed by an agreement (Ex. 2), dated the 12th March 1920. The indentures were executed by both the defendants in respect of a debt of Rs. 21,000 due from Mr. J. V. Jameson alone to the plaintiffs, and as security for re-payment of the debt Mr. Jameson mortgaged the whole of the Jalaha Indigo Concern which belonged to him and Mrs. Jameson mortgaged her undivided two-sixteenth share in an Indigo Concern called the Karnowl Indigo Concern. The loan was to be re-paid in four instalments, namely,

(1) Rs. 3,000 on the day of handing over the indenture;

(2) Rs. 6,000 on the 30th June, 1920;

(3) Rs. 6,000 on the 31st December 1920; and

(4) Rs. 6,000 on the 30th June, 1921, with a stipulation that in case any of the instalments remained unpaid on the due date the mortgagees will have a right to take action on the Indenture to recover the whole of the balance due after giving the said Mr. Jameson one month's notice in writing of their intention to do so. The mortgagor, however, had a right to pay any instalment or any part thereof before the date mentioned as that on which it falls due. As Mrs. Jameson was not the principal debtor it was stipulated for her benefit that as soon as the total amount due under the mortgage became less than Rs. 12,001 and the rents due to the Bettiah Estate on account of the lease hold properties—whether mukarrari or otherwise—shall have been paid the liability of Mrs. Jameson under the Indenture shall cease and determine and thereafter the remaining amount unpaid shall continue to be the first charge on Mr. Jameson's Jalaha Indigo Concern alone.

The first instalment of Rs. 3,000 was paid on the day the mortgage indenture was executed; i. e., on 15th January 1920; the second instalment of the 30th of June 1920 was not paid on the due date. On the 27th September 1920, Rs. 3,500 was sent by Mr. Parmer on behalf of Mr. Jameson to Mr. J. B. S. Hill through one Mr. Kasturi Lal and received by Mr. Hill on the 28th September 1920 (receipt Exhibit 3). Mr. Parmer did not direct as to whether the said sum of Rs. 3,500 was to be credited towards the mortgage loan or the personal loan which admittedly Mr. Jameson owed at that time to Mr. J. B. S. Hill. On the 8th November Mr. Parmer sent another sum of Rs. 3,000, stating in his letter (Ex. 9) of that date that it was paid on account of the mortgage on behalf of Mr. Jameson. On the 18th November J. B. S. Hill intimated to Mr. Jameson by his letter of that date (Ex. 4) that he had appropriated Rs. 2,083 due to him on account of the personal loan from Mr. Jameson out of Rs. 3,500 and the balance together with Rs. 3,000 was credited towards the mortgage loan, thus leaving a balance of Rs. 2,524-4 due in respect of the June kist under the mortgage. He asked him to send this sum so as to clear off the June kist. On the 25th November 1920 Mr. Parmer as Manager of the Jalaha Indigo Concern wrote a letter (Ex. 12) to Mr. J. B. S. Hill on behalf of Mr. Jameson, sending Rs. 1,515-12-6 along with two statements of account up to the 27th November 1920; (1) for the personal loan and (2) for the mortgage (Exs, 12 and 12-b respectively). He credited the entire sum of Rs. 6,500 aforesaid towards the mortgage loan, and out of Rs. 1,515-12 6 he credited Rs. 541 towards the mortgage and the balance of Rs. 974-12-6 towards the personal loan, thus reducing the loan account to Rs. 1,200 and the mortgage to Rs. 11,900. As the mortgage loan was brought down under Rs. 12,000 he claimed in his letter the release of Mrs. Jameson's undivided two sixteenth share in the Karnowl Indigo Concern in accordance with the stipulation in the mortgage bond, the kist due to the Bettiah Estate having been paid in full on the 30th September 1920 on account of the lease hold properties and mukrrarri. Mr. Hill acknowledged the letter and the sum of Rs. 1,515-12-6 on the very day he received them per letter (Ex. A) and said that as he was going that night to the mela he would send his reply later which he did on the 9th December (Ex. 10). In this letter he credited the aforesaid Rs.1,515-12-6 towards the unpaid amount of June kist referred to in his letter of the 18th November (Ex. 4) reducing it to Rs. 1,008 7-6 (i. e., Rs. 2,524-4 minus Rs. 1,515-12 6). He insisted upon the appropriation made by him in his earlier letter of the 18th November on the ground that Mr. Jameson had promised payment of his personal loan in June. He also pointed out certain small inaccuracies in the accounts given by Mr. Parmer.

The December kist of Rs. 6,000 fell due on the 21st December and was not paid. Mr. Hill accordingly on the 9th January 1921 wrote a letter (Ex. 6) to Mr. Jameson stating that as the balance of June kist according to his letter of the 9th December and also the December instalment were not paid he would give due notice that if the full amount was not paid within a month he would take action to realise the whole amount of the mortgage under the terms of the deed. He sent the notice that very day (Ex. 13) which was received by Mr. Jameson on the 14th January per acknowledgment (Ex. 5). On the 13th February 1921 Mr. Jameson wrote to Mr. Hill refusing to accept Mr. Hill's mode of appropriation of the payments made by him and asking him to appropriate the same in the manner stated by Mr. Parmer in his letter of the 25th November. He also asked him to release the Karnowl Indigo Concern of his wife from the mortgage. Mr. Hill wrote back to him (Ex. 11) on the 19th February refusing to accede to his request and insisting upon his right to appropriate Rs. 3,500 paid in September 1920 towards his personal loan inasmuch as it was not suggested to him that it was to be credited to the mortgage account.

Mr. Hill brought his suit to enforce the mortgage against both the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Jameson, inasmuch as according to him Rs. 1,008-7-6 was due to him in respect of the June kist of 1920 and Rs.12,000 for the December kist of 1920 and June kist of 1921 making a total of Rs. 13,008-7-6, which with interest on the date of the suit amounted to Rs. 13,265-12-5.

The defendants filed separate written statements. The principal contention, however, on their behalf has been that the plaintiffs ought to have credited the entire sum of Rs.3,500 paid on the 27th September 1920 to the mortgage account instead of crediting only a portion of it, namely, Rs. 1,417 after paying off the personal loan of Mr. J. B. S. Hill amounting to Rs. 2,083, and that the plaintiffs' claim should thus be reduced which would bring down their claim to less than Rs. 12,000 on the 8th of November 1920 the date on which another sum of Rs. 3,000 was paid. Accordingly, on behalf of defendant No. 2 it was contended that her liability under the mortgage ceased and determined and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree against her own share in the Karnowl Indigo Concern. The other pleas of the defendants were of minor importance as the issues framed would show, and the Court below decided those issues against them. They do not arise in this appeal.

The principal contentions of the defendants referred to above gave rise to the following issues:—

"Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to credit Rs. 3,500 towards the loan account as alleged by them ?" (Issue No. 3) Did the defendant No. 1 promise to pay up the loan account in June? If so, does it entitle the plaintiffs to credit Rs 3,500 to the loan account?" (Issue No. 4).

The Court below decided the two issues together and held that the defendant No. 1 had promised to pay the personal loan to the plaintiff No. 2 along with the June instalment of 1920 but that the plaintiffs were not entitled to credit any amount out of the sum of Rs. 3,500 against the loan account and ought to have credited the same towards the mortgage account. Accordingly, the Court below reduced the claim of the plaintiffs to Rs. 11,900 on the 8th of November 1920 as contended for by the defendants and as this sum was under Rs. 12,000 and the arrears of rent due to the Bettiah Estate were paid up the Court below released Mrs. Jameson and Mr. Karnowl Indigo Concern from the mortgage.

The plaintiffs have appealed against this decision. Mr. Jameson has not appeared in this Court, and the appeal is resisted only by Mrs. Jameson.

The only question before us is whether Mr. J. B. S. Hill, one of the plaintiffs, was entitled to appropriate Rs. 2,083 out of Rs. 3,500 paid on the 27th of September 1920 towards his personal loan then due from Mr. Jameson. In order to appreciate the point it is necessary to give shortly a history of both the personal loan due to Mr. J. B. S. Hill, one of the plaintiffs, and the mortgage-debt due to him along with the other two plaintiffs, Messrs. F. H. Manisty and H. W. D. Hill.

It appears from an agreement (Ex. 17), dated the 27th January 1919, that the three plaintiffs and the defendant Mr. Jameson were owners of the Jalaha Indigo Concern. Mr. J. B. S. Hill had advanced from his own pocket a large sum of money for the outlay of the said concern during the year 1915 which together with interest amounted to Rs. 8,964-7-9 on the day the agreement was executed. The plaintiffs and the defendant Mr. Jameson hypothecated the whole of the indigo made by the Jalaha Concern in 1918, which on the day of the agreement was lying in the godowns of Messrs. Moran and Company and Messrs. Thomas & Company, Calcutta, weighing 28 maunds, 25 seers and 8 chhataks as security for re-payment of the aforesaid loan of Rs. 8,964 7-9 due to Mr. J. B S. Hill, one of the proprietors. By the agreement the proprietors of the Concern promised to pay the amount due with interest on demand, or, if no demand was made, then within one month from the date of the agreement.

The Indenture (Ex. 1), dated the 15th January 1920, on foot of which the mortgage action was brought, shows that Mr. Jameson had an undivided half in the Jalaha Concern. The remaining eight annas belonged to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sold their 8-annas share to Mr. Jameson. Thus Mr. Jameson became the proprietor of the 16 annas of the Jalaha Indigo Concern. On the date of the mortgage indenture Rs. 12,000 out of the purchase-money due to the plaintiffs remained unpaid, and Rs 9,000 out of the plaintiffs' share of monies outstanding and owing to the said concern was also due to the plaintiffs from the Concern. Thus, Mr. Jameson as 16 annas proprietor of the Jalaha Indigo Concern owed to the plaintiffs Rs. 21,000. The negotiations for the sale of the plaintiffs' share in the Jalaha Indigo Concern to Mr. Jameson were carried through Mr. J. B. S. Hill as is apparent from Mr. Jameson's letter (Ex. 8), dated the 15th October 1919. While the negotiations were going on Mr. J. B. S. Hill insisted on having some definite date of payment of his personal loan fixed, and Mr. Jameson as proprietor of the Jalaha Indigo Concern agreed to fix the 30th of June as the date on which the personal loan of Mr. J. B. S. Hill would be re-payable whether the hypothecated indigo was sold by that date or not: vide Exs. 7 and 8, dated the 11th and 15th October 1919 respectively. They hypothecated indigo lying in the firms referred to in Ex. 17 was in the meantime sold and the sale proceeds were paid to Mr. J. B. S. Hill to the credit of his personal loan account. The indenture was discovered to be defective for want of valid attestation and negotiations for curing the defects arose. When this was going on, Mr. J. B. S. Hill insisted on payment of the balance of his personal loan and before the agreement (Ex. 2) curing the defects in the mortgage indenture and confirming it was executed on the 12th March 1920, Mr. J. B. S. Hill obtained from Mr. Jameson a definite promise that his loan would be paid at the same time as the June kist of 1920. In his letter (Ex. 15), dated the 8th March 1920 Mr. Jameson says "I propose to pay the balance of your loan at the same time as the June instalment of 1920." This was in reply to Mr. Hill's letter (Ex. 16) of the same date.

Thus when Rs. 3,500 was paid on the 27th September 1920 Mr. Jameson owed to Mr. J. B. S. Hill Rs. 2,083 under the personal loan account (vide the account given in Ex. 4). The June kist under the mortgage payable to Mr. J. B. S. Hill and the other plaintiffs had become over due. Mr Parmer on behalf of Mr. Jameson sen Rs. 3,500 on the 27th September 1920 pe Kasturi Lal. Mr. J. B. S. Hill was not a all told as to how this money was to be appropriated and whether it was paid towards the mortgage-debt or the personal loan. Mr. Parmer subsequently sent Rs.3,000 on the 8th November 1920 with a letter in which he ear-marked the payment as being "on account of the mortgage on behalf of Jameson." In these circumstances Mr. Hill out of Rs. 3,500 first paid off his personal debt of Rs. 2,083 and appropriated the balance towards the mortgage-debt due to himself and the other plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge says that he had no right to do this although he holds that "the money due on the loan account was promised by Mr. Jameson to be paid on the 30th June 1920" and that "Mr. Parmer the Manager of the Jalaha Concern on behalf of Mr. Jameson, however, sent Rs. 3,500 to Mr. Hill without any intimation as to how the money was to be appropriated, whether towards the loan account or the mortgage account......................" and that "Kasturi Lall who had taken the said loan to Mr.Hill have not been examined to prove any verbal intimation"; yet the learned Subordinate Judge refuses to accept the contention of the plaintiffs that "they had a right of an option to credit it towards any of the debts and, therefore, they preferred clearing off the loan account to the mortgage account." Argues the learned Subordinate Judge "the money due under the loan account was a debt due from Mr. Jameson and not from Mrs. Jameson to the plaintiff No. 2 only and not to all the plaintiffs and that the money sent was in excess of the amount due under the loan account and the June kist of the mortgage was also due. The plaintiff No 2 alone had no option to clear off his loan account first and leave the balance to his mortgage loan." The fallacy in the latter portion of the argument is obvious. On the day the sum of Rs. 3,500 was received by Mr. J. B. S. Hill plaintiff No. 2 it was not sufficient to pay off the June kist of Rs. 6,000, whereas his personal debt was only Rs. 2,083 which was less than Rs. 3,500. The personal loan could thus be fully satisfied out of the sum of Rs. 3,500 received, and the June kist could not be satisfied in full, it had already become overdue. There was no meaning in paying off the mortgage-debt because the liability under the mortgage for payment of the kists had occurred on account of the default of the June kist and would have continued even if Rs. 3,500 was credited towards the June kist. The first portion of the argument that the mortgage debt was payable by both Mr. and Mrs. Jameson to plaintiff No. 2 and the other plaintiffs whereas the personal loan was payable by Mr. Jameson only to Mr. J. B. S. Hill alone, overlooks the fact that the mortgage-debt was due from Mr. Jameson and Mrs. Jameson had only given her property as security for the sake of her husband. It was Mr. Jameson as proprietor of the Jalaha Indigo Concern who had to pay the mortgage loan and as such he had also to pay the personal loan to Mr. J. B. S. Hill advanced to the factory. Therefore, Mr. Jameson was the debtor with respect to both the loans and both the liabilities were incurred by him as proprietor of the Jalaha Indigo Concern. The payment of Rs. 3,500 was made by Mr. Parmer as Manager of the Jalaha Concern on behalf of Mr. Jameson. All though there were three mortgagees Mr. J. B. S. Hill was acting on behalf of all the plaintiffs and was practically representing them, and the plaintiffs do not dispute his right to appropriate the payment towards his personal loan in preference to the mortgage loan.

From Mr. Hill's letter (Ex. 4) dated the 18th November 1920 wherein he stated that he had appropriated the aforesaid sum of Rs. 3,500 towards the personal loan account and from the fact that no ledger or cash book showing the appropriation had been produced, the learned Subordinate Judge infers that the loan had not been cleared off on the date of the receipt of Rs. 3,500." He says "it struck Mr. Hill to appropriate the said sum towards the loan account when he received Rs. 3,300 on the 18th November 1920 from Mr. Parmer to be credited towards the mortgage account, but as a matter of fact he had not done so on the date he received the said sum of Rs. 3,500." The inference drawn is not legitimate; the letter only shows how he had already appropriated the amount. Suppose for the sake of argument that Mr. J. B. S. Hill had not appropriated the said amount earlier than the 18th November, his right to appropriate it towards any of the debts had not extinguished, it continued up to the time that he had communicated the appropriation to Mr. Jameson. Admittedly he was not done so before he wrote the letter of the 18th November wherein he stated how he had appropriated the said sum of Rs. 3,500.

In the case of Simson v. Ingham (1) it was laid down that the right of the creditor to appropriate the payment towards any of the debts due to him continues up to the time that he intimates the appropriation to the debtor. The decision goes further and holds that the creditor has a right to cancel his own appropriation towards a particular debt and to appropriate subsequently towards another debt provided he does so before he had communicated the previous appropriation to the debtor. Referring to the aforesaid case Sir Henry Cunningham and Sir Horatio Shepherd in their commentary on the Indian Contract Act under s. 60 observe: "This is contrary to the rule of civil law according to which an appropriation, whether by debtor or creditor is necessarily made at the time of payment." The learned Subordinate Judge tries to get round the principle enunciated in the aforesaid case by holding that it was the intention of Mr. Jameson to pay of the mortgage-debt, and this intention he infers from the fact that the penalty for non-payment of the personal debt in June was only the charge of interest according to the stipulated rate, whereas the penalty for non-payment of June kist of the mortgage was more serious; consequently, says the learned Subordinate Judge "the payment of the mortgage-money was prominent and predominent in the mind of the mortgagors and, therefore, they would have naturally wished to pay off the June kist of the mortgage. The circumstances are such that they clearly implied that the payment was not only intended but made to be applied to the liquidation of the mortgage-debt." It seems to be an assumption only on the part of the learned Subordinate Judge to say that the payment was "made to be applied to the liquidation of the mortgage debt." He has already held that there was no intimation given to Mr. J. B. S. Hill as to how the money was to be appropriated. Mr. Parmer, who sent the money, and Kasturi Lal, who carried the money, have not been examined in the case. Mr. Jameson in his evidence does not say that the payment was expressly made towards the mortgage-debt. He only says that he intended to send the loan account and the June kist of the mortgage money and possibly he may have directed Mr. Parmer to send the June kist of the mortgage-debt, but he confesses that he has no copy of the letter he wrote to Mr. Parmer pressing him to make arrangements for the payment of the mortgage-money of the June kist." He says "I have no proof to show that I wrote to Mr. Parmer to clear off the June kist of the mortgage-debt first".

It seems that a fair inference from the evidence can be raised that Mr. Jameson instructed Mr. Parmer to send Rs. 3,500 without any direction or without any intention for which of the debts the money was to be appropriated. This is the reason why the money was paid without any intimation as to appropriation. It is more likely that it was intended that the money be appropriated towards the personal loan account as naturally Mr. Hill would do, insistent as he was from the very beginning that his loan account should be satisfied and he had obtained a solemn promise from Mr. Jameson to that effect.

Therefore, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge referred to above is erroneous.

Suppose for a moment that Mr. Jameson intended that the said sum of Rs. 3,500 should be appropriated towards the June kist of the mortgage, but his intention will not be of any avail until it was communicated to the creditor. The principle of appropriation of payments made by a debtor who owes several debts, to a creditor has been enunciated in the case of Cory Brothers & Compauy, Limited v. Owners of the Turkish Steamship, "Mecca" (2) where it has been laid down that the right to adopt the manner of appropriation rests directly with the debtor. In the absence of any direction of the debtor it is open to his creditor to appropriate the payment towards any of his debts, and, lastly, if there is no intimation by the debtor at the time of payment with regard to appropriation by the creditor, then it is open to the creditor to insist upon the appropriation being made in the chronological order in which the debts stand. These principles have been so firmly established that it is needless to refer to any further authority. Suffice it to say that the principles have been crystalised in the Indian Contract Act in ss. 59 to 61. The present case lies in a nutshell. Mr. Jameson as proprietor of the Jalaha Indigo Concern owed two debts to Mr. J. B. S. Hill: (1) on account of his loan advanced to the Jalaha factory at a time when he along with the other plaintiffs and Mr. Jameson was the proprietor and which subsequently became the sole property of Mr. Jameson; and (2) the mortgage-debt due to Mr. J. B. S. Hill and the other two plaintiffs in the case, Mr. Hill acting on their behalf and representing them throughout the transactions. Mr. Jameson had promised to pay off the personal loan along with the June kist under the mortgage. In September 1920, long after the June kist had become due Mr. Jameson paid Rs. 3,500 on the 27th September 1920 to Mr. Hill without telling him towards which of the two debts payment was to be appropriated. In the absence of any such direction Mr. Hill appropriated the same towards the full satisfaction of his personal loan and the balance towards the mortgage-debt, and he indicated the same to Mr. Jameson on the 18th of November, 1920. Mr. Jameson subsequently asked him to credit the entire sum of Rs. 3,500 towards the mortgage loan, and not towards his personal loan. Mr. Hill refused to do so. Thereafter Mr. Jameson on the 13th January 1921 objected to the appropriation and asked Mr. Hill to appropriate the entire sum of Rs. 3,000 towards the June kist, which Mr. Hill refused in the following words:—

(2) (1897) A. C. 286.

"With reference to your letter, dated 13th instant. I have to write to you that I am sorry I cannot accept the suggestions made in your said letter.

At the time of the payment of Rs. 3,500 in September, 1920, it was not suggested to me that the payment should be first credited to the mortgage account B or that any specified amount should be credited to the mortgage account B. I had the right to credit to whichever account I liked B and as I considered it proper to credit it first to the loan account I did so and you were duly informed about it. You are wrong in thinking now that you have a right to ask me to credit any portion of the sum credited to the loan account to the mortgage account".

The position taken by Mr. Hill in this letter is fully in consonance with the law on the subject as stated above. Therefore, Rs. 3,500 was properly credited towards the personal loan account of Mr. J. B. S. Hill. The result of this appropriation is that the mortgage-debt due at the date of the suit, or when the cause of action arose, was not under Rs. 12,000 but it was as claimed in the plaint and, therefore, Mr. Jameson or Mrs. Jameson or her two sixteenth share in the Kornowl Indigo Concern could not be exempted from the mortgage. The view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong, and differing from him I set aside the decree made by him and decree the appeal with costs.

Accordingly, we decree the plaintiffs' suit in terms of the reliefs sought for by them against both the defendants and the properties mortgaged in the mortgage indenture (Ex. 1), dated the 15th January, 1920. The plaintiffs will get an ordinary mortgage decree with six months' grace allowed to the defendants to pay up the principal sum claimed with interest at the stipulated rate, failing which the plaintiffs will be entitled to sell the properties mortgaged. After the expiry of the period of grace interest will run at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The plaintiffs will also get a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the C. P. C.

Bucknill, J.—I should like to add only a few words to the judgment of my learned brother. I think that the law on this subject is clear. In the House of Lords in the case of Cory Brothers & Company Limited v. The owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (2) his Lordship Lord Macnaghten there states in clear language that when a debtor is making a payment to his creditor he may appropriate the money as he pleases and that the creditor must apply it accordingly. But if the debtor does not make any appropriation at the time when he makes the payment the right of appropriation devolves upon the creditor. In the old and famous case of Devaynes v. Noble (3) (usually known as Clayton's case) which was decided in 1816, it was held that the creditor was bound to make his election at once or within a reasonable time. But Lord Macnaghten observes that it had long been held and is now quite settled law that the creditor has the right of election up to the very last moment. It was also stated in the same case decided in the House of Lords to which I have already referred that the appropriation of the money is governed, not by any rigid rule of law, but by the intention of the creditor, expressed, implied or presumed, and the same principle is no doubt applicable to appropriation by the debtor. Now in this appeal now before this Court it is common ground that there certainly was no express information given by the debtor to the creditor as to the appropriation of the sum; nor, so far as I could see, was there any ground for suggesting that with regard to this sum (the appropriation of which is now in dispute) there had taken place anything from which the creditor could or should have extracted any implied intention on the part of the debtor as to the method of its appropriation. Still less was there, in my view, any presumption which could be fastened upon the creditor that the debtor's intention was that the money should be appropriated to the later of the two specific debts i. e, to the mortgage-debt. Under these circumstances it appears to me that in this case, as the law stands, it is hopeless to argue and it cannot seriously be maintained that Mr. Hill could not have had the right of appropriating this sum in whatever manner he might have thought fit.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL
No. 2894 OF 1925.
March 20, 1926.
Present:—Mr. Justice Harrison.
DUKH BHANJAN RAM—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT
versus
SARFRAZ KHAN—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 40—Arrest of judgment-debtor, when can be refused—Judgment-debtor's right to apply for insolvency—Duty of Court.

Unless a Court finds that the judgment-debtor is unable to pay his debts because of poverty or any other sufficient cause, the decree-holder is entitled to have the warrant of arrest issued against the judgment-debtor, even though the latter be prepared to farm out his land to the decree-holder or have his salary attached.

Hargobind-Kishan Chand v. Hakim Singh & Co., 93 Ind. Cas. 54; 6 L. 548; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 110, followed.

When judgment-debtor is brought before the Court, it is the duty of the Court to inform him that he can avoid arrest by presenting a petition in insolvency.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 16th June 1925, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 5th May 1925.

Lala Parkash Chandra, for the Appellant.
Lala Devi Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, refused to order the arrest of three judgment-debtors. He gave no finding under O. XXI, r. 40 of the C. P. C., that they were unable to pay their debts because of poverty or any other sufficient cause and he declined to issue warrants, because the decree-holder refused to take a farm of the judgment-debtors' land. The appeal was dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that it was open to the decree-holder to realise half of the salary of the principal judgment-debtor and also to take a farm of his land. This was no sufficient reason as explained in Hargobind-Kishan Chand v. Hakim Singh & Co. (1), and indeed the judgment-debtors have never even stated that they are unable to pay the decree but simply that they do not wish to beyond being prepared to farm their land, while Sarfraz Khan, one of the judgment-debtors and a Kanungo, has no objection to half of his salary being attached. There is nothing on the record to show that the judgment-debtors were informed that they could avoid arrest by presenting a petition in insolvency, and before issuing warrants I think it will be well for the Senior Subordinate Judge to issue a fresh notice under O. XLI, r. 37 of the C. P. C., and to explain to the decree-holder that this is so.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the order refusing unconditionally to issue warrants and direct the Executing Court to proceed in this manner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent is the landlord of a non-transferable occupancy holding. His case is that there were two non-transferable occupancy holdings which were amalgamated and formed into one occupancy holding and held by Durga Charan and other heirs of the original tenant. He found that the defendant was in possession of the holding whereupon he brought the present suit for recovery of possession from the defendant who was a trespasser according to him. The defence was that there was a mortgage of a portion of the holding by the original tenant in favour of a third party and that in execution of the decree upon that mortgage the defendant purchased the portion mortgaged and was in possession thereof. He further stated that the entire holding was not mortgaged and that the original tenant did not leave possession of the portion of the holding not mortgaged. The controversy between the parties was limited to the question as to whether the mortgage-deed and the decree thereon covered the entire holding or whether they related only to a portion of the holding. In order to prove his contention the defendant produced some copies of the Settlement khatians. It appears that these khatians were not certified copies of the original Settlement khatian but are said to be copies served upon the defendant by the Settlement Officer. When the copies of the khaitans were produced they were received in evidence without any objection being taken by the plaintiff. By these copies of the khatian the defendant attempted to show that one of the plots mentioned in the khatians (Plot No. 996) was not within the mortgage or the decree and, therefore, the whole holding was not transferred to him. His case was that plot No. 2 of the mortgage-deed was not this plot No. 996 but a different plot No. 319, outside that holding. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that the second plot of the schedule to the mortgage is plot No. 996 and, therefore, the whole holding was included within the mortgage and the decree following it. Two objections were taken on behalf of the defendant: (1) that the holding in suit was not a non-transferable occupancy holding but a holding at a fixed rate of rent or a maurasi mokarrari holding; (2) that he was recognised by the plaintiff landlord who demanded rent from him after his purchase. The Trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that the entire holding was not mortgaged and transferred to him. On the other two points the finding of the Trial Court was against the defendant. There was an appeal to the District Court which reversed the decision of the Munsif and held that the sale certificate covered the entire land of both the holdings and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to re-enter. There was a further appeal to this Court by the defendant, which set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and sent the case back for re-hearing of the appeal on all the three points taken by the defendant. At the re-hearing of the appeal the lower Appellate Court has come to the same conclusion as before and held that the defendant purchased the entire holding and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree in ejectment of the defendant. On the other two points the lower Appellate Court has found against the defendant in agreement with the Trial Court.

With regard to the first point, namely, that the holding is maurasi mokarrari holding, an objection is taken on behalf of the appellant to the finding by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that that Court has overlooked the oral evidence on the record in respect of the defendant's plea. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the evidence discloses that the tenancy existed since 1312 and there is nothing to show 'that the tenancy existed before that year'. He has, therefore, held that the defendant has failed to prove uniform payment of rent for a period of 20 years—the suit having been brought in 1919 or 1326 B. S. The defendant contends that there is some oral evidence on the record which the Court should have taken into account and the statement that there is nothing to show that the tenancy existed before 1312 is unwarranted. There is only one witness examined on behalf of the defendant who speaks about this matter. We have looked into his evidence and we think that it does not carry the matter far and the learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to disregard it. He knows nothing of the jama or the creation of it. The vague statement that it existed for a long time is not sufficient evidence in support of the defendant's case. We do not think that there is any defect in the Judge's judgment in so far as the first point is concerned.

With regard to the third point, namely, the recognition by the plaintiff of the defendant as his tenant by demanding rent from him, it has been found on the evidence against the defendant. The learned Judge enters his finding in the following words: I, therefore, do not find even the evidence of an intention to recognise the title of the defendant. My finding on this point too will, therefore, be against the defendant." The learned Advocate for the appellant has fairly admitted that this finding of fact concludes this point.

The second point is of some importance and has given rise to different decisions. The real controversy between the parties, as we have said, is whether plot No. 996 of the Settlement khatian is or is not included in the mortgage and the decree. It may be noted here that the mortgage was executed before the settlement proceedings were commenced. The deed accordingly does not contain the plot numbers, but it is attempted to identify the plots in the schedule to the mortgage-deed with the settlement plots by a comparison of the boundaries. The Trial Court on a comparison of the boundaries given in the mortgage-deed and the decree and those in the Settlement khatian came to the conclusion that the boundaries tally more with the boundaries of plot No. 319 as stated by the defendant than with the boundaries of plot No. 996; and in this view it held that what was mortgaged and purchased by the defendant was the holding minus plot No. 996 and accordingly the original tenants did not part with their entire interest in the holding. The learned Subordinate Judge held that copies of the khatian produced in the case were not certified copies and, therefore, no judicial notice should be taken of them. After making this remark he observes thus: "There is, therefore, no legal evidence on the record on which it can be found that plot No. 996 appertains to the disputed jote and was not sold in execution of the mortgage-decree". This statement that there is no legal evidence on the record on which it can be found that plot No. 996 appertains to the disputed jote, has been challenged before us and we think rightly. The plaintiff himself admits in the plaint that plot No. 2 corresponds to plot No. 996 of the Settlement khatian. The only point in dispute between the parties, therefore, was as to whether plot No. 2 was plot No. 996 as alleged by the plaintiff or was plot No. 319 as alleged by the defendant. The lower Appellate Court did not examine this question from the correct stand point and it is not correct to say that even apart from the khatian there is no legal evidence to show that plot No. 996 was included in the disputed jote. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken into consideration all the other evidence in the case and found that the plots mentioned in the mortgage-deed constituted the entire jote. But his conclusion cannot be considered to be satisfactory in view of the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge has missed the real point in controversy between the parties.

Then with regard to the admissibility of the copies of the khatians produced by the defendant. They were put in in the Trial Court and received without objection. The defendant-appellant contends that if objections were taken in time by the plaintiff on the ground that they were not certified copies the defect could have been cured by putting in the certified copies and as such objection was not taken at the earliest opportunity the plaintiff should not be allowed to take it at a later stage of the litigation; and the Court of Appeal below was not justified in treating the khatians as no evidence at all in the case. For this contention reliance has been placed upon the case of Shahazadi Begam v. Secretary of State for India (1). It may be taken as settled at the present time that where evidence is admitted in the first Court without any objection being taken to its reception and the evidence is admissible as relevant no party will be allowed to object to the reception of such evidence at any later stage of the litigation. Reference may in this connection be made to the case of Chooni Lal Khemani v. Nil Madhab Barik (2). It is also settled that an omission to take objection to the reception of a document which is irrelevant or inadmissible in evidence in the case does not make it admissible, Miller v. Babu Madhab Das (3). In the present case it cannot be said that the khatians are totally inadmissible in evidence or irrelevant. But it is argued on behalf of the respondent that uncertified copies of the khatians could not be received in evidence under s. 65 (e) of the Evidence Act read with the second sub-clause under it. It is argued that only certified copies can be produced as evidence to prove a public document like the Settlement khatians and as no other mode of evidence is admissible under the law, uncertified copies of the khatians should not be used as evidence even though not objected to by the plaintiff. It is not necessary to decide this question in the present case for we are of opinion that this case must go back to the lower Appellate Court for a re-hearing of the appeal and thus the defendant will get an opportunity of producing certified copies of the khatians. There cannot be any doubt that rightly or wrongly the defendant was misled by the omission of the objection to the admissibility of the copies of the khatians produced by him and we think that in the interest of justice and fairness he should be put in the same position as he would have occupied had the objection to the inadmissibility of the documents been taken in proper time.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the case to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal on the second point raised in the case namely, whether the entire holding was the subject of the mortgage and of the purchase by the defendant or whether the defendant purchased and is in possession of only a portion of the holding. The defendant is permitted to put in, if so advised, certified copies of the kkatians of which uncertified copies were put in by him and exhibited in the Trial Court. The appeal will be re-heard on a consideration of such documents and of the remarks made above. It is to be understood that the appeal is to be re-heard upon this point alone. Costs will abide the result.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 53, 118—Hindu Law—Partition, whether transfer—Distinction between transfer and exchange—Mala fide partition in fraud of father's unsecured debt—Decree—Son's share, whether liable to be attached.

A partition cannot be considered a transfer in so far as it does not in effect change the rights of the parties; what it does do is to effect a change in the mode of enjoyment. [p. 283, col. 2.]

Partition in certain aspects approximates to exchange as defined in s. 118 of the Transfer of Property Act, but even so the distinction emerges that in exchange two persons owing two specific properties transfer or convey their respective ownership, one to the other. [ibid.]

Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa, 25 C. 210; 2 C. W. N. 91; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 142, referred to.

A fraudulent partition cannot, however, be regarded as entirely divorced from the principles of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [ibid.]

Ordinarily property taken by a Hindu son in partition cannot be seized in execution of a decree in respect of an unsecured personal debt of the father, but it is liable for the father's debt if it be shown that the partition was made with a view to defraud or defeat creditors. [p. 284, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant Chhotelal, a minor, through his mother Muktabai, filed the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Balaghat, for a declaration that his 4-annas share in Mauza Agarwara, Tahsil Waraseoni, was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of certain decrees obtained by the defendants against his father Tularam.

The main facts of the case have been sufficiently stated in the judgments of the two lower Courts. The Subordinate Judge held that there had been no partition, as alleged by the plaintiff, between him and his father on Akhatij day of 1925; that in February 1923 an imperfect partition was carried through in the Revenue Courts, but that the partition effected was not a bona fide one. He further held that the partition was not effected in the minor's interests but was a fraudulent one carried through for the purpose of defeating the claims of the defendants-respondents. A further finding was that the debts owing to the defendants-respondents had not been incurred by the father Tularam for immoral or illegal purposes. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff's appeal to the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara, also met with no success. The learned District Judge, after a careful survey of the evidence, came to the conclusion that the partition, if it could be regarded as one at all, was a fraudulent one made with a view to defraud or delay the creditors of Tularam, and was, therefore, not binding on the respondents.

These are findings of fact which it is now impossible to challenge in this Court, and indeed, so far as the fraudulent nature of the transaction is concerned, no attempt has been made to argue that the findings of the lower Courts were illegally or improperly arrived at. The case is, no doubt, redolent of fraud, and the preposterous circumstances under which this child, aged 1, is alleged to have separated from his father, taking with him half the property without any responsibility for the heavy debts binding on the estate, are too obvious to require emphasis. The learned District Judge further held, relying on the decision in Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Ayyar (1) that the creditors were entitled to enforce their claims against the separated share of the plaintiff in view of the fact that it had been established as regards the so-called partition that it was a fraudulent one. On these findings the plaintiff's appeal was dismissed and he has now come up to this Court on second appeal.

The main argument offered on behalf of the appellant is that the partition in question cannot be considered a transfer within the meaning of the definition contained in s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. This is so far true, for partition as such does not, in effect, change the rights of the parties. What it does do is to effect a change in the mode of an enjoyment of property. Partition, it is true, in certain aspects approximates to exchange, as defined in s. 118 of the Transfer of the Property Act, but, even so, the distinction emerges that in exchange two persons, owing two specific properties, transfer or convey their respective ownership, one to the other : cf. Gyannessa v. Mubarakannessa (2). At the same time, it is impossible to regard a transaction like the present as entirely divorced from the principles laid down in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Ishwar Lingo Desai v. Dattu Gopal Desai (3) it was held that the partition concerned in that case fell within s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, but the position therein was simplified by the fact that the phraseology of the provision reads as follows: "the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with," and the partition in question, if not a transfer, could at least be regarded as falling within the words "or otherwise dealt with".

In my opinion, therefore, the provisions contained in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be applied proprio vigore here. Reference has been made to the decision in Bali v. Girji (4) as to the right of any co-parcener to claim partition: cf. Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (5). That right is unquestionable, but the argument is entirely beside the point in the present case, where the vital question involved is that this partition has been proved to be a mala fide one entered into for the purpose of defrauding the creditors.

For my own part, I entertain not the slightest doubt but that the present case must be decided on the lines of the principle underlying s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. We have here a so-called partition found by both the lower Courts to be a mala fide one entered into for the sole purpose of defeating the claims of the present respondents. It is settled law that an exception has been grafted on to the general proposition that the property taken by a son in partition cannot be seized in execution in respect of an unsecured personal debt of the father. The exception is that the son's property is liable for the father's debt if it be shown that the partition was made with a view to defraud or defeat creditors: cf. Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Ayyar (1), Vinjanampatti Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (6) and Kulada Prosad Pandey v. Haripada Chattopadhyaya (7) where, as in the present case, the very object, not to mention the effect of the partition, was to defeat creditors, and the share of the separated son is clearly, in my opinion, liable. Even, therefore, although the partition does not come within the letter of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, I am of opinion that, for the reasons given by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court as well as those advanced in this judgment, the respondents are entitled to follow the property, of which the plaintiff is now alleged to be in separate possession, in satisfaction of their debts. I may add that the plaintiff was apparently not even born when the debts in question were contracted.

From another point of view, it only remains to add that, on the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts, there was, in reality no genuine or bona fide partition but only a colourable form of the same. In either event, it is perfectly clear that the plaintiff's suit was liable to failure.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage which has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground of limitation.

In Mouza Sarai Srikant Touzi No. 10752 a 5-annas 4-pies share belonged to Lala Fatah Bahadur and Lala Lal Bahadur. On the 11th of December 1886 they executed a zarpeshgi in respect of a 4-annas share to the plaintiff's mother and the defendants Nos. 11 to 13. On the 28th of March 1892 they mortgaged a 6-pies share to the defendant No. 5 and it seems to have been the case of both parties that this 6 pies was out of the 4-annas given in the zarpeshgi. On the 16th of February 1893 they executed a second mortgage to the plaintiff's mother and the defendants Nos. 11 to 13 in respect of the 4-annas share which had already been given in zarpeshgi in the year 1886 and which included the 6 pies already mortgaged to defendant No. 5. It appears that the remaining 1 anna 4 pies out of 5 annas 4 pies has passed to defendants Nos. 8 to 10. Defendant No. 5 instituted a suit to enforce his mortgage which was Suit No. 50 of 1894. In this suit the subsequent mortgagees were not made parties. A decree was obtained and the mortgaged property viz., 6-pies share was sold on the 26th October 1895 and purchased by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in the farzi name of the defendant No. 4. Subsequently the second mortgagees, namely, the plaintiff's mother and the defendants Nos. 11 to 13 instituted a suit to enforce their mortgage of the 16th of February 1893. In this suit neither the first mortgagee nor the purchasers in execution of his decree were made parties. A decree was obtainted on the 26th February 1896 and in execution of the decree the 4-annas share was sold on the 8th January 1897 and purchased by the decree-holders themselves. The plaintiff's mother being dead, the plaintiff now claims the 4-annas share as her heiress on the allegation that by a private partition she has been allotted the entire 4-annas share and the defendants Nos. 11 to 13 have no interest therein.

The present suit for redemption was instituted on the 17th of January 1919. The contesting defendants, namely, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation, they having been in possession for more than 20 years and the claim of the plaintiff to enforce her second mortgage having been barred by lapse of time.

The learned Munsif held that the suit was governed by Art. 148 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act; and that the plaintiff had, therefore, 60 years to bring the suit from the date when the right to redeem accrued to her. He further held that as the plaintiff's predecessors-in-interest were not made parties in the suit of the first mortgagee, the plaintiff had still the right to redeem. He accordingly made a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge set aside the decree of the Munsif on the ground that although the plaintiff had got the right of redemption as her predecessors-in-interest were not made parties to the suit of the prior mortgagee, but her right was barred by limitation as, in his opinion, the Article applicable to the present suit was not Art. 148, but Art. 132 of the Indian Limitation Act, and he relied upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nidhiram Bandopadhya v. Sarbessar Biswas (1). He accordingly dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation.

Against this decision of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff has come up in second appeal to this Court, and the only question for consideration in this second appeal is as to what is the period of limitation for the present suit.

It is clear that a second mortgagee who has not been made a party to the suit of a prior mortgagee is entitled to redeem the prior mortgage and is not bound either by the decree in the suit of the prior mortgagee or by the sale held in execution thereof. It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that after the sale in execution of the decree of the prior mortgagee, the mortgage was extinguished and the purchasers remained in possession not as representatives of the prior mortgagee but as representatives of the mortgagor; and that, therefore, Art. 148 has no application inasmuch as it provides for a suit against a mortgagee to redeem or to recover possession of the mortgaged property.

In my opinion this contention is not sound. So far as the second mortgagee is concerned, he is not bound by the decree or the sale in enforcement of the prior mortgage. His position as a second mortgagee remains unaffected by the decree and the sale. He was a necessary party in the suit brought by the prior mortgagee and a decree obtained in his absence on the basis of the prior mortgage did not affect his right to redeem the prior mortgage. The fact that the purchaser in execution of the decree of the prior mortgage has been in possession for more than 20 years does not, in my opinion, affect the rights of the second mortgagee to redeem the first mortgage.

The question, however, remains as to whether Art. 132 or Art. 148 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to the present case. In my opinion Art. 132 has no application to the present suit. In the case of Nidhi- ram Bandhopadhya v. Sarbessar Biswas (1) mentioned above the reasoning adopted was that the second mortgagee by his purchase at the sale in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt cannot acquire any right of redemption which he had not as mortgagee. With very great respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to follow this reasoning. The right to redeem the prior mortgage was vested in the second mortgagee by virtue of his being a second mortgagee. This right was not acquired by him by his purchase at the sale in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt. The learned Judges observed that "the omission of the prior mortgagee to include the second mortgagee in his suit has been held by this Court not to deprive the second mortgagee of his right to redeem the prior mortgage, but it cannot be held that this interpretation of the law, which is intended merely to save his right as second mortgagee, gives him any additional right, or extends the period during which, under the law, he can sue to enforce his rights. The right to redeem was held not to be lost. It was not held, and, in our opinion, it was intended to be held, that a fresh period to enforce his right to redeem under his mortgage was given to him from the date of the purchase. We hold that Arts. 134 and 148 of Sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act have no application in this case. The Article that applies is Article 132 of that Schedule under which limitation begins to run from the date when the mortgage-debt became due". I regret I am unable to agree with this reasoning. Once it is conceded that the second mortgagee had still the right to redeem and was not affected by the sale in execution of the prior mortgage, it must necessarily follow that whatever right the second mortgagee had before the sale in execution of the decree on the prior mortgage remained in tact. Under Art. 148 the second mortgagee had 60 years to redeem the first mortgage and this right was consequently not affected by the sale in execution of the decree upon the prior mortgage. Article 132 provides for enforcement of payment of money charged upon immoveable property. The second mortgagee's right of redemption cannot, in my opinion, be considered to be a right to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. The second mortgagee in a suit for redemption does not seek to recover the money due to him upon his second mortgage. This Article has, therefore, no application to a suit for redemption brought by the second mortgagee.

I am, therefore, unable to accept the view taken in the case of Nidhiram Bandhopadya v. Sarbessar Biswas (1). This case was followed in two cases in the Madras High Court in Bitragunta Appayya v. Addanki Venkataramanayya (2) and Lakshmanan Chettiar v. Sella Muthu Naicker (3) and the reasoning adopted in these cases is similar to the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges in Nidhi Ram's case (1). The Lahore High Court has, however, differed from the view taken in Nidhi Ram's case (1) in Basanta v. Indur Singh (4). That Art. 148 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act applies to the present case is supported by the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Priya Lal v. Bhora Champa Ram (5) and by the Calcutta High Court in Har Persad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (6).

I would, therefore, hold that the present suit was not barred by limitation and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for redemption.

The question remains what should be the form of the decree. The learned Munsif has ordered that the plaintiff will be entitled to redeem on payment of Rs. 50 together with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of sale that is, 26th October, 1895 to the defendants Nos. 1-3. This sum of Rs. 50 represents the price of the property fetched at the sale in execution of the decree upon the first mortgage. This is not a correct principle upon which redemption should be allowed. The puisne mortgagee is held to be entitled to redeem the prior mortgage on the hypothesis that so far as he is concerned the mortgage has not been extinguished and is still in existence. He must, therefore, pay to the prior mortgagee the entire amount due upon the prior mortgage on an account being taken less the sum of Rs. 50 being the purchase-money at the first sale already paid to him. Upon such payment being made the plaintiff will acquire the right of the prior mortgagee because what he redeems is not the premises but the prior encumbrance and he is entitled not to a conveyance of the premises, but to an assignment of the security.

This would necessitate a remand for the taking of the account and also directions declaring the rights of the parties to redeem each other and relating to other matters which would create complications. The parties have, however, come to terms and desire that a decree be made in the following terms; that the plaintiff's right to redeem be declared, that it be declared that she will be entitled to redeem on payment to the defendants Nos. 1-3 of a sum of Rs. 100 only within three months from this date, that on her failure to do so, the suit will stand dismissed with costs. Each party is to bear its own costs throughout in the event of payment being made by plaintiff within the three months. It is represented that the plaintiff has deposited in the Trial Court a sum of money in accordance with the decree of that Court. If so, and if there be no other objection to her doing so, she will be entitled to take the sum back from the Court.

The appeal be decreed by consent on the above terms. The decrees of the Courts will be set aside and the suit decreed as directed above.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the plaintiffs a firm of merchants at Karachi for rendition of accounts against the defendants who reside and carry on business at Agra and who between October 1922 and July 1924 acted at Agra as commission agents of the plaintiffs.

Various defences have been raised to the suit including the defence that this Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit. The defendants filed along with their written statement a copy of the account between them and the plaintiffs to which objections have been filed by the plaintiffs.

Issues were framed on 15th September 1925 and at the request of the parties the first issue as to the jurisdiction of this Court to try the suit has been heard by me as a preliminary issue. Subsequent to the filing of this suit by the plaintiffs the defendants have filed a suit against the plaintiffs on the same account in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra which has been stayed under s. 10 C. P. C.

The grounds on which the plaintiffs assert that this Court has jurisdiction to try the suit are (a) that the contract of agency was made at Karachi where the plaintiffs received and accepted the defendants' offer to act as their agents (b) that in pursuance of the contract of agency the defendants had to deliver goods to the plaintiffs at Karachi (c) that the plaintiffs had to pay and did pay for these goods at Karachi (d) that accounts in respect of the agency had to be settled at Karchi.

The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that no part of the cause of action has arisen within the jurisidction of this Court that the defendants reside and carry on business at Agra that the contract of agency was made at Agra that all payments were to be made at Agra that all transactions took place in Agra and that the accounts had to be settled there. Their position is further amplified in para. 1 of their written statement which runs as follows: —

"With reference to para. 1 of the plaint it is submitted that there was a commission agency account between the parties in respect of transactions of purchase of various commodities made by defendants at the request and for and on account of the plaintiffs at Agra and the goods used to be forwarded by the defendants at the risk and cost of the plaintiffs, some 1197 bags of moong having, however, been sold at Agra at the risk and cost of the plaintiffs as they failed to pay for them and the sale-proceeds debited to them in the account between the parties. The purchase price of the goods used to be paid at Karachi by the plaintiffs either in cash or by means of hundies drawn either by the plaintiffs in favour of the defendants or by the defendants on the plaintiffs and negotiated and their values realised at Agra".

As regards the contention of the plaintiffs that the contract of agency was made at Karachi and that, therefore, this Court has jurisdiction on to try this suit, their case is that prior to October 1922 the firm of Keshowdas Shivparsad of Agra used to act as their commission agents. That one Valabdas was the manager of that firm. That a little before October 1922 Valabdas severed his connection with the firm of Keshowdas Shivparsad and joined the defendants' firm at Agra. That Valabdas then wrote to the plaintiffs at Karachi requesting them to deal with the defendants instead of with Keshowdas Shivparsad. That in compliance with the offer of Valabdas that the defendants' firm should act as commission agents of the plaintiffs the plaintiffs by telegram placed their first order with the defendant firm in October or November 1922.

They thus contend that the contract of agency was made at Karachi where the defendants' offer to act as commission agents of the plaintiffs was received and accepted by the placing of orders with the defendants.

Now this contention of the plaintiffs is contained in the evidence of their proprietor Jeramdas Ex. 5 who has been examined as a witness. Valabdas himself has not been examined and no valid reason has been given for the omission to examine him. An attempt was made to put in evidence several letters alleged to have been written by Valabdas to the plaintiffs containing the offer made by him on behalf of the defendants to act as commission agents of the plaintiffs. These letters had not been produced and filed in Court when they should have been and consequently being objected to by the Pleader for the defendants had mostly to be rejected. The plaintiffs were, however, able to have admitted in evidence two post-cards written by Valabdas to the plaintiffs cards specially prepared for and used by the defendant firm at Agra. These two cards are Exs. 14 and 15 in the case. But I am unable to find therein anything amounting to an offer by Valabdas on behalf of the defendant firm to act as commission agents of the plaintiffs.

Bhagwandas, Ex. 13, the manager of the defendant firm for twelve to fifteen years has given evidence in the case. He denies that Valabdas after leaving the firm of Keshowdas Shivparsad came over to the defendant firm. He states that Valabdas after severing connection with Keshowdas Shivparsad opened a business of his own at Agra. That his only connection with the defendant firm was that he used occasionally to be asked to read Gujrati letters received by the firm and to write letters in Gujrati at the dictation of the manager of the defendants' firm. That besides this Valabdas used to get commission from the defendants on any business influenced by him.

Bhagwandas further alleges that the relations of commission agent and principals between the defendants and the plaintiffs came into existence by reason of an arrangement made with the defendants by Naraindas and brother of Jeramdas Ex. 5 and co-proprietor in the plaintiffs' firm. He states that while the plaintiffs were dealing with Keshwodas Shivparsad as their commission agents Naraindas had occasion to visit Agra. That he then called on the defendants and arrived at an arrangement with the witness that the plaintiffs would engage the services of the defendants as their commission agents severing their connection with Keshowdas Shivparsad.

Though Naraindas has not been examined as a witness in the case I am not inclined to accept the evidence of Bhagwandas that the contract of agency was made at Agra between Naraindas on behalf of the plaintiffs and himself on behalf of the defendants. Bhagwandas admits that Naraindas was a stranger to him prior to the interview at which the alleged arrangement referred to above was made. There does not besides appear to be any reason why the plaintiffs should suddenly elect to sever their business relations with Keshowdas Shivparsad and transfer their business to the defendants with whom they had no acquaintance before.

But at the same time the plaintiffs have, in my opinion, failed to establish that the contract of agency was made at Karachi in the manner alleged by them. The story put forward by Jeramdas does not appear improbable but in the face of the defendants' denial, in the absence of the evidence of Valabdas himself and in the absence too of any documentary evidence on the point, I cannot hold that the plaintiffs have established that it was the offer of Valabdas accepted by them at Karachi which created the contract of agency. Further the plaintiffs allege that Valabdas after leaving the firm of Keshowdas Shivparsad became the manager of the defendants' firm. The fact is denied by the defendants. Therefore even if the probabilities are that it was Valabdas' influence which obtained for the defendants the business of the plaintiffs there is nothing to show that Valabdas was ever authorized to make an offer to the plaintiffs which would legally bind the defendants.

It is next contended that this Court has jurisdiction to try the suit because the defendants had in pursuance of the contract of agency to deliver goods to the plaintiffs at Karachi.

The course of business between the parties was roughly as follows:—

The plaintiffs by telegrams from Karachi requested the defendants at Agra to purchase specified goods on their behalf. The defendants complied with the orders by purchasing the goods. They then handed the goods over to the Railway at Agra and obtained Railway receipts in their own name as consignors and consignees which they endorsed in favour of the plaintiffs and despatched to Karachi.

The relations between the parties were not those of buyer and seller but of principal and agent. There was no contract to deliver the goods ordered at Karachi and the course of business referred to above clearly indicates that all that the defendants had to do with regard to goods ordered by the plaintiffs was to purchase them and hand them over to the Railway for transmission to the plaintiffs. It must be remembered that as the parties were principal and agent goods purchased by the defendants in pursuance of an order from the plaintiffs became the property of the plaintiffs the moment they were purchased and appropriated by the defendants. The defendants were merely bailees thereof till they handed over the goods to the Railway and when they had done so the Railway became the bailees of the plaintiffs' goods The defendants, therefore, had not to deliver the plaintiffs at Karachi the goods ordered by the plaintiffs and the fact that such goods were ultimately received by the plaintiffs at Karachi cannot give this Court jurisdiction to try the suit.

It is next argued that this Court has jurisdiction because the plaintiffs had to pay and did pay for the goods ordered by them and sent to them by the defendants at Karachi.

Here again the argument of the Pleader for the plaintiffs confuses the relation of buyer and seller with that of principal and agent. The parties here were principal and agent the plaintiffs had not to pay for goods ordered by them in the sense that a buyer has to pay for goods ordered by him the defendants paid for the plaintiffs' goods and it was the duty of the plaintiffs to put them in funds to enable them to do so. Now according to the evidence how was this done? Jeramdas first wished the Court to believe that the defendants during the period of the agency sent the Railway receipt and a hundi covering the value of the goods referred to in the said receipt to their agents at Karachi and that the plaintiffs received the Railway receipt from the said agents at Karachi of the defendants on payment to them of the amount of the hundi. This is clearly indicated in his evidence at lines 12-20. In cross-examination he was forced to admit that this procedure was adopted by the defendants only during the first 8-10 months of the agency during which the Railway receipts and hundis were sent to Messrs. Ram Partab Ramchander and Lakhmichand Naraindas as agents of the defendants and that thereafter the defendants used to post direct to the plaintiffs the said Railway receipts and hundis. But the plaintiffs have not been able to substantiate either of these statements of Jeramdas. The best evidence available on the point would have been that of Rampartab Ramchander and Lakhmichand Naraindas the alleged agents of the defendants and their books. Neither of these firms has been called. The defendants emphatically deny that they had any agents at Karachi or that the Railway receipts and hundies covering the value of the goods were dealt with at any time during the period of the agency in the manner alleged by Jeramdas. According to Bhagwandas their munim the defendants in every case placed themselves in funds by drawing hundies on the plaintiffs which in almost all cases they negotiated at Agra. The discount which they had to pay being debited to the plaintiffs. In a very few instances as there was difficulty in negotiating at Agra a hundi drawn on the plaintiffs the defendants drew hundies on Messrs. Rampartab Ramchander of Karachi. The fact that of the three or four hundred hundies admittedly drawn by the defendants on the plaintiffs during the period of the agency all except a very few have been, as a matter of fact negotiated at Agra strongly supports the defendants' contention. It is true that their explanation in regard to three of the hundies drawn on Rampartab Ramchander Ex. 17 does not appear satisfactory but I am satisfied that the evidence of Jeramdas for the plaintiffs is untrue on this point and that the plaintiffs, as a matter of fact, almost invariably during the continuance of the agency permitted the defendants to place themselves in funds to carry out the plaintiffs' orders for goods in the manner alleged by the defendants. It cannot, in these circumstances, be said having in mind that the relations between the parties were those of principal and agent that the plaintiffs had to pay and did pay for the goods ordered by them at Karachi so as to give jurisdictions to this Court to try the suit.

Lastly it is sought to invest this Court with jurisdiction on the ground that accounts had to be settled at Karachi. On the plaintiffs' side there is nothing in support of the contention. On the contrary the defendants establish the fact that during the period of the agency Naraindas co-proprietor in the plaintiffs' firm was at Agra for over three months and while there settled the account for the year 1880 as per Ex. 16 the entry in defendants nakalvahi. The plaintiffs must, therefore, fail on this ground as well.

Now it is pretty well-established that in a suit between principal and agent the cause of action arises where the contract of agency is made or where it was to be performed and where the refusal to account takes place.

The cases of Ram Das Uttam Chand v. Dhanpat Diwan Chand (1) and of Rowther v. Rowther (2) are sufficient authority for the proposition.

In the present case the plaintiffs as I have held before failed to prove that the contract of agency was made at Karachi and I have disbelieved the evidence to the effect that Naraindas at Agra made the contract. In the absence of proof as to where any express contract of agency was made it must be deemed to have been made where the agent receives orders from his principal and accepts the orders thus indicating his consent to act vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 1, p. 147. The case of Firm of Vishinji Goverdhandass v. Firm of Jasraj Girdharilal (3) a ruling of Crouch, A. J. C., is also in point. It, therefore, follows that the contract of agency between the plaintiffs and defendants must be deemed to have been made at Agra where the defendants received and carried out of the plaintiffs' orders. In the present case also the contract had to be performed at Agra for everything that the agents had to do in performance of the contract of agency was done at Agra, and none of their acts as agents were performed outside Agra or at any rate within the jurisdiction of this Court. I have discussed the evidence on this point before and do not propose to repeat myself. In the case of Tika Ram v. Daulat Ram (4) it was held that in absence of a contract to the contrary the accounting and payment of an agent must be necessarily be done where all the business is transacted. In the present case, therefore, the defendants in the absence of any agreement on the point have no account and pay at Agra.

Another point to be borne in mind in connection with the issue of jurisdiction in this case is that though the suit is ostensibly for rendition of accounts by principals against their agents the objections of the plaintiffs to the account filed by the defendants with their written statement and the issues framed in the suit makes it clear that the plaintiffs do not really contest the account so filed by the defendants but charge the defendants with various acts of negligence and misconduct on their part in the conduct of the agency and claim damages from them as resulting from such acts of negligence and misconduct. These alleged acts of negligence and misconduct all took place at Agra.

In such a suit by a principal against his agent the cause of action has been held to arise where the agent committed the alleged acts of negligence and misconduct vide Tika Ram v. Daulat Ram (4) already referred to. Firm of Premji Mulji v. Firm of Tarachand Thawerdas (5) a judgment of Rupchand, A. J. C. and Firm of Chandaji Khubaji v. Firm of Devji Ladha (6) a Bench ruling of our Court.

Before concluding I would briefly refer to the authorities relied on by Mr. Kundanmal for the plaintiffs.

The case of Ponnuswamy Iyer v. Damodar Hunsraj (7) was not between a principal and an agent. The parties therein were buyer and seller. Moreover under the contract between the parties the plaintiffs' firm had to honour and pay at Madras hundies drawn at Calcutta and negotiated outside Madras. It was in these circumstances that the High Court held that a Court in Madras had jurisdiction. In Chemalapatti Venkata Reddi v. Nataraja Setti (8) the Court at Madras was held to have jurisdiction on the ground that the parties intended that the rendering of accounts and payment of money by the agent should be at the place where the plaintiffs resided. Kooverbhan Sukhanand v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (9) has no application. It was a case between buyer and seller on K. P. terms involving the question as to when property in goods sold at Lyallpur passed to the buyer at Karachi. The case of Motilal v. Surajmal (10) is of some assistance to the plaintiffs but is again distinguishable on the ground that Tyabji, J., found as a fact that the correspondence between the parties clearly showed that payment was to be made at Bombay. This was in itself sufficient to give the High Court at Bombay jurisdiction. Lastly with regard to the case of Hemandas Thakurdas v. Devishah Din Dayal (11) a Bench of this Court held on the construction of agreement that the agreement was one to be performed without application and that as it fixed no place or time for its performance it was open to the plaintiff to fix his place of residence as the place of performance. The learned Judges in this case did not proceed on the ground that it was the duty of the agent to find his principal and pay him where he was. In fact as has been held in Tika Ram v. Daulat Ram (4) and Firm of Vishinji Goverdhandass v. Firm of Jasraj Girdharilal (3) referred to above the so called common law rule that a debtor must seek out his creditor has no application to a case between principal and agent.

For the above reasons I hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit. Under O. VII, r. 10, C. P. C., the plaint will be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The defendants are to have their costs from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs shall bear their own costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 593 OF 1925.
December 8, 1925.
Present :—Justice Sir George Claus Rankin, KT.
SASADHAR CHOUDHURY—AUCTION-PURCHASER—PETITIONER
versus
BISHNU NARAIN KUNDA—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 174 (3)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 91, applicability of—Auction-purchaser, if can apply to set aside sale and claim refund.

The prima facie meaning of s. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, is that the principle laid down in O. XXI, r. 91, C. P. C., does not apply to cases of sales held under Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Amrita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand Mukhopadhya, 28 C. 382; 5 C. W. N. 474, followed.

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Burdwan.

Babu Gopendra Nath Das, for the Petitioner.

Babu Panchanon Choudhury, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The question arising on this Rule is a proper one to be decided on revision. One Mahendra was a patnidar, and he was sued for rent by three persons who added as pro forma defendants two others as being co-sharer landlords with the plaintiffs. Decree was obtained and this decree was put in execution by the procedure laid down in Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act as distinct from the procedure of the Code. At the sale on 12th May 1924 the present applicant became the purchaser for a price of Rs. 1,375. He now says that a relation of his had purchased Mahendra's interest in 1922 at a sale under a mortgage-decree and that he has discovered that in the rent suit two other co-sharer landlords were not parties, with the result that the decree was not such a decree as is contemplated in Ch. XIV. Accordingly, he says the sale of 1924 passed to him only the right, title and interest of Mahendra and took effect only as a sale under a money decree. As the whole of Mahendra's interest was transferred by the mortgage sale of 1922 the applicant claims under O. XXI, r. 91 to have the sale set aside and his purchase-money refunded.

This contention has been negatived by the Munsif at Katwa and the District Judge of Burdwan on the ground that s. 174, sub-s. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that "s. 313 of the C. P. C. shall not apply to any sale under this Chapter." The Courts below have accordingly refused to enter into the contest between the petitioner and the opposite parties as to whether Mahendra's landlords were five or seven in number whether his patni was held under an 8-annas share of the zemindari or under the 16-annas and so forth, and they have dismissed his application. They take the view that whether or not the decree was in strictness a rent decree so as to pass to an auction-purchaser the tenure itself or so as to give a charge to the landlords in terms of s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the sale of 12th May 1924 was held under Ch. XIV. Thus notices were issued to co-sharer landlords under s. 158B, the proclamation of sale was under s. 163 issued simultaneously with the order of attachment and contained the particulars required by cl. (a) of sub-s. 2. This in their opinion ends the matter as s. 174 sub s. 3 applies.

The learned Vakil for the applicant contends that Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application except upon the basis of a rent decree and that the absence of this basis has the effect of giving to the auction-purchaser the ordinary rights of an auction-purchaser under the Code, and of rendering inapplicable the special restriction imposed by s. 174 sub s. 3. He cites as illustrating the principles to be applied Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prasanna Sarkar (1) and Sadagar Sircar v. Krishna Chandra Nath (2). He also cites Makar Ali v. Sarfaddin (3) as showing that s. 313 of the Code of 1882 did not exclude an auction-purchaser from seeking the like remedy by suit and that under the present Code the remedy by suit has been taken away.

On behalf of the respondents I am referred to the decision of the Full Bench in Amrita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand Mukhopdhya (4) which was a decision under s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act but in which there are observations upon s. 174 (3). It is contended that before applying the general principles on which the applicant relies the Court must decide a prior question, viz, whether at the instance of an auction purchaser the Court is obliged to go behind the sale and the decree and enquire whether the decree was really in strictness a rent decree.

On the exact question as to s. 174 (3) there does not appear to be any direct authority. One has to consider primarily the exact form of words used by the Legislature in the sub-section. In my opinion "shall not apply to any sale under this Chapter" are words which in their ordinary meaning raise only the question of fact, viz., was the sale held under the Chapter or was it not? The words seem to have the same effect as the phrase in s. 173 (1) where the right to bid without obtaining leave is given to the holder of a decree "in execution of which a tenure or holding is sold under this Chapter". It is tempting to say that "a sale under this Chapter" in s. 174 (3) means a sale in all respects rightfully held under the Chapter. It might mean that, certainly; but I think a little consideration shows that this is not the true construction and that it does not follow from the principles or the decisions upon which the applicant's Vakil relies that his client can at this stage and for this purpose contest the correctness of the procedure adopted in the execution of the decree.

The position is this. Agricultural landlords in Bengal are not allowed to evict their tenants for non-payment of rent; but if in substance all the landlords join or are joined and if they implead all the tenants of a single holding they may obtain a decree for the arrears of the entire rent. Having done so they may take the steps provided by Ch. XIV to bring the holding itself to sale and to do so in such manner as to give themselves a first charge upon it for the rent defeating thereby the rights of persons, e. g., encumbrancers, who were no parties to the rent suit. Whether a decree for rent entitles the decree-holder to adopt these very special proceedings cannot always be finally determined on the mere face of the decree. Facts not appearing by the decree may have to be enquired into. The judgment-debtor has a right to contest the decree-holder's right to proceed under Ch. XIV but of course he must do so at the proper time. If he does not contest the order for sale at the proper time he is bound by the order unless he can show fraud or non-service of notice or some adequate reason. Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prosanna Sarkar (1). A third party whose interests are affected e. g. an incumbrancer can dispute the decree-holder's right to sell under Ch. XIV. For convenience he is in certain cases prevented from raising his objections in the execution itself (cf. s. 170) but he is never bound by the proceedings except there has been a strict rent decree and he can assert his rights by suit [cf. Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prosanna Sarkar (1)]. An auction-purchaser is in a different category. He has a right to claim to be relieved against fraud or misrepresentation and there may be other grounds which entitle him to have the sale set aside. But in a Court sale there is no warranty of title by the decree-holder or by the Court. Until he has been declared the purchaser the suit and the execution proceedings are matters with which he is in no way concerned. When he bids he does so upon the terms laid down by the Legislature, whatever they may be, and if he does not like them he need not bid. In the case of a sale which purports to be held under Ch. XIV what is put up for sale and what he purports to bid for is the holding itself and not the tenant's right and title. The case Amrita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand Mukhopadiya (4) already, cited, shows that even if the decree is a true rent decree he may take nothing by his purcuase and yet cannot set aside the sale. This is clear enough on any view of s. 173 (4). If the decree is not a true rent decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act third parties are not bound by the sale, but the judgment-debtor is presumably bound by it since he has allowed orders for this form of sale to be made against him. Accordingly, if he has any interest in the holding it will pass to the auction-purchaser. But it is another matter altogether to say that if he has no interest the purchaser can set aside the sale. Order XXI, r. 91 applies in principle only to cases where the thing put up for sale is the tenant's interest. This was even clearer on the wording of s. 313 of the old Code. Even in such cases O XXI, r. 91 does not apply where there is any saleable interest left in the judgment-debtor however incommensurate its value may be to the price bid at the auction. No question arises under this Rule as regards fraud or mistake or irregularity. The basis of the Rule is that what has been sold turns out to have no real existence. Now the prima facie meaning of s. 174 (3) is that this principle is to have no application to the man who purports or attempts to buy a holding under Ch. XIV. The facts of the present case may or may not afford an illustration of a bid being made for a holding in the hope of excluding incumbrancers and with full knowledge that the tenant's interest by itself is nothing. But in sales held under Ch. XIV this is quite possible and quite legitimate and I have little doubt that it is extremely common. The Legislature may well have thought it highly inconvenient and even absurd to apply O. XXI, r. 91 to sales held under such conditions. I do not, therefore, consider that it is legitimate to interpret s. 174 (3) in any way which restricts its prima facie meaning. Rampini, J. in the Full Bench case in Amrita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand Mukhopahiya (4) distinctly held that s. 174 prevented such an application being made on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no interest and that the purchaser would lose his money. This was obiter but I think it was correct. On this view it is in no sense an anomaly that the auction-purchaser in such a case as the present should have no right of suit analogous to the right given to purchasers under the Code by O. XXI, r. 91. I do not see how a change in the Code made in 1908 can assist one in interpreting an Act of 1885. If, however, the suggestion is that until 1908 a purchaser who had taken nothing by his purchase at a sale held under Ch. XIV could notwithstanding s. 174 (3) have brought a suit to set aside the sale either on Common Law principles or under s. 315 of the old Code, that is a proposition for which I should want very clear authority. The old law, however, need not be discussed here as in any view the argument is of no avail to the applicant.

In my judgment equally strong reasons exist for giving the same meaning to the words in sub-ss. 1 and 2 of s. 173 as I attribute to their counterpart in s. 174 (3). It is difficult to suppose that a purchaser accused of being the benamdar of a judgment-debtor could be heard to say "Never mind. It was not really a rent decree". Or that on the sale of a holding a competing bidder could object to the decree-holder's bid on the ground that he had not obtained leave and that the decree was not a true rent decree. The Statute endeavours to vary its language in the different sections of Ch. XIV, as it is dealing with different parties and with different stages of the proceedings. It is not perhaps very successful or very clear and in the light of subsequent experience it could probably be much improved; but, as it stands, general principles which apply to the rights of third parties e. g. incumbrancers cannot be assumed to be applicable to judgment-debtors or to auction-purchasers. The stage at which a judgment-debtor asserts an objection and the stage at which an auction purchaser comes upon the scene are most material considerations. In cases dealing with the rights of third parties wide language has at times been used by the Court in asserting the principle that their rights cannot be defeated save upon strict compliance with the requirements of the Statute. In such a case it has even been said broadly that where only one co-sharer has sued the tenant "a sale in execution of such a decree is not a sale under the Act"; Sadagar Sircar v. Krishna Chandra Nath (2). But the Act itself as well as the plain necessities of the case and other decisions of the Court [Amrita Lal Bose v. Nenai Chand Mukhopadiya (4)] show that there is no universal and overriding doctrine that in this very common type of case any person at any time and for any purpose may call upon the Court to decide as to the nature of the decree, and to treat proceedings taken under the Act as proceedings taken under the Code. A mixture of two proceedings may very well be materially different from either and the application of O. XXI, r. 91 to a sale held under the Bengal Tenancy Act is, I think, an instance of this.

The Rule is discharged with costs one gold mohur.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 22, 29, 29-A—Son, meaning of—Personal law, application of—Adoption effect of—Brother, meaning of—Interpretation of Statutes, rule of—Testamentary devise, essentials of—Deed acknowledging former adoption—Interpretation.

Son in s. 22 (1) of the Oudh Estates Act includes a son adopted by ceremony where the personal law of the deceased taluqdar allows such adoption. [p. 298, col. 1.]

Adoption whether by ceremony or deed must carry with it the consequences assigned to adoption by the personal law of the persons who are parties to the adoption, that is to say, among Hindus, the civil death of the adopted boy in the natural family and re-birth in the adoptive family. [p. 299, col. 2.]

Brother in s. 22 (6) of the Oudh Estates Act does not, in the case of Hindus, refer to a natural brother where there has been a valid adoption either by ceremony or by deed of adoption. [p. 399, col. 2]

When it is a question of succession s. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act is to be looked to but when it is a question of determining relationship it is the personal law that is to be resorted to. [p. 298, col. 2.]

It is a rule of interpretation of Statutes that new powers must be conferred by clear and unambiguous language. The more defective and open to objection the language of a Statute, the greater the necessity to apply the canons of construction. [p. 268, col. 1.]

A deed to be a testamentary devise must contain language from which can be inferred an intention to make a devise. [p. 297, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is the first suit tried by this Court in exercise of its powers of original jurisdiction. One Chandra Shekhar succeeded in 1873 to the taluqdari property of Raja Kashi Prasad, an original taluqdar. It is a question in this suit whether he succeeded as heir by reason of his adoption under ordinary Hindu Law, or adoption under the special provisions of s. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, or as legatee. The plaintiffs are the two surviving brothers, and four grandsons of a deceased brother, of Chandra Shekhar. They sue the latter's widow, Rani Subhadra Kaur, who got possession of the property upon her husband's death in 1923. There are also joined as plaintiffs three persons, plaintiffs Nos. 7, 8 and 9, to whom the first six plaintiffs have transferred half their interest in the property claimed, and there are joined as defendants, in addition to the widow, two sons of the brother of Raja Kashi Prasad, as persons claiming to be the nearest reversioners to Chandra Shekhar's estate after the widow. The claim is resisted on the broad ground that plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6, as natural brothers and grandsons of a natural brother of Chandra Shekhar, have no right to the property of the latter, inasmuch as the latter, having been adopted by Raja Kashi Prasad, thereby ceased to belong to his natural family.

It is desirable to set forth a few facts for the proper understanding of this case. The pedigree given in para. 3 of the plaint is admitted. It is also admitted that the bulk, but not all of the property in suit, was talukdari property in the hands of Raja Kashi Prasad. There is a dispute as to whether some of the property should be regarded as an accretion to the estate (or estates) as left by Raja Kashi Prasad and as again left by Chandra Shekhar but in view of the preliminary finding that I propose to adopt in this suit, this matter need not be considered in this judgment. Raja Kashi Prasad was one of the five taluqdars who were actively loyal on the side of the Government in the Mutiny, and his property was exempted from confiscation (see s. 4 of the Act). Apparently, however, he surrendered the estates, which he held before the Mutiny, momentarily to Government for their re-grant under sanads. He was also given grants of other land, and again was decreed other lands at the first regular settlement. He, therefore, was a taluqdar as person in respect of whom some re-settlement had been made in 1868, as a person to whom lands had been granted under sanad, and also as a person to whom lands had been decreed in the First Regular Settlement. None of his property came to him as ancestral, as is stated in the only documentary piece of evidence, to which I shall refer in this judgment, namely, the document headed with the words "Translation of a Will executed by Raja Kashi Prasad, deceased taluqdar of Sissendi, dated the 5th April, 1873." (Exhibit 1). But the fact tha his property was all self-acquired does not appear to me to have any bearing on this case, beyond excluding the plea that his adoption before Act I of 1869 came into force invested him with any title to Raja Kashi Prasad's estate, see Rambhat v. Lakshman Chintaman Mayalay (1). Raja Kashi Prasad's name appears in List 1 as taluqdar of four estates. Sissendi, Bhyrampur, Dadlaha and Lalganj, the first being in the Lucknow District, the second in the Rae Bareli District, the third in Unao and the fourth again in Rae Bareli. As regards the first two estates, he was also entered in List III as a taluqdar whose sanad provided for the rule of primogeniture, and as regards the latter two estates, he was also entered in List V as a grantee whose sanad provided for the rule of primogeniture. In 1866 he adopted Ram Krishna, the great-grandson of his own grandfather, by the rights prescribed for adoption by Hindu Law, who thereafter was called by the name of Chandra Shekhar. The plaintiff's Counsel felt indisposed to admit that this was so, but he did not seriously deny the fact in view of the so-called will of the 5th April 1873, on which he himself relies, and which is evidence of the fact of this adoption under s. 32 of the Evidence Act. It will be observed that this adoption occurred before Act I of 1869 came into force. In 1871 Raja Kashi Prasad willed a few villages to his wife. In 1873 he executed in favour of Chandra Shekhar the so-called Will dated 5th April 1873, marked Ex. 1. The whole of this document is important, but specially notice may be drawn to the following facts recited in it. Chandra Shekhar was adopted when under five years of age, and was eleven and-a-half years old at the time of this deed. The date of the deed was 5th April 1873. Chandra Shekhar, must, therefore, have been adopted in 1866. Raja Kashi Prasad stated that his estate was not ancestral. The object in executing the deed is stated to be that the boy was adopted without any payment to his natural father, and that it was desirable to set forth the circumstances of the adoption in order that no claim might be raised in this respect. A desire is expressed that the Court of Wards should take the estate under its management until Chandra Shekhar's twentieth year. It was hoped that the management might be in fact made over to him in his seventeenth or eighteenth year, but, in any case, formal relinquishment should take place in his twentieth year. The actual words used being, "When he reaches twentieth year he should be made its owner and manager without any condition."

To meet the defence that the plaintiffs cannot succeed to their natural brother in the face of his adoption, the plaintiffs' Counsel has argued as follows: Chandra Shekhar may have been adopted by Hindu ceremony in 1866, but such an adoption is immaterial for determining succession to a taluqdari estate under the first ten clauses of s. 22 of the unamended Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, which govern succession to Raja Kashi Prasad. These clauses only recognise adoption by deed (see cls. 5, 8 and 9). "Son" in cl. (1) does not include an adopted son. Exhibit 1, a document entitled "Will executed by Raja Kashi Prasad, on 5th April 1873", should be construed as a deed of adoption executed in virtue of the power implied by cl. 5 of the section. Alternatively it should be construed as a devise. Even if it be construed as neither, Chandra Shekhar succeeded under cl. 11, which clause will let in a son adopted by ceremony, since such son would have been entitled to succeed under the ordinary law to which Kashi Prasad's family was subject. In any case Chandra Shekhar was either the heir or legatee of Raja Kashi Prasad within the meaning of the inducement to cl. 22. Succession to Chandra Shekhar will be governed by s. 22 of Act I of 1869, as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910. Just as "son" in cl. (1) will not include adopted son, so in cl. (6) "brother" will mean "natural brother". These arguments appear to mean that plaintiff No. 3 as grandson of Chandra Shekhar's eldest natural brother should succeed, but either to secure latitude in argument or for some other purpose of their own, the conclusion asked for in the plaint by the plaintiffs is that "In the presence of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6 no other person can be heir of Raja Chandra Shekhar."

On these arguments the following questions arise:

(1) How should the Will, Ex. 1, be construed?

(2) Does "son" in cl. (1) of s. 22 of Act I of 1869 include a son adopted by ceremony where the personal law of the deceased taluqdar allows such adoption?

---

(1) 5 B. 630 at p. 635; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 415.

(3) Does "brother" in cl. (6) of Act I of 1869 as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910 refer only to a natural brother?

What construction should be placed on the Will Ex. 1?

My finding is that it is merely a declaration of an adoption made by ceremony in 1866, and not an adoption-deed of the kind referred to in cl. (5) of s. 22 of unamended Act I of 1869, or a devise within the meaning of ss. 11 and 13 of that Act. It is important to remember that it must be construed with reference to the provisions of Act I of 1869 as unamended by the U. P. Act III of 1910. It is the plaintiffs' contention that this document should be construed as a deed of adoption effected in virtue of the implied power conferred by s. 22 cl. (5). That section runs,

"Or in default of such son or descendants, then to such persons as the said taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, shall have adopted by a writing executed and attested in manner required in case of a Will and registered, subject as aforesaid."

It appears to me impossible to regard this document as intended to invest Chandra Shekhar with the status of a son. It is merely a document acknowledging the fact of the previous adoption under Hindu Law. In respect of a document of similar terms it was held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in the case. In the matter of Ambai (2), that such a document acknowledging the fact of adoption was distinct from an adoption deed and would not be liable to stamp duty as such. The plaintiffs rely upon the Privy Council case, Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (3). In this case there was in question a deed of adoption executed by a widow by which the widow declared that in accordance with the written permission of her husband, she had adopted a boy, and that he would be the proprietor of the Maharajah's estate and property. This deed was held te comply with the language of cl. (8) of s. 22, and to be an adoption by a writing executed and attested in the manner required in the case of a Will. In the judgment which was delivered by Lord Macnaghten the following words occur:

"The ceremonies of adoption are unimpeached. The deed of adoption is open to no objection."

The language, it is urged, shows that a document declaring a previous adoption to have taken place can be regarded as a deed of adoption. A study, however, of the judgment of Lord Macnaghten will show that no plea was ever taken that the deed was not a deed of adoption because the ceremonial part of adoption had already taken place. In that case again the ceremonies of adoption had taken place on the 8th November 1883, and the deed was executed on the 5th December 1883, that is within a month. So far as I can see, there is nothing to show that the deed was not executed at time of the ceremony, and the law allowed one month within which it could be registered. The case is, therefore, no support to the plaintiffs. More support could perhaps be found in the amendment of cls. (5) and (8) of s. 22 of Act I of 1869 by Act III of 1910. Those clauses in the amended Act appear as cls. (4) and (7). The provision as to attestation and registration is relegated to a new s. 29-A. This new section instead of requiring an adoption deed, requires a declaration of a previous adoption by the necessary deed. It does not seem to me possible to say whether, in making this alteration, the Legislature intended to make more clear what they considered the original sections to have meant, or whether they intended to alter the law. The preamble to Act III of 1910 suggests the former. But I am not in any way bound by the opinion of the Legislature in 1910 as to what the Legislature of 1869 intended. That opinion does not possess even the merits of expositio contemporanea. The plaintiffs' Counsel has also contended that this so-called Will, if not a deed of adoption, should be construed as a deed of devise by Will. He invokes the passage in the document expressing a desire that Chandra Shekhar should be the owner and manager when he reaches his twentieth year. It is clear, however, that this passage does not amount to a devise, but only to the expression of a desire that the Court of Wards should release the property when Chandra Shekhar arrived at the age of twenty. It does not appear to me necessary to refer to the many decisions in which it has been held, that for a deed to be a testamentary devise it must contain language from which can be inferred an intention to make a devise. Reliance by the plaintiffs Counsel has been placed on the case of Nidhoomoni Debya v. Saroda Pershad Mookerjee (4). In that case there was a deed stating that the testator was desirous of adopting a son, and declared that he had adopted a certain person. The deed went on to say that his wives should perform the ceremonies, and that when the boy came to maturity the executors should make over everything to him. The question was whether the deed should be construed as a devise or as a mere authority to adopt. The deed was construed by their Lordships of the Privy Council to be a gift of property by the testator to a designated person coupled with a mere expression of a desire that his wives should perform certain ceremonies. Now in that case no one suggested that there had been an adoption. The intention was obvious that the boy should have the property and the mention of executors made it clear that there had been a devise. In the case of Ex. 1, the intention of the deed is expressed by the executant himself, namely, the desire to set on record that the boy's father would not have any claim to consideration in view of his having allowed his son to be adopted. The declared fact of adoption six years previously is inconsistent with any intention to adopt by means of the deed.

Does "son" in cl. (1) of s. 22 of Act I of 1869 include a son adopted by ceremony where the personal law of the deceased taluqdar allows such adoption?

I hold that it does. Section 2 (19) of the General Clauses Act, 1868, passed a year before the Act of 1869 provides

"And in case of any one whose personal law permits adoption, 'son' shall include an adopted son and 'father' an adoptive father."

This enactment is subject to the condition "unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context". There is nothing repugnant in s. 22, if cl. (5) be construed as providing a special method of adoption, independant of adoption under Hindu ceremony. There is also nothing repugnant in s. 22, if cl. (5) be taken not to refer to Hindus, or any other class, whose personal law (this would include customary law) permits adoption. It is inconceivable that Act I of 1869 should have been intended to take away from Hindu taluqdars their power to regulate succession to their estates by adoption by religious ceremony. We have a reference in s. 29 to the Hindu Law of adoption as a law not affected by s. 22. I agree with the contention of the defendants that, when it is a question of the order of succession, you look to s. 22 of the Act, but that, when it is a question of determining relationship, you must go to personal law. It seems to me quite impossible to work Act I of 1869 without invocation of the personal law. Even the question of a person being a son by birth would depend upon the efficacy of the marriage ceremony of his parents, and this might only be determinable by personal law. I would refer on this question to the unreported case First Civil Appeal No. 118 of 1900 (Thakur Sher Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh), where Mr. Spankie held that the word "son" in cl. (1) did include an adopted son by Hindu ceremony. Later on in First Civil Appeal No. 70 of 1902 (Thakur Sheo Singh v. Musammat Raghubans Kunwar), Mr. Spankie resiled from his opinion, for an insufficient reason as I shall submit in the next paragraph of this judgment, but Mr. Ross Scott took Mr. Spankie's earlier view. This question has never been the subject of decision by the Privy Council. In the case of Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Maharani Indar Kunwar, (3) already referred to, Mr. Arathoon for the appellant, before their Lordships of the Privy Council contended that the authority to adopt contained in a Will was invalid, as the ordinary Hindu Law upon the subject had been superseded by Act I of 1869. Their Lordships held in that case that the adoption was carried out by a valid deed of adoption under cl. (8) of s. 22 and so the question was not settled.

It may be that there are difficulties arising from the interpretation of cls. (5) and (8) of s. 22 of Act I of 1869, being regarded as investing Hindus with an alternative method of adoption to adoption by the method prescribed by Hindu Law. My own opinion is that cls. (5) and cl. (8) of s. 22 should not be held to apply to any class but Muhammadans. It is a rule of interpretation of Statutes that new powers must be conferred by clear and unambiguous language. The more defective and open to objection that the language of a Statute may be, the more necessary it appear to me to apply the canons of construction. Clause (5) of s. 22 should only be held to confer a power of adoption by implication if such a power must necessarily be implied in order that the clause should have any meaning. If the section can have sufficient meaning without finding implied in it the said power, then the implication should not be made. Now, s. 29 of the Act confers a power on Muhammadans to adopt by deed. It is expressed in the form of an enabling enactment and not in that of a restrictive one. Complete meaning can be given to cl. (5) of s. 22 by reference to the power given in s. 29 and this power is only given to cl. (5) of s. 22 by reference to the power given in s. 29 and this power is only given to Muhammadans. It will be noticed that the same remarks apply to cl. (8) of s. 22 since s. 29 also confers a power of adoption by deed upon a Muhammadan widow of a taluqdar. This view is supported by an unreported decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, First Civil Appeal No. 118 of 1900 (Thakur Sher Bahadur Singh v Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh) already referred to. In that case Mr. Spankie after deciding that the word "son" in cl. (1) of s. 22 would include a son adoped by ceremony uses the words:

(4) 3 I. A. 253; 26 W. R. 91; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 653; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 338; Bald. 78 (P. C.).

"Supposing that cl. (5), s. 22 of Act I of 1869 is intended to apply to persons whose personal law permits them to adopt".

It is true that in a later unreported case of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, First Civil Appeal No. 70 of 1902 (Thakur Sheo Singh v. Musammat Raghubans Kunwar), Mr. Spankie resiled from this opinion, and came to the decision that the "son" referred to in cl. (1) meant a natural son only. He based this reversal of opinion upon the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Kooer (5). In that case their Lordships observed, with reference to the fourth clause of s. 22 of Act I of 1869, that it, "like every other clause, in the section, applies to all the taluqdars whose names are included in 2nd or 3rd of the Lists prepared under the Act, whether they are Hindus or Muhammadans, or any other religion." Mr. Spankie held, that this amounted to holding that such a construction must be put on the clauses as would make them of general application. There can be no doubt that cl. (4) of s. 22 does give a power by implication, because there is no section to give it a meaning otherwise. It is quite a different matter with cls. (5) and (8) having regard to the existence of s. 29. In any case, I understand the remarks of their Lordships in this judgment as merely meaning, that in form every clause of s. 22 was of general application, and not as a decision that every such clause was necessarily so in effect. Any remarks as to clauses other than cl. (4) was an obiter dictum. Their attention had obviously not been drawn to the effect of s. 29 of the Act or cl. (5) of s. 22. The adoption of the view that cls. (5) and (8) only refer to Muhammadans, and do not give Hindus an alternative method of making adoption, is free from many of the complications that beset the latter view.

Does "brothers" in cl. (6) of Act I as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910 refer only to a natural brother?

My finding is that it never refers to a natural brother, where there has been a valid adoption either by ceremony or by deed of adoption. My reasons are those already stated when discussing whether "son" in cl. (1) of s. 22 includes an adopted son. The plaintiffs' Counsel, however, contends, that here we have no definition of "brother" in the General Clauses Act to appeal to. But if "father" includes an adoptive father, it follows that "brother" must include an adoptive brother. Adoption whether by ceremony or deed must carry with it the consequences assigned to adoption by the personal law of the persons who are parties to the adoption, that is to say the civil death of the adopted boy in the natural family and re-birth in the adoptive family. To hold otherwise would be to restrict the operation of a deed of adoption to that of a mere devise, whereas its operation is clearly intended to be wider and different.

The issues framed in this case were

(1) Did Chandra Shekhar succeed to Raja Kashi Prasad an original taluqdar under any and which of the clauses of s. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869 ?

(2) Are the plaintiffs the heirs of Chandra Shekhar.

My findings are that Chandra Sekhar succeeded Raja Kashi Prasad under cl. (1) of s. 22. He succeeded as an heir, and on his death in 1923, he would be succeeded by his widow under cl. (7) and after the widow's death by the nearest reversioner under cl. 10 of s. 22 of Act I of 1869 as amended by U. P. Act III of 1910.

The suit, therefore, fails on the preliminary issue:—

"Are the plaintiffs the heirs of Chandra Sekhar?"

It may be mentioned that this issue, in view of the admission by both parties of the so-called Will of Raja Kashi Prasad, was purely a legal issue.

It is accordingly ordered that the suit be dismissed as against all three defendants with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Application for bringing legal representative on record, when may be treated as one for setting aside abatement—Joint decree—Death of party in appeal—Abatement in toto.

Where there has been no reasonable cause for delay in making the application, an application for bringing legal representatives of a deceased party on record cannot be treated as an application for setting aside abatement. [p. 301, col. 1.]

Arur Singh v. Todar Mal, 49 Ind. Cas. 501; 22 P. W. R. 1919, Chuni Lal v. Kala Khan, 67 Ind. Cas. 596; 4 L. L. J. 171; A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 61; 34 P. W. Where a decree may be executed by any one of the plaintiffs, it is a joint decree. [p. 302, col. 2.]

A decree for a declaration that a certain lease has expired and that the plaintiffs are entitled to retain proprietary possession of certain shops and for an injunction to the defendants not to take steps to obtain possession or to interfere with the plaintiffs' ownership and possession is a joint decree as the injunction against the defendants might be enforced by any one of the plaintiffs. [ibid.]

If in an appeal from a joint decree a necessary party dies without his legal representatives being brought on the record the appeal abates in toto.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 8th March 1918.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Moulvi Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals, namely, Nos. 1239 of 1918, 844 of 1923 and 846 of 1923, together with Appeals Nos. 845 of 1923 and 847 of 1923, are all more or less connected with one other.

A preliminary objection has been raised as regards appeals Nos. 1239 of 1918 and 844 of 1923 and 846 of 1923, that these appeals have abated because one Siraj-ud-Din, who was a party to the first two of these appeals is dead and his legal representatives have not been brought on the record within the period of limitation, and one Baij Nath, who was also a respondent in Appeal No. 1239 of 1918 and in Appeal No. 846 of 1923, has died and his representatives have similarly not been brought on the record. As the point raised in both these instances is the same they will be disposed of by one decision.

It seems that Siraj-ud-Din died on the 31st January 1925 and an application to bring his representatives on the record was made on the 4th June 1925. The application was returned for the purpose of giving the date of the death, and on the 15th June 1925, the date of death was noted on the application as being the 31st January 1925. On the 23rd July 1925, a Judge of this Court admitted the application subject to just exceptions. Now, it is clear that at that time the appeals had abated because more than three months had elapsed from the date of the death of Siraj-ud-Din. It is also clear from the date of the attestation of the affidavit that the death was known to the appellants on the 4th of May, 1925.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has contended that the application should be treated as one under O. XXII, r. 9 and has cited various rulings of this Court in support of his contention. These rulings are Arur Singh v. Todar Mal (1), Chuni Lal v. Kala Khan (2), Tirath Ram v. Muhammad Abdul Rahim Shah (3), Allah Yar v. Thakar Das (4) and Badlu v. Naraini (5). The reason given now for not putting in the application in time is that the appellants were misled by the advice of their legal advisers at Delhi and thought that the time for making such an application was six months.

(5) 74 Ind. Cas. 17; A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 424.

As regards Baij Nath the facts are that he died on the 5th August 1923 and an application was made to bring his representatives on the record on the 12th of November 1923. That application was by Sana-ul Haq, assignee of the lessees, the present appellants. The affidavit had been attested on the 5th October 1923, and the order of the learned Judge admitting the application subject to just exceptions was passed on the 20th of December 1923. The same reason for the delay is given in an affidavit by Abdul Gafur, Mukhtar of ObedulRahman one of the appellants.

Now as regards the contention that these applications should be treated as applications under O. XXII, r. 9, the rulings of this Court merely hold that an application which purports to be under O. XXII, r. 4, may in particular cases be treated as one in substance under O. XXII, r. 9. In all those cases except in Badlu v. Naraini (5), a ruling by a Single Judge, it is conceded by Counsel for the appellants, that the affidavit which accompanied the application asserted that there was reasonable cause for delay in making the application. In these circumstances it was open to the Court to hold that such an application was in substance under O. XXII, r. 9.

In the case before us not only was there no assertion that there had been a delay due to reasonable causes, but from the very nature of the ground now urged in the affidavit as a cause for excusing the delay there could not be any reason for the applicant to ask for an excuse of the delay because according to the applications he thought there had been no delay when the application was made. We, therefore, consider that it is not possible for us to treat these applications as being applications under O. XXII, r. 9 and we can only consider the oral application made before us on the 15th of February 1926 as being the first application under O. XXII, r. 9 to set aside the abatement that has admittedly taken place.

Now, without deciding the question as to how far delay was due to a mistake of the legal advisers of a party may be just cause or not, it is quite clear that, in the circumstances of this case, this delay cannot be excused. The Limitation Act of 1908, undoubtedly, gave a period of six months for such an application, but by Act XXVI of 1920, which came into force on the 1st January 1921, the period in the case of the sister Art. 176 was reduced to 90 days. For some time our Court held that the period under Art 177 had also been reduced to 90 days. On the 3rd July 1922, it was held by Mr. Justice Harrison in a case reported as Rup Kishore v. Govind Das (6), that the period under Art. 177 had not been reduced. This decision was upheld in Letters Patent Appeal reported as Gobind Das v. Rupkishore (7), on the 1st of May 1923. Before this decision, however, the Repealing and Amending Act XI of 1923 had been passed and had come into force sometime in March 1923. By that amending Act the doubt on the question was removed and the period under Art. 177 was reduced to 90 days. The question that we have to consider is whether any party, whether under the advice of his Counsel or not, can plead that the delay in applying under O. XXII, r. 9, can be excused when that delay extends from March 1923, when the amending Act came into force to February 1926 when as we have already held, the first application was made to set aside the abatement. We are not aware of any case where such a lengthy period has been allowed to any party on the ground of ignorance of a statutory provision of law. There is a clear distinction between a mistake of law and ignorance of law and without deciding whether ignorance of law can ever be an excuse for delay or not, it seems clear to us that a delay of nearly three years cannot, in the circumstances of this case, be excused. We, therefore, hold that these appeals abated so far Siraj-ud-Din and Baij Nath are concerned, and that no sufficient reason has been shown for setting aside the abatements.

The next question for decision is whether the appeals have abated in toto or not. Now, the rulings on this point are, so far as our own Court is concerned, admittedly conflicting to some extent and do not seem to lay down any clear principle of decision. The same difficulty seems also to appear in the rulings of the other High Courts. It is, therefore, necessary to examine each case with reference to its facts.

Now, in Appeal No. 1239 of 1918, the plaintiffs, of whom Siraj-ud-Din was one, sued for recovery of Rs. 12,324-3-6 on account of rent from various defendants. In para. 4 of the plaint the shares of the plaintiffs were specified, but no specification of shares was made in the amount claimed for rent. The decree directed defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 6,568-3-6. No specification was made in the decree as to the shares of the plaintiffs. The decree was, therefore, in our opinion, a joint decree and any one of the plaintiffs might have executed it for the benefit of all. Now, in such a case it seems to us clear that Siraj-ud-Din and Baij Nath were both necessary parties to the appeal and it would be wholly infructuous to allow the appeal to proceed as it would lead to inconsistent decrees if the appeal of the lessees against the other lessors were to succeed. We hold, therefore, that in this case the appeal abates in toto and must be dismissed with costs.

In Civil Appeal No. 844 of 1923 the suit by the lessees against the three contesting defendants, of whom Siraj-ud-Din was one, was a suit for possession of certain shops. No sharer of Siraj ud-Din and others were specified. No separate relief was asked against any of them. A joint relief was claimed against them all and that suit was dismissed. It has been contended by Counsel for the appellants that the case falls within the rulings Raghbir Saran v. Sohan Devi (8), Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (9) and Nandoo Singh v. Baljit Singh (10). In Raghbir Saran v. Sohan Devi (8), the question, however, was not whether the appeal had abated, but whether the suit against certain co-vendees whose shares were specified in the sale-deed had or had not abated. The question, therefore, of the effect of a joint decree was not discussed in that case. No doubt that ruling relies on Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (9), as authority for the proposition there laid down, and that was a case where the question was of the abatement of an appeal, but the specific point seems not to have been urged before their Lordships in Raghbir Saran v. Sohan Devi (8), Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (9) and Nandoo Singh v. Baljit Singh (10), were suits against collaterals, and, as the rights of collaterals are admittedly separate rights, it was held that the appeal only abated qua the particular collaterals whose representatives had not been brought on the record. The point is not free from doubt. The main question really seems to be whether in considering the question one should look at the nature of the decree or at the nature of the right of the deceased party. Without deciding this question it seems to us that in the circumstances of this case, whether we look at the nature of the decree in the suit or whether we look at the nature of the right of the party, it is clear that there is nothing to show that the right was separate. All the indications on the record are to the contrary. In the circumstances we must be guided, therefore, by the form of the decree which we hold was a joint decree and, therefore, it follows that we must hold that the appeal has abated in toto.

In Civil Appeal No. 846 of 1923 the suit was brought by Baij Nath and others for a declaration that a certain lease had expired and that the plaintiffs were entitled to retain proprietary possession of certain shops, and for an injunction to the defendants not to take steps to obtain possession of those shops or to interfere with the plaintiff's ownership and possession that suit was decreed in full and here again it is clear that the decree was a joint decree and that the injunction against the defendants might be enforced by any one of the plaintiffs. As, therefore, Baij Nath was a necessary partyto the appeal that appeal must also be held to abate in toto.

These three appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Where there is no express contract in terms in a sale-deed, a provision that the vendee shall be put into possession of the property sold cannot be said to be implied in it by virtue of s. 55, cl. (2), Transfer of Property Act. [p. 303, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in A. S. No. 124 of 1921, (A. S. No. 1312 of 1920, on the file of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura), preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Srivalliputtur, in O. S. No. 964 of 1918,

Mr. K. V. Krishnasami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Champakesa Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The adoptive father of plaintiff-appellant in this case sold certain property to the defendant in 1912. One item of property was apparently in the possession of one Veerappa Naidu and, as a matter of fact, the defendant did not get possession of that item until after filing a suit against him and the plaintiff, possession being obtained shortly after the present suit was filed. One item of consideration for the sale-deed was a sum of Rs. 400 payable to plaintiff's creditor Muthayya Chetti and this amount was admittedly not paid by the defendant. Muthayya Chetti eventually filed a suit against the plaintiff and obtained a decree for Rs. 340 in 1917. The plaintiff now seeks to recover from the defendant damages which he has suffered owing to the defendant's non-payment of this portion of the sale price. The District Munsif gave a decree for the amount but the Subordinate Judge in appeal held that inasmuch as the father of the plaintiff had contracted to give possession to the defendant of all the items sold and had failed to give possession of one item, plaintiff was only entitled to a refund of the purchase money with interest from the date on which the defendant actually got into possession. From that amount he allowed the defendant to deduct Rs. 150 said to have been incurred by him for the expenses of his suit against Veerappa Nayudu.

In coming to this conclusion he has relied partly on an oral agreement pleaded by the defendant, namely, that Rs. 400 due under the sale-deed was not to be payable until the defendant got possession of the whole land. This oral agreement is inconsistent with the terms of the registered sale-deed and consequently under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, it cannot be proved in this case. On this ground alone it might be held that the Subordinate Judge's finding is not justifiable but he has also relied on the provision of s. 55, cl. (2) of the Transfer of Property Act. That runs as follows:—"The seller should be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professed to transfer to the buyer subsists." The Subordinate Judge has held that under this clause the sale-deed executed by the father of the plaintiff must be deemed to contain a contract to put the defendant in possession of the property. There is no such contract in terms in the document and the provision that the vendee shall be put into possession cannot be said to come under s. 55, cl. (2) which refers to the interest professed to be transferred. In this case the interest which the plaintiff's father professed to transfer, was the absolute right to the property. It has been found that that right was subsisting on the date of sale and that the plaintiff's father had power to transfer it. The discussion, therefore, in the Subordinate Judge's judgment with reference to this contract to put the defendant in possession is hardly relevant to the present suit.

It is probable that the defendant might have counter claimed for damages sustained by him by alleging that the plaintiff's father has committed breach of contract by not putting the defendant in possession of the land. It appears that the parties were aware that a third person was in possession of one item although there is no reference to this fact in the sale-deed. The defendant bought the properties without any covenant for actual possession and there is nothing in s. 55 to justify such a contract being implied. As a matter of fact, the defendant has not pleaded a set off in terms and has not proved breach of contract by the plaintiff. We have, therefore, only to consider the qustion whether the plaintiff is entitled to the damages claimed by him. The plaintiff has asked for the suit amount to be made a charge on the plaint property and from that it might be inferred that he was seeking to recover his unpaid purchase-money but on a perusal of the plaint it is clear that what he is asking for is damages sustained by him in consequence of the defendant's non-payment of the purchase-money and it is only through an erroneous view of his rights that he has asked for a charge.

A contention is raised as to the quantum of damages and it is suggested for the defendant that the plaintiff colluded with the creditor Muthayya Chetti and allowed a decree for an excess amount to be passed. The Subordinate Judge has found that the agreement to pay compound interest alleged by the plaintiff is untrue but no such allegation was made by the defendant and the finding is certainly vitiated by the fact that it is based on a wrong principle of law. The plaintiff's father admittedly paid a certain sum towards Muthayya Chetti's debt and then the arrangement to pay compound interest is said to have been arrived at because the plaintiff's father wanted further time to pay the balance. The Subordinate Judge referring to this says, "An ordinary prudent man would not, after having paid Rs. 162, have agreed to pay compound interest when he had three years' time to pay the amount. He seems to be under the impression that a debtor is not bound to pay his debts until the last day of limitation for filing a suit against him, which is, to say the least of it, a most extraordinary proposition. The agreement is spoken to by the witnesses and seems to be in accordance with probabilities and it is not the subject of any specific issue. There seems to be no reason for holding that this amount decreed against the plaintiff was due to collusion and consequently that is the amount of damages the plaintiff has sustained.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the District Munsif's decree restored except that the amount will not be made a charge on the suit property. The plaintiff will get his costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 13th October 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 9th May 1921.

Bakshi Tek Chand and Lala Anant Ram, for the Appellants.

Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 31st of January 1920 and the 12th of February 1920 the appellants agreed to sell 400 tolas of gold to the defendants to be delivered on the 13th of March 1920. On the last mentioned date they asked the defendants to take delivery of the gold on payment of the agreed price. The defendants not having taken delivery of the gold on the 19th of April 1920 the appellants instituted the suit out of which this second appeal arises for the recovery of Rs. 1,733-8-0 being damages alleged to be suffered by them owing to the breach by the defendants. The defendants' plea was that the contract was a wagering one and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover any damages. The Trial Court held that the contract was not a wagering one and gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,350-10-0 with proportionate costs against the defendants.

On appeal the District Judge held that the contract was a wagering one He also held that it had not been shown that "the plaintiffs were able and willing to deliver the gold on the due date."

Before us both these conclusions are attacked by the Counsel for the appellants. It appears from the judgment of the District Judge that he was of the opinion that the main issue in the case was "whether it was agreed that actual delivery would be given and that payment of the price would be given and that the second issue whether the transactions were badni" arose only if issue No. 1 had been decided in favour of the plaintiffs. With this view we do not agree. The ordinary presumption is in favour of the legality of a contract and it is for those who assert that it was not intended to perform the contract in the manner recited therein to prove their assertion. There is thus no force in the contention of the Counsel for the respondents that the finding of the District Judge is one of fact and therefore, binding on this Court.

We have examined the record and find that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to prove that the transaction was badni. The defendants themselves did not go into the witness-box and no other evidence was produced. The only facts from which the inference as to the illegal nature of the transaction is drawn by the District Judge are:

(a) that neither of the parties ordinarily deal in gold and

(b) that in previous transactions the parties merely settled by payment of differences.

We have no evidence as to the nature, extent, number or the period of those transactions. In our opinion these facts were wholly insufficient to prove that this transaction was badni. In order to prove that a transaction is a wagering one it was necessary for the defendants to prove that no delivery was originally intended and also that it was agreed between the parties, at the time when the contract was entered into, that neither party would be entitled to enforce the actual delivery of gold, Kundan Lal v. Qadir Ahmad Ali (1). The mere fact that the transaction was a speculative one does not make it a wagering one [Bhagwandas Parasram v. Burjorji Ruttonji Bomanji (2).]

We hold, therefore, that the respondents have failed to prove that the transactions, which were the subject of the suit in this case, were badni. This finding, however, does not conclude the case as the learned District Judge has further held that the plaintiffs had not shown that they were able and willing to deliver. In this connection we note that the defendants did not raise an express plea that the plaintiffs were not ready and willing to perform their part of the contract on the due date and no issue was framed by the Trial Court on this point, but the learned Counsel for the respondent contends that in order to make out a complete cause of action it was necessary for the plaintiffs to allege in their plaint that they were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract and that unless this allegation was made and proved by them the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for damages for breach of the contract. No objection was taken to the plaint being defective or incomplete in the absence of an allegation of readiness and willingness by the plaintiffs, but we are of opinion that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to make an express allegation in the plaint as to their readiness and willingness.

The learned Counsel for the respondents relied upon certain authorities which support his contention, but O. VI, r. 6, of the present C. P. C. is a complete answer to his contention. It is now provided in that rule that any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested shall be distinctly specified in his pleadings by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, and subject thereto an averment of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleadings. It is quite clear from this that in the pleadings of the plaintiffs as contained in the plaint an averment of the performance of the conditions precedent that is to say, readiness and willingness of the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract, must be implied and it was for the defendants if they contested that fact to raise the matter expressly in their pleadings. It would then have been necessary for the plaintiffs to prove affirmatively that they were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract.

The expression "readiness and willingness" as used in s. 51 of the Contract Act has been the subject of discussion in a large number of rulings. We will, however, mention only two of them here Cohen v. Cossim Nana (3) and Mulchand v. Kundanmull (4). It appears from these that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that on the due date he had the goods actually in his possession. It is quite sufficient if he is able to prove that he had control of the requisite goods or that he had the capacity to deliver them to the purchaser when called upon to do so, in other words, that he was in a position to fulfil his part of the contract on the due date on a demand being made by the purchaser. Applying this test we hold that the plaintiffs in this case were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract. It appears from the evidence on the record that there was plenty of gold in the market of Dalhi on the due date and that delivery of large quantities was given by dealers in performance of other contracts to their purchasers. It also has been established that the market rate of gold on that day was lower than the contract rates between the plaintiffs and the defendants in this case. The District Judge has held that the plaintiffs "stood to make a profit by actually" buying gold at the market price on due date and selling "it at the contract rates to the defendants". On that finding of fact, in our opinion, the District Judge should have held that the plaintiffs were in a position to perform their part of the contract and taking this fact with another that the plaintiffs actually called upon the defendants to take delivery of the gold on the due date, the proper finding should have been that the plaintiffs were able and willing to deliver the gold. Under s. 93 of the Contract Act it was for the purchasers in this case to apply for delivery on tendering the agreed price. This they failed to do. They were, therefore, liable to pay damages to the plaintiffs owing to their breach of their part of the contract.

We accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs throughout.

Partnership, dissolution of—Taking of accounts—Interest on monies drawn by partner, whether allowable—Interest on advances, calculation of.

In taking accounts in a suit for dissolution of partnership, it is not the practice to allow interest on monies drawn by a partner from the partnership funds be it capital or interest unless it is so provided in the deed of partnership.

Meymott v. Meymott, (1862) 54 E. R. 1211; 31 Beav. 445; 32 L. J. Ch. 218; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 426; 135 R. R. 515, followed.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Judge in making his final decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership has made two errors in taking the accounts. In the first place he has allowed interest on monies drawn by a partner from the partnership funds—be it capital or interest, it does not matter—a thing which it is not the practice to allow unless it is so provided in the deed. There is clear authority in the case of Meymott v. Meymott (1). The other thing he has allowed is interest on certain advances up to the date not of the dissolution which had been effected by the preliminary decree but right up to the date of final decree. For that again there is clear English authority, Barfield v. Loughborough (2) that such allowances cannot be made. The decree will be amended by disallowing those two items, interest at 9 per cent. being allowed up to the date of the preliminary decree. After that date the usual rate of 6 per cent. interest will be allowed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Building house in absence of plaintiff—Silence—Pleadings——New plea in arguments.

A Court is justified in rejecting a plea in argument which was not raised by the defendant in his defence. [p. 308, col. 2.]

Where the defendant has built a house on plaintiff's land in the latter's absence, no question of estoppel by acquiescence can possibly arise. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree and judgment of the Additional Sub-Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 20th October 1924, setting aside that of the Court of the Munsif, Rai Bareli, dated the 4th March 1924.

Mr. Hargobind Dayal for Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 20th October 1924, setting aside a decree of the Munsif of Rai Bareli, dated the 4th March 1924.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for possession of a house situated in village Shora, District Rai Bareli. The plaintiff alleged that the house in suit was his ancestral property, that he and his brothers were members of a joint family, but his brothers were living abroad and he was the karta (manager), that he also was mostly living in Hardoi, as he had got some property there and that the defendant took possession of the house in suit wrongfully in the beginning of March 1923 and took away some doors and beams in the plaintiff's absence. The plaintiff, therefore, sued for possession of the house and for Rs. 50 as damages.

The claim was resisted by the defendant. His defence was that the plaintiff's mother had sold the house to one Mahanand in 1898 during the minority of the plaintiff and his brothers and thus Mahanand had got possession of the house as a vendee. Mahanand was succeeded by his widow Musammat Sukhdei and she gave the defendant permission (oral) to build the house on the site of the old house which had fallen down. The defendant thus built the house a few months before the institution of the suit. The permission is said to have been given to the defendant in the beginning of 1923. The suit was instituted in September 1923.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the sale-deed, Ex. A-1 was genuine and valid, and that the plaintiff had thus lost all right to the property and was never in possession thereof within limitation.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's appeal holding that the sale-deed in question was a forgery and that the plaintiff was entitled to the property in suit which was his ancestral property.

The defendant has now come to this Court in second appeal. I have examined the record carefully. In my opinion there is no force in this appeal. The finding of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that the sale-deed in question is not genuine, must be accepted in second appeal. There is no reliable evidence on record to show that the sale-deed in question was really executed by the plaintiff's mother. The fact that the plaintiff has been in possession of the property in suit within limitation is also satisfactorily proved, The appellant's learned Pleader has argued that on the plea of limitation the lower Appellate Court has found, that though the plaintiff has been out of possession for more than 12 years, but still it was not necessary for him to prove his possession within 12 years, having proved his title. So far as I see, the lower Appellate Court has not really found that the plaintiff has been out of possession of the house in suit for more than 12 years and that he was never in possession within limitation. I have read the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cerefully. So far as I see, the learned Subordinate Judge has found, as a fact, that the plaintiff has been in possession within limitation. He has rejected the evidence which was produced by the defendant to prove the possession of Mahanand and his successors. He has relied on Bhola's evidence which shows that the plaintiff was in possession of the property within limitation. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge shows that he was of opinion that, even if the plaintiff had been out of possession for more than 12 years, he would not have lost his right to the property in suit as the defendant had failed to prove adverse possession for more than 12 years. In that connection the learned Subordinate Judge had referred to the ruling in Indarpal Singh v. Thakur Din Singh (1).

In my opinion it is not necessary to consider that question in disposing of this appeal. The fact remains that it has been really found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff has been in possession of the property in suit within limitation. I have gone through the whole evidence on record carefully. In my opinion, the plaintiff's possession within limitation is satisfactorily proved and when his title is admitted, his claim must be decreed. The plaintiff and other members of his family were living in the house before the last four or five years. They left the place about four years ago. However the plaintiff was visiting the place every now and then during the last four years. When the defendant took possession of the house wrongfully in March 1923 he misappropriated the doors and beams and built a new house there. Under these circumstances the plaintiff's claim was rightly and properly decreed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge.

I should like to note that, though no plea of estoppel was raised by the defendant in this case, but the learned Munsif made the following observation at the end of his judgment.

"The defendant seems to have omitted the obvious plea ol estoppel by conduct as his whole house is now complete. At any rate because the plaintiff stood by when the defendant was building his house, it is safe to infer that the former knew that he had absolutely no rights in the land and so did not offer any resistance or remonstrance."

The learned Subordinate Judge did not consider the plea of estoppel in disposing of the appeal. I think he was perfectly right in leaving that plea out of consideration when it had not been raised by the defendant in his defence. I should like to note that it is in evidence that the house was built by the defendant in the plaintiff's absence. Under these circumstances no plea of estoppel can be taken in this case.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs. The decree of the lower appellate Court is confirmed in all respects.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case in which it is important to look at the plaint. The plaintiff entered into a lease with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in 1907. These two persons are said to have since become insolvents and are not represented in second appeal. In 1913 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sub-leased to the 3rd defendant. The plaint sets out that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in enjoyment of the plaintiff's property as tenants and that the 3rd defendant is in enjoyment of the premises as a partner of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It may at once be said that this case of partnership was given up in both the lower Courts and was not pressed before me here. The plaint then goes on to ask for "losses on account of rent from January 1916 to 15th December 1918" when the plaintiff sold the property to a stranger. Paragraph 7 of the plaint runs as follows :—

"The plaintiff claims relief in this suit for losses on account of rent and for damages for use and occupation at Rs. 50 per month."

The material issue settled in the case is,

"Is the plaintiff entitled to collect the rent of the suit building........... ..."

It is now contended before me that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed as against the 3rd defendant on any one of the several grounds, (1) as a tenant of the plaintiff under s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act; (2) as a trespasser on the premises of the plaintiff and, therefore, liable for damages for use and occupation. I have set out the only paragraph in the plaint in which damages for use and occupation are referred to except the prayer and there are no introductory averments whatever showing how the plaintiff would be entitled to damages for use and occupation against one or more of the defendants. The plaintiff, no doubt, had a cause of action against the 3rd defendant; but the question is, whether on the plaint as framed he could be granted any relief. The District Munsif held that he could, on the ground that the 3rd defendant after the notice Ex. B (1) which will be referred to in detail in a moment, made himself directly responsible for the rent and continued in possession. The District Judge held that there was no contract express or implied by the 3rd defendant, to become the tenant of the plaintiff and to pay rent. As stated above the 3rd defendant is joined clearly in the plaint as a partner of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The suit is not one in ejectment and he was nowhere treated as a trespasser. Therefore any damages for use and occupation against him as a trespasser were out of question. Can any damages for use and occupation or by way of rent be awarded against him as a tenant? That the plaintiff knew that the 3rd defendant was a sub-lessee is clear. No objection was raised to the sub-lease and the possession of the 3rd defendant is said to have been more than once admitted by the plaintiff. Now, the plaintiff terminated the lease to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by a notice. He sent Ex. B (1) to the 3rd defendant specifically as sub-tenant enclosing the notice he had addressed to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 terminating their tenancy. Exhibit B (1) demands that the 3rd defendant should vacate the premises within a month of the receipt of the notice and concludes:—

"In default of so vacating I write this, with a pure mind, that Rs. 75 per month will be collected for the said tenancy, along with the costs of the Court."

To this the 3rd defendant gave no reply and continued in possession. Now it is said that these concluding words of Ex. B (1) bring the case within s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act and that the lessor has by them "otherwise assented" to 3rd defendant's continuing in possession. It is clear from Meghji Vallabh Das v. Dayalji Lalji & Co. (1) that it is for the lessor to do some act, receive rent or otherwise to give consent and not for the lessee to do anything under the Transfer of Property Act. I have been referred to a case in

Dougal v. McCarthy (2) in the Court of Appeal which is said to resemble the present case in that there the tenants held over and when the landlord wrote demanding a quarter's rent in advance they did not answer the letter but remained in possession. The Master of the Rolls says :—

"The evidence appears to me clearly to show that the landlord consented to their so remaining in possession as tenants; and that he treated them as tenants from year to year on the terms of the previous tenancy."

The whole question here is whether from the terms of Ex. B (1) it can be said that the landlord consented to 3rd defendant remaining in possession as his tenant in direct privity with him. It seems to me it cannot. The terms are that he should go out or Rs. 75 will be collected together with the costs of the Court. That does not look like an amicable consent to either the tenant's holding over or to the recognition of a new tenancy on the part of a former sub-lessee. The 3rd defendant has paid no money upto this date and the landlord has taken no steps till 1919 when this suit was filed.

Another contention is that even though the 3rd defendant has been recognised as sub-tenant remaining in possession after the determination of the lease he must be liable for reasonable damages for so remaining in possession on the authority of old English cases like that of a man who takes a bun from a Railway refreshment room or of a man to whom wine is delivered without an order and who receives it and consumes it. That no doubt might be another good cause of action for the plaintiff had it been fore shadowed in his plaint, or had an issue been taken about it below. One must say with some sympathy for the plaintiff that there was no doubt he had a remedy against this 3rd defendant, but either he was badly advised or his remedy has been misconceived; and, in my opinion, on his plaint he is not entitled to succeed as against the 3rd defendant. It may be that when he first launched the case the 3rd defendant occupied a very minor place in his consideration and that the subsequent insolvency of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 caused him to turn to and try to recover from the 3rd defendant. But on the state of the pleadings and the issues and the shape in which the case was originally put, I am clearly of opinion that he cannot succeed in doing so.

The second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for recovery of khas possession of certain lands. The plaintiff's case was that the lands comprised a non-transferable occupancy holding and the holding had been transferred by the previous tenants in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff, therefore, asks for khas possession. The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance. The lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, preferred this appeal.

The first contention urged on behalf of the appellant is to the effect that the lower Appellate Court was in error in applying to the case the presumption contained in cl. (2) of s. 50, Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit being against a person who is said to be a purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding is not a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act and it is urged that in a suit of this description the presumption to which I have referred is not applicable. That is no doubt so, but the question to be considered is as to whether the learned Judge of the Court below has relied upon the presumption as contained in cl. (2) of s. 50 or he has not taken the facts into consideration in order to find what inference may legitimately be drawn from them. What the learned Judge has stated in his judgment is this. He has observed that it is well-settled that apart from the provisions of s. 50 (2) it is open to the Court to draw an inference of a jote having been held at a fixed rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement from the fact of long payment of a uniform rent. He has found in his judgment that the origin of the tenancy is not known that the two suits which were instituted for enhancing the rent of the tenancy were unsuccessful that a third suit which was instituted for ejecting them had failed that in point of fact the rental remained unchanged for over 60 years, and that the tenancy has passed from generation to generation, and upon a consideration of these circumstances he has held that the reasonable inference to be drawn is that the holding was a maurasi mokarrari raiyati. The learned Judge, therefore, did not rely upon the presumption as a necessary presumption arising under s. 50 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act, but from the fact that rent has been uniform for a long series of years taken in conjunction with the other circumstances to which I have already referred and which have been found to exist in connection with this holding he has come to the conclusion that it was a maurasi mokarrari raiyati. It cannot, therefore, be said that the learned Judge has relied upon the presumption as contained in that section but has drawn an inference from the facts which to some extent are analogous to the presumption which arise under that section. That this is permissible has been laid down in series of cases of this Court amongst which reference may be made to the decision in the case of Pran Krishna Saha v. Mukta Sundari Dassya (1) where it has been laid down that in cases to which the presumption under s. 50 (2) is not applicable the Court is entitled to consider the facts in view of of all the circumstances and determine whether it was not a just inference that the holding bears a fixed rental, and that there is nothing objectionable in drawing such an inference so long as the Court as does not regard itself as legally bound to apply the presumption which arises under that section. Much reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellant upon the case of Jagabandhu Saha v. Magnamoyi Dassi (2). All that this Court did in that case was that it refused to interfere with a decision in which the lower Appellate Court had not drawn the inference of fixity of rent from facts somewhat similar. It cannot be said that the facts in that case were exactly the same as here. A final Court of fact is competent to draw the necessary inference, provided it does not feel bound to take the presumption into account.

That is exactly the way in which the learned Judge has dealt with the matter, and the appellant's contention that the learned Judge has relied upon the presumption is not well-founded.

It is next urged that the learned Judge has been in error in not using against the defendants the admission which has been made by their predecessors the (vendors) in a previous suit which had been instituted by the plaintiff against them for ejectment—the admission having been to the effect that they were occupancy raiyats. This admission, it is said, is to be found in the statement of the cases as recited in the judgment in that suit. The learned Judge, with reference to this matter, has remarked that in order to use the admission of the appellants-vendors the plaintiff-respondent should have proved the written statement filed by them and without this the recital as to the statements of the facts of the case could not be used as an admission. In the view that the learned Judge has taken of this matter, I think he is right far from the statement of the respective cases of the parties in the judgment, it cannot be gathered with certainty as to what the exact nature, scope and extent of that admission was, and if the plaintiff wanted to rely upon the admission of the defendants-vendors as a piece of the evidence binding upon them it was obligatory on their part to produce the written statement in which that admission was contained. This ground, therefore, also fails.

(2) 33 Ind. Cas. 884; 24 C. L. J. 363; 44 C. 555; 29 C. W. N. 89.

The third ground urged on behalf of the appellant relates to the question of res-judicata. In the suit which the plaintiff had instituted against the vendors of the defendants for ejectment, the plaintiff alleged that he was a raiyat and that the defendants-vendors were under-raiyats, and the suit was instituted on the footing of them being under-raiyats under s. 49, Bengal Tenancy Act. In that suit it was decided that the defendants thence were not under-raiyats but occupancy raiyats. It is said that that decision operates as res judicata in the present suit on the question of the status of the defendants. The learned Judge has dealt with this matter in this way. He has observed that the finding in the judgment that the defendants were raiyats was sufficient for the determination of the suit and if the Court proceeded to determine the class of raiyats to which they belonged and held that they were occupancy rights it was unnecessary and the decision were not res judicata to the trial of the question as to the status of the defendants in the present suit. In dealing with this matter from this point of view I am not sure that the learned Judge was right, for it seems to me that if both the parties invited a decision of the Court on the question as to whether the defendants in that suit were occupancy raiyats or not the decision on the question of the status of the defendants would be res judicata in a subsequent suit as between the parties or persons claiming under them. But there is another aspect of the case which has been passed before us by the learned Advocate for the respondents. He has contended that in the previous suit it was not necessary for the defendants to urge that their status was something higher than that of occupancy raiyats. The suit was one in ejectment on the footing of the defendants thence being under-raiyats and it was enough for them to show that they were not under-raiyats but had a right of occupancy. The question as to whether they were raiyats holding at fixed rent was not necessary to be urged in that suit and if it was not necessary to put forward that defence in that suit, it cannot be said that the decision in that suit on the question as to whether the defendants were raiyats at fixed rent or not cannot now be treated in the present suit as res judicata. That one and the same person can combine in himself the status of an occupancy raiyat and a raiyat at a fixed rent cannot now be disputed in view of the decision of this Court in the case of Sarbeswar Patra v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (3). The contrary view to be found in the dictum of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Bhutnath Naskar v. Monmotha Nath Mitra (4) was dissented from in that case. In the ejectment suit it was not necessary for the defendants to say anything more than that they were occupancy raiyats and the decision arrived at was to the effect that they were such raiyats. In the present suit they go further and say that not only are they occupancy raiyats but that they have been holding at fixed rent from this time of the Permanent Settlement and, therefore, they are maurasi makarrari raiyats. In this view the decision in the previous suit cannot be said to operate as res judicata in the present one. This ground, therefore, also fails. All the grounds urged in support of the appeal failing, the appeal must be and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was based on a deed of mortgage executed on the 4th November 1901 by a Muhammadan called Husain Raza in favour nominally of a man called Gulzari Shah. It is, however, admitted by Gulzari Shah himself that the deed of mortgage was not executed in his favour but was executed in his favour fictitiously. Gulzari Shah was the Muhammadan servant of a prostitute called Husaini Jan. Husaini Jan was the mistress of a Hindu Deputy Collector called Magghu Narain. This man was subsequently dismissed from Government service and eventually changed his religion, became a Muhammadan and married his mistress Husaini Jan. It would appear from the evidence of Gulzari Shah that the money was really advanced by Husaini Jan herself, although it was understood that the benefits of the mortgage were to be retained by her protector Magghu Narain. This mortgage carried simple interest at 18 per cent per annum with conditions as to the payment of compound interest in default of payment of simple interest and we have it established that on the 10th September 1908 certain houses belonging to Husain Raza were given into the possession of the mortgagee. The rights under the mortgage-deed formed the subject of various transfers by succession and otherwise and finally were purchased on the 15th of October 1922 for Rs. 2,000 by the present plaintiff-appellant. The plaintiff-appellant then instituted a suit on the 4th December 1922 upon the deed of mortgage. The evidence closed on the 21st of January 1924 and the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the 29th of February 1924, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The plaintiff-appellant's case on the subject of limitation was that inasmuch as the mortgagee had been in possession of certain mortgaged property from 1908 onwards and had received the rent of the property, limitation was saved under the provisions of section 20 of the Limitation Act. The learned Subordinate Judge repelled this suggestion upon the finding that the agreement under which the property had been delivered into the possession of the mortgagee could not be proved under the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act as it varied the terms of the original contract of mortgage. An appeal was filed against the dismissal of the suit upon this point to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner which was decided on the 7th July 1924. It was decided by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hasan who was then the Officiating Judicial Commissioner. He decided that the suit was not barred by limitation holding that in 1908 the mortgagor had put the mortgagee in possession of a portion of the mortgaged property on the understanding that he would accept the income of the mortgaged property up till the date of redemption in full satisfaction of the whole of the interest which had accrued in the past and which would accrue in the future under the terms of the mortgage-deed. Upon this finding the plaintiff-appellant could not be entitled to more than Rs. 2,000 the amount of principal of the deed of mortgage. As a result of this decision the suit went back to the learned Subordinate Judge for re-hearing and as he found against the defendants upon the other points on which they contested their liability he decreed the plaintiff-appellant's claim for Rs. 2,000. In the course of the subsequent hearing he refused to permit the plaintiff-appellant to amend his plaint. The plaintiff appellant has again come to this Court in appeal arguing that even if he had not been allowed to amend the plaint it was open to him to ignore certain portions of the finding of the Judicial Commissioner's Court and that even if he were not allowed to ignore those findings he could avoid them by an amendment of the plaint which he should have been allowed to make. His learned Counsel has addressed us an ingenious argument in support of his position and it would have been difficult to have put the case for the appellant better than it was put. We have first of all to see what Mr. Justice Hasan said. He stated:

"The agreement upon which the plaintiff relies is stated in para. 11 of the plaint and was amplified or explained by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff at a subsequent stage of the hearing of the suit. The Court below is of opinion that this agreement has the effect of converting what was a simple mortgage into a usufructuary mortgage. If this opinion was correct it would be difficult to escape the conclusion at which the Court below has arrived but the learned Advocate for the appellant challenges the accuracy of that opinion. The conclusion at which I have reached is that the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is sound and must be accepted. The deed of mortgage of the 4th November 1904 was read at the hearing of this appeal more than once and I find nothing in the agreement as stated in para. 11 of the plaint and as explained later in the proceedings which in any manner contradicts, varies, adds to or subtracts from the terms of the original contract of mortgage. The general principle of s. 92 is not disputed. The question in the case as in all other cases must be the application of that principle to the circumstances of the particular case. It is agreed that if the agreement under consideration merely provided for a means of satisfying the term of the contract relating to the liability for interest s. 92 is no bar to proving it. On the other hand, it is also agreed that if the said agreement in any manner contradicts, varies, adds to or subtracts from the terms of the original contract it cannot be proved. I have to determine under which of these two conditions the present agreement falls and as I have said before I am of opinion that it falls under the former and not the latter. The mortgagor had made continuous default in payment of the interest from the date of the execution of the document right up to the date of the alleged agreement except that he had paid a paltry sum of Rs. 60 during the long interval. The only reasonable construction which I can place on para. 11 of the plaint is that in view of the inability of the mortgagor to pay any interest either accumulated or in the future the mortgagee approached the mortgagor to make such arrangements by means of which the latter's liability for the interest would be satisfied and the result was the arrangement under consideration. This amounts to nothing more or less than devising a method for the payment of the interest that had accrued till then and was to accrue in the future. This being my interpretation of para. 11 of the plaint it follows that the plaintiff is entitled to prove the agreement and the provisions of s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act are no bar to his doing so.

"The learned Advocate for the appellants does not accept my construction of para. 11 of the plaint. His argument is that the agreement merely referred to the satisfaction of future interest and had no relation whatsoever to the interest that had accrued prior to the date of the agreement. He further contends that even as regards the future interest the agreement did not affect its running on the accumulated interest.

"I am not prepared to accept either of the two arguments. It seems to me that this agreement related to the satisfaction of the entire liability of the mortgagor both in respect of the past and the future interest on the principal amount. The plaintiff would thus be entitled to recover his principal amount only and his claim with regard to that is not barred by limitation. This of course assumes that the rest of the pleas raised by the respondents are overruled."

The learned Counsel for the appellant takes the position that Mr. Justice Hasan had no right to decide the nature of the agreement at all; that we should consider that Mr. Justice Hasan's remarks as to the interpretation of para. 11 are mere obiter dicta; that for the purposes of the further trial the legal effect of Mr. Justice Hasan's judgment was that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that it was open to the plaintiff-appellant to prove in his own way as he wished what the agreement actually was, and to calculate the amount of interest according to that proof. We cannot possibly accede to this argument. It is clear to us that the interpretation of para. 11 of the plaint made by Mr. Justice Hasan went to the whole root of his decision and that without that interpretation he could not have decided the appeal at all. The point before him was this. If there was no agreement the suit was barred by limitation. In order to save limitation it was not only necessary to prove an agreement but an agreement that was admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act. It was impossible for the Court to permit the plaintiff-appellant to avoid limitation without interpreting the agreement which he set up. What the plaintiff-appellant wants now is to take advantage of Mr. Justice Hasan's decision, in order to save limitation, and to refuse to be bound by Mr. Justice Hasan's decision when it would deprive him of interest. We agree with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge on the point and consider that the matter of the disallowing of interest in the decree was finally settled by Mr. Justice Hasan's decision. This is not a question of res judicata in the proper sense of the term but of the binding nature of a decision in a previous proceeding in the same case.

The next point raised in the appeal can be disposed of very shortly, that is the refusal to permit the plaintiff-appellant to amend his plaint. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly refused to permit this amendment and would have been very wrong if he had permitted it, for the effect of the amendment would clearly have been to have changed the nature of the pleadings as interpreted by Mr. Justice Hasan. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

There is no force in the cross-objections which fail and are accordingly dismissed with costs.

The appeal having been decided the matter of stay can be decided with it. According to our decision the amount due from the defendants is Rs. 2,408-8-0. That amount has been paid into Court. It will now be paid to the plaintiff-appellant Saiyed Hamid Husain. The property will then vest in the defendants-mortgagors and such compensation as is paid by Government, therefore, will be payable entirely to them.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 14th February 1923.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has written a very scrappy judgment in a very interesting case under the Hindu Law. The father of the three defendants-appellants one Sarnam by name was adopted by Kura. This is now a finding of fact and cannot be questioned in second appeal. I shall consider the facts of the case accepting the finding. There was disagreement between the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court. It is another finding of fact which I accept because it has been so held by both the Subordinate Courts that plaintiff was adopted by Kura after the death of his natural father Mehru. On this ground the Trial Court held that Sarnam having inherited a share in his natural father's property cannot be divested of that property on adoption by Kura. The plaintiff who, as is usual, came to Court on false allegations alleged falsely that the defendants had never been in possession of the property and that their father ceased to be in possession on his adoption. This case was quite false. Even after the adoption Sarnam had continued to share in the profits of the family of his birth.

The Trial Court was of opinion that the property of Mehru once having been invested in the name of Sarnam, Sarnam could not be divested of such property on his adoption. The lower Appellate Court disagreed with this view and, in my opinion, correctly. There was no vesting of any property in Sarnam on Mehru's death. Sarnam at his birth got a vested interest in the family property being a Hindu son. It, therefore, makes no difference as to extinction of a person's rights in his natural family whether he be adopted during the lifetime of his natural father or after the death of his natural father. The lower Appellate Court has avoided the view of divesting the property unnecessarily. Every Hindu son at birth is vested with joint ancestral property and he is divested on adoption. With his usual lucidity, Mookerjee, J, has thus enunciated the law on the subject of adoption in the case of Birbhadra Rath v. Kalpataru Panda (1).

"This view (that is of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kali Komul Mozumdar v. Uma Shankar Moitra (2) is founded on the proposition that the theory of adoption involves the principle of complete severance of the child adopted, from the family in which he is born, and his complete substitution into the adopter's family, as if he were born in it. To put the matter in another way, 'an absolute adoption appears to operate as birth of the boy in the family of adoption and as civil death in the family of birth, having regard to the legal consequences that are incidents of such adoption".

On Sarnam's adoption, therefore, the rights of the parties would be governed as if Sarnam had died at that moment with regard to the natural family and been born to his adoptive father. He will, therefore, be divested of his rights in the property of his natural family and vested with rights in the family of his adoptive father. So far I agree with the opinion of the lower Court though not in the reasons given.

I also agree with the concurrent findings of both the Subordinate Courts that no question of adverse possession can arise because the plaintiffs are admittedly in possession of the property which has not been partitioned. It appears that the plaintiffs' share between themselves have not been determined and even if Sarnam and after him his sons continued to derive benefit from the property in suit, this fact cannot start adverse possession from the date of Sarnam's adoption. Both the Subordinate Courts have also rightly held that a suit for declaration was sufficient, as the plaintiffs are at present in possession of the property in suit.

This disposes of grounds of appeal Nos. 2, 3 and 4. In ground of appeal No 2 it was alleged that Sarnam was separate from his brothers, but the entire trend of the proceedings in the two Subordinate Courts convinces me that there has been no partition and that Sarnam was not separate from his brothers when he was adopted. I hold accordingly.

As to ground of appeal No. 5, though only one plaintiff appealed against the dismissal of the suit, the lower Court had power to set aside the entire decree of the Trial Court and grant relief to all the plaintiffs.

One difficulty, however, remains. It has not yet been decided whether the defendants or any one of them were in existence or not when Sarnam was adopted. My view would be, though I do not record it as a definite finding, that if any of the defendants was in existence on the date of the adoption of Sarnam he would be vested with interest in the property and Sarnam's adoption which would involve Sarnam's civil death as regards the property in suit would not, as a matter of course, have the same effect on the rights of his son or sons. I think I would hold that if Sarnam's sons or even one of them were in existence when Sarnam was adopted, the plaintiff's suit would fail.

Such being my opinion at least at present, I refer the following issue for decision to the lower Appellate Court.

"Was any of the defendants born prior to the date of the adoption of Sarnam?

The parties shall be permitted to produce fresh evidence. Return shall be made within three months of to-day's date and the appeal shall be tied to me. Ten days' time shall be granted for filing objections on return of the findings.

Order XXIII, r. 3, C. P. C., does not contemplate the necessity of two decrees, a preliminary and a final but only one decree. Therefore, a compromise decree in a suit on an hypothecation must be regarded a final and an executable decree and not one under O. XXXIV, r. 4. [p. 318, col. 2.]

The necessity to pass a preliminary decree in a suit on the basis of a mortgage arises only when the plaintiff succeeds and not where the matter is compromised. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a decree, dated 16th February 1921. The history of this decree is as follows:—

In 1914 or 1915 the Allahabad Bank decree-holder in this case, sued the judgment-debtors on a hypothecation deed. The case was settled by a compromise that was given effect to in a decree, dated 30th March 1915, which provided that the money should be paid by instalments extending over seven or eight years. Default was made in payment of the instalments, and execution of this decree was applied for. It was refused as the Subordinate Judge held that the decree was not capable of execution. His ground for holding this appears to have been that the decree of the 30th March, 1915, was a preliminary decree for sale of the property, and was ineffectual without a further final decree, and that no application for final decree could be made, as the time for applying for such had passed. Against the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing execution an appeal was filed to this Court. That appeal was settled by a compromise. The judgment-debtors withdrew their objections that there was any necessity for a decree absolute and that execution was in any way barred by limitation. Interest was reduced from 7½ per cent. to 6 per cent, further time was allowed and smaller instalments fixed. This Court passed an order that the appeal should be allowed in terms of the compromise which was to be incorporated in the Court's decree. It also framed a decree which, it may be remarked, said nothing about the appeal before the Court being dismissed, but proceeded directly to decree the terms of the compromise. These terms provided for payment by instalments. After the payment of two instalments the judgment debtors made default, and accordingly the decree-holder has made the application out of which this appeal arises for realising the balance due to him by sale in accordance with the terms of the compromise as embodied in this Court's decree of 1921.

The Subordinate Judge held that the compromise as embodied in this Court's decree or order of the 16th February, 1921, was capable of execution and that he (the Subordinate Judge) could not question the validity of that order. He rejected the plea that the compromise of the 16th February, 1921, was a compromise, which might have been enforced by a regular suit, but could not be enforced (without some decree passed on it) in execution proceedings.

The following questions arise in this appeal.

1. Was the original decree of the 30th of March a preliminary decree passed under O. XXXIV, r. 4, or was it a final decree passed under O. XXIII, r. 3, that is to say a decree passed on a compromise of suit?

2. Was the decree of the latter character one that could be passed in a suit brought on a hypothecation bond?

3. Was this Court entitled in the execution appeal culminating in the order of the 16th February, 1921, to pass a decree modifying the terms of the original decree of the 30th March 1915?

4. Assuming that it was not so entitled, was the lower Court debarred from questioning its right to do so, and similarly is this Court debarred from questioning that right?

In respect of the first question it is urged by the appellants-judgment-debtors that the decree of the 30th March 1915 must be held to have been a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the C. P. C., (that is to say a decree in the form prescribed in a decree in a suit on a mortgage for sale) for two reasons. The first reason is that the Court specifically ordered that the decree should be prepared "under" O. XXXIV, r. 4, C. P. C. The second reason is that the Court had no power to pass a decree in any other form. Neither of these reasons commend themselves to us. The order of the Court was "The decree will be prepared in terms of the application Ex. 7 (i. e., the compromise) and under O. XXXIV, r. 4, C P. C." These words are clearly contradictory. If the decree was to follow the compromise, then it would be a compromise decree, and not a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, which makes no provision for an instalment decree. The appellants' Counsel has endeavoured to reconcile this conflicting language by saying that the intention was to have a decree providing for instalments, but otherwise following the form required by O. XXXIV, r. 4, that is to say a preliminary decree of a character not prescribed by the Code. The answer to this argument is implied in our answer to the second contention that the Court had no power to vary the form of decree prescribed by O. XXXIV, r. 4. It will be observed that the opening words of the said rule are: "In a suit for sale if the plaintiff succeeds". Now this was not a case where the plaintiff succeeded, but it was a case where the matter was settled by a compromise. The provision of the Code applicable was not O. XXXIV, r. 4 but O. XXIII, r. 3, which provides that, "Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement......the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit." It is clear that the paramount intention in the mind of the Court was to act under this section, and the Court's reference in its order to O. XXXIV, r. 4, which should have been a reference to O. XXIII, r. 3, may be disregarded. It is also clear that the compromise did not contemplate the necessity of a final decree being prepared, but meant that the debt should be realisable directly in execution proceedings without the intervention of any further decree, that is of a decree absolute. Order XXIII, r. 3, does not contemplate the necessity of two decrees, i. e., a preliminary and a final, but only of one decree. We, therefore, hold that the original decree is a final decree.

As to question (2), it has been argued that O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Code must mean that no other form of decree than that specified can be used in any case where the suit for sale is brought on a mortgage. We have already pointed out that this order only refers to a case where a plaintiff succeeds, and not to a case where the matter is compromised. Our attention has been drawn to Durga Bharthi v. Andesh Rai (1). That case is to be distinguished from the present one inasmuch as in that case a preliminary decree had been passed and the parties then came to an agreement to extend the statutory period of six months for payment of the mortgage-money. It was held that the parties could not by agreement obtain an extension of time and that the only remedy of the decree-holder was to apply for a decree absolute. In this case we have held that the decree of 1915, was a final decree and not a preliminary decree. In that ruling it was pointed out that if the decree-holder had got his decree made absolute for sale it would have been permissible to agree to an extension of time, but that it was not possible to extend the statutory limit of six months prescribed in the preliminary decree.

As to question (3) the argument of the appellant is that the compromise of the 16th February 1921, did not amount to an adjustment of the decree of 1915, within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, and that even if it was such an adjustment the only power of this Court was to record the adjustment, and the Court had no power to frame a new decree embodying the terms of the adjustment. In support of the first contention reliance is placed on a ruling of the Madras High Court, Lodd Govindoss Kishna Doss v. Ramdoss Vishnadoss (2). It was held in that case that, "The adjustment referred to in O. XXI, r. 2 of the C. P. C. is a transaction which extinguishes the decree as such in whole or in part and results in a satisfaction of the whole or a portion of the decree in respect of the particular relief or reliefs granted by the decree. A transaction by which the parties agree to vary the mode by which the reliefs granted by the decree are to be realised in execution in that suit or the time when the decree becomes executable, is not an adjustment of the decree but it is a transaction which attempts to vary the terms of the decree, leading the altered terms to stand in the place of the terms of the decree so as to constitute a new executable decree." With all respect we are unable to give so narrow an interpretation to the word "adjustment". In a ruling of the Allahabad High Court, Fateh Muhammad v. Gopal Das (3), it was held that adjustment could take place by means of a new contract provided that the new contract put an end entirely to the liability under the decree. We hold that an agreement which puts an end to the liability under the decree by substituting a new liability under the agreement may properly be held to be an adjustment of the decree. It is, however, said that the power of the Court under O. XXI, r. 2 was merely to record the compromise and to proceed no further in execution of the decree that was adjusted. The decree-holder, should, it is, urged, have brought a fresh suit on the basis of the compromise agreement. Respondent's Counsel, however, on the other hand argues that an agreement which was recorded by a Court under O. XXI, r. 2 may be enforced directly in execution proceedings. Reliance is placed on Thakoor Dyal Singh v. Sarju Pershad Misser (4). As in the present case, the parties had agreed to the compromise being directly enforced in execution proceedings. The ruling professed to be based upon a Privy Council ruling, Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (5). In that ruling it was held that assuming a decree made no provision for mesne profits after a certain date but the parties in the course of execution proceedings agreed that mesne profits after that date should be realised then they could be realised in execution of the decree. Their Lordships held as follows:—"Where a Court has general jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a claim, parties may be held to an agreement that the questions between them should be heard and determined by proceedings contrary to the ordinary cursus curiæ." It is doubtful whether the Privy Council ruling which was given in 1875 can be held applicable to the facts of the present case in view of the provision of O. XX, r. 11 of the present C. P. C. of 1908. Clause (2) of this rule specifically provides that "After the passing of any such decree (where and in so far as the decree is for the payment of money) the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor—order that payment of the amount decreed should be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit". It was argued in this case by the respondent that this provision would not apply to the money due and could not be invoked as justifying the Court's order of the 16th February 1921 for two reasons. The first reason was that this provision only applies to a simple money-decree. This objection fails to give effect to the words "In so far as the decree is for the payment of money". The second objection was that the rule did not apply to a preliminary decree for sale on a mortgage. This argument comes strangely from the respondent's Counsel, who, in his argument generally has taken up the position, which we have conceded to be correct, that the decree of 1915, was not a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4. Accordingly we hold that strictly speaking the amendment of the decree of 1915, should have been effected under O. XX, r. 11 and by the Court that passed the decree. It is urged that the Court of first instance dealing with the application for execution in 1921, cannot be regarded as the Court that passed the decree. This we do not admit. Under general principles a Court exercising one capacity still remains capable of powers in another capacity. We may invoke the Privy Council ruling just considered to show that this is so. When their Lordships used the phrase "A Court having a general jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a claim" they referred to the case where an Execution Court was also the Court that passed the decree. Now this Court as an Appellate Court had the powers of the Court of first instance and it could amend the decree of 1915 because that Court of first instance had such powers. Indeed under s. 37 of the C. P. C., the decree of this Court has to be regarded as a decree of the Court of first instance. It was merely a matter of form whether this Court amended the original decree of 1915 or framed a new decree embodying the amendments settled by the compromise. Accordingly we hold that the decree framed by this Court in February 1921 was framed in exercise of powers under O. XX, r. 11 and was valid.

As to question (4), which in view of our decision on question (3) it is not really necessary to decide, we agree with the lower Court that that Court could not question the validity of the decree of this Court of February 1921, that decree being equivalent to a decree of the Court that passed the original decree. It is well-established law that the Executing Court has no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court that lawfully sends to it a decree for execution. Nor can a Court when executing its own decree question, qua Execution Court, its own power to have framed that decree. A fortiori it cannot question a decree framed by its own Appellate Court.

Accordingly we hold that the decree of 1915 was a final decree and not merely a preliminary decree and that it was a lawful and executable decree. We also hold that the decree of the 16th February 1921 framed by this Court in substitution of the decree of 1915 was a valid decree. Lastly the lower Court was not entitled to question its validity. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Pre-emption—Sale of nine items of properties by one deed—Pre-emption as to one—Partial pre-emption.

Where nine items of property are sold to nine different persons for different considerations by one set of vendors by execution and registration of a single deed of sale, there are in effect nine different sales and a suit for pre-emption with regard to one of them cannot be resisted on the ground of partial pre-emption.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 26th October 1925.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and S. N. Gupta, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. By one document, dated the 29th January, 1924, nine items of properties were sold to nine different vendees for different amounts of considerations; but there was only one document executed and registered, as the entire properties belonged to one set of vendors. Among these vendees was one Kanchan Singh, who admittedly was a co-sharer in the property purchased by him. The plaintiff has brought a suit for pre-emption against the appellant Chunni Singh only in respect of the item of the property purchased by him under the sale-deed. This property was separately ear-marked as property having been purchased by Chunni Singh, a separate amount of the sale consideration was mentioned and the other vendees had no joint interest in this property at all. The first Court dismissed the claim on the ground that this was a case of partial pre-emption, which disqualified the pre-emptor from obtaining a decree. The lower Appellate Court, in view of the specification of the shares in the sale-deed, has come to a contrary conclusion.

Although it is true that there was only one document executed, there can also be no doubt that different items of properties were sold to different persons and, therefore, there were really nine different contracts, although they were all evidenced by one document. It cannot be doubted that, if a suit were brought by the plaintiff against Kanchan Singh, he could successfully resist the claim on the ground that he was a co-sharer in the property purchased by him. The mere fact that he has allowed the other vendees to be joined in the sale-deed would, in no way, have deprived him of his right. The contention before us is that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have brought the suit against all the other vendees, that is to say, all the vendees other than Kanchan Singh. This contention cannot be accepted. If this transaction is to be deemed to consist of nine different transactions with nine different persons, then it was certainly open to the plaintiff to object to one vendee and not the others. He would, therefore, have a right to claim pre-emption against Chunni Singh, even though he has chosen not to object to the coming in of other strangers. That this was the view before the new Pre-emption Act was passed cannot be doubted. We can only refer to the case of Lachhman v. Tulsi Ram (1) where, although one solitary amount was mentioned in the sale-deed for two items of properties, at the foot of the document details were separately given. It was held by a learned Judge of this Court that it was open to the plaintiff to maintain a claim for pre-emption of either of the two properties, although both had been purchased by the same vendee. The case of Brij Narain Rai v. Ram Dhari Rai (2) is distinguishable, because there properties in two mahals were sold for one consideration and there was apparently no specification of the different prices for the two mahals.

Lastly, it is contended that the enactment of s. 16 of the new Act has altered the position. We cannot accept this contention. The law has in no way been altered. As against defendants-vendees the plaintiff could not have claimed pre-emption in respect of any property which he has not included in this suit. The provisions of s. 22 also go to suggest that, where a purchaser has a defined interest in the sale-deed, he cannot be said to have acquired the property jointly with others. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Profulla Kamal Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession of a certain land on the ground that the plaintiff is the reversioner of one Rup Chand Das who died many years ago. Rup Chand left a widow Haramani and a daughter. The daughter was married to one Mahima Chandra who lived in the house as ghar jawai. Mahima had a daughter born and brought up in the house of Haramani. She was married to defendant No. 1. It is said that the land in possession of defendant No 1 was granted under a permanent lease to him by Haramani. The finding is that defendant No. 1 was given a lease of these properties in consideration of his looking after Haramani who had no male relation to look after her or her property. For that consideration defendant No. 1 married her grand-daughter and lived in the house as ghar jawai. The learned Judge held that that was good legal necessity. I see no reason to differ from him.

On that ground the appeal with regard to the properties in the possession of defendant No. 1 must be dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Dunedin.—The plaintiff in the present set of cases is the Zemindar of Ramnad, an estate situated in the Presidency of Madras. The defendants are ryots who are tenants of the plaintiff in virtue of certain pattahs. The plaintiff complained that the defendants had cut down trees belonging to him The trees were palmyra trees, which yield a juice which is tapped from the trees, and, as it makes an intoxicating liquor, has a commercial value. The plaintiff raised separate actions against each alleged wrongdoer in the Court of the District Munsif of Manamadura. The pleading in the case was in the highest degree unsatisfactory and was, as will appear hereafter, the real cause of the unsatisfactory condition of the case on the appeal before this Board. It may be here parenthetically explaind that the ordinary position of a ryot is that he is in possession of the land for agricultural uses, but that he is not entitled to cut down trees. But in Madras there is special legislation dealing with the subject, namely, the Madras Estates Land Act, being Act I of 1908. Section 12 of that Act is in the following terms:—

"Subject to any rights which by custom or by contract in writing executed by the ryot before the passing of this Act are reserved to the landholder, every occupancy ryot shall have the right to use, enjoy and cut down all trees now in his holding and in the case of trees which after the passing of this Act may be planted by the ryot or which may naturally grow upon the holding he shall have the right to use, enjoy and cut them down, notwithstanding any contract or custom to the contrary."

In the definition clause, s. 3, sub-s. 6 "occupancy ryot" is defined:—

" 'Occupancy ryot' means a ryot having a permanent right of occupancy in his holding."

Then sub-s. 15 defines "ryot":—

" 'Ryot' means a person who holds for the purpose of agriculture ryoti land in an estate on condition of paying to the landholder the rent which is legally due upon it."

Sub-section 3 defines "holding":—

"'Holding' means a parcel, or parcels of land held under a single pattah or engagement in a single village."

Now, what the plaintiff ought to have said in each case was in plain terms that the defendants were not persons to whom s. 12 applied, because they were lessees of the trees in terms which made them usufructuaries of the trees, but did not give them the trees as a mere appanage of land let to them, and then to have averred that they had wrongfully cut down the trees. Instead of this, what he did was this (the averments in one case may be taken as a sample of the whole as they are all in terms practically identical). After averring the cutting down of the trees, he said:—

"The defendant, who is bound according to the custom of the village and zamin and according to law to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the said trees, has not done so."

To this the defendant (again taking one case as a sample) replied first, by denying that the trees had been cut and, second, by denying the custom alleged. It is thus evident that, so far, the real question as to whether the Act of 1908 applied had not been properly raised. It is true that it had been alleged that the pottah was a tree pottah. But that allegation had not been pressed home by the appropriate plea, that the result was that the Act did not apply. On the contrary a custom of payment had been set up which exactly fits the exception mentioned in the opening words of s. 12. The parties then went to trial in the Court of the District Munsif of Manamadura. He delivered a judgment. In this judgment he found as a fact that the trees had been cut. He then found in law that, as a tirva or rent, was paid for the trees, the trees belonged to the zemindar and that, therefore, at Common Law, apart from custom, if the tenants cut the trees, they must pay damages. He then went on to deal with the averment of custom as if it had been an averment of custom, not as to right of payment, which it obviously was, but as to scale of payment, which it obviously was not. He then found that there was no universal custom proved as to scale, and thus it being left to himself to determine the figure of damages, he determined them as 25 years' purchase of the annual rent value of a tree. He did not in his judgment make any mention of the Act of 1903. He granted decrees in all cases for a sum representing the 25 years' purchase of the rental value of the trees cut.

From this judgment an appeal in the form appropriate to such a case from the Munsif's Court, i. e., civil revision petition, was preferred to the High Court of Madras. This was disposed of by Moor, J. He, in his judgment, after stating the claim says this:—

"These civil revision petitions arise out of a number of small cause suits which were brought by the petitioner, the Raja of Ramnad, to recover from his tenants the value of palmyra trees on their holdings which had been wrongfully cut and appropriated by the tenants. The value of the trees was claimed at the rate of Rs. 3 per tree in one village and Rs. 6 per tree in the other two villages. In Civil Revision Petition No. 1252 of 1918 the petitioner is the defendant in one of the small cause suits. It was alleged in the plaint that the defendants, who were bound according to the custom of the village and zamin and according to law to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the trees cut, had not done so. The defendants denied having cut the trees and the custom alleged in the plaint and claimed the ownership of the trees. They further contended that the value claimed was excessive. The District Munsif found that the alleged cutting was true and that the value claimed was proper for the trees, viz., Rs. 3 and Rs. 6 and that the holding consisted of trees which were assessed to tirva. On the third point, viz., 'Whether the alleged usage was true and what relief was plaintiff entitled to', the District Munsif held that the proper amount of compensation would 'ordinarily' be the capitalised value of the annual tirva, or twenty-five times the annual tirva. The findings on the first two points being in plaintiff's favour, the only question for decision in these petitions is whether the method of calculating compensation adopted by the lower Court is correct."

He then mentions the contention of the defendants under s. 12 of the Act, but he says no more about it. In other words he seems to stick to his view that the only question left was the valuation question. He criticises unfavourably the Munsif's view of the 25 years' purchase of the rental value of the trees as the proper measure of damages, a result which, he says, he cannot extract from the proof as to custom, and he then remits the case to the inferior Court for findings on the following points:—

"1. Whether there is a valid custom entitling the landholder to claim compensation for palmyra trees cut by the defendant without the permission of the landholder?

2. If so, what is the compensation payable by the defendants?"

The case then went back to the lower Court. This time there was a different Munsif. He pronounced a very clear judgment. He said:—

"I have to give findings on the following two issues:—

(1). Whether there is a valid custom entitling the landholder to claim compensation for palmyra trees cut by the defendants without the permission of the landholder?

II. If so, what is the compensation payable to defendants?

2. Issue No 1:—

"I have heard Mr. T. C. Srinivasa Ayyangar, Pleader for plaintiff, the Raja, at great length. I have approached the question in the light of the observations contained in the judgment of High Court. I would find the issue in the negative.

"Issue No. II requires no finding in view of my finding on issue No. 1."

He also takes no notice of the Act, but assumes that he had been told that the zemindar's only right to compensation rests on a custom to receive it.

On the return to the High Court of the findings, the zemindar presented a note of objections. In these objections he, for the first time, raised definitely the true case as to the application of the Act:—

"4. The District Munsif erred in throwing the onus of proof on the plaintiff.

"5. The District Munsif erred in assuming that the Estates Land Act had any application to the present case."

The case was then resumed by the High Court with the returned findings and the objection thereto. They, in all the cases, set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suits. They granted the respondents their costs in the High Court; in one case they directed that there should be no costs in the lower Court, but in all the other cases they were silent as to the costs in the lower Court. The opinion of the learned Judge who delivered the leading judgment begins with the statement that "the counter-petitioners are the tenants of land on which trees were and are standing." He then goes on to say:—

"The remaining questions for consideration are:—

(1) Whether the District Munsif was right in allowing as damages not the value of the trees cut, but only 25 times the tirva payable, and

(2) Whether plaintiff (petitioner) is legally entitled to claim damages at all, in other words whether the tenants have got absolute right to deal with the trees in any manner without being liable for any damages for so dealing. So far as the first question is concerned, I might at once say that if the tenants are legally liable for damages, they ought to have been made to pay the market value of the trees and not 25 times the tirva. But, on the second point, I am of opinion that the defendants are not liable for any damages at all".

After dealing with an argument which seems to have been presented that the right to cut down trees does not include the right to appropriate them, which he negatives, he then comes to the true question of the case. This portion of his judgment must be quoted in full and is as follows:—

"Lastly it was argued that the defendants are not ryots holding lands for agricultural purposes but that they are merely persons who have been allowed to enjoy the produce of the trees on payment of some remuneration to the landholder which remuneration does not fall within the definition of rent in the Estates Land Act, and that, therefore, s. 12 has no application at all. The muchilikas, Ex. E series, executed by the tenants do not, in my opinion, support this contention. They are all ordinary muchilikas of the kind usually executed by ryots holding land under the zemindar. The only special feature of these muchilikas is that the fixed rent payable by the ryot who holds the land, calculated on the area of the land, which is described as Regai punja, is increased by an amount varying with the number and size of the trees in the holding. Under the definition in cl. 1 of s. 3 of the Act, agriculture includes horticulture, and the fact that the rent for the land varies with the number of trees standing thereon does not make the ryot a mere licensee enjoying the produce of the trees under the landlord. He is the occupancy ryot of the land itself with the trees thereon, though paying varying rents according to the number of trees existing on the land. (We were told in the course of the argument that the assessment was varied once in six years, according to the number of trees at the time of the periodical settlement). Reliance was, however placed on the decision in Murugappa Chettiar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) for the contention that these were not muchilikas for the land held by an occupancy ryot, but that these are agreements for payment of vari or tax payable in respect of the trees held on tree pattas. We have not before us the muchilika executed in that case and if, on a consideration of the terms of that muchilika, it was held that it was an agreement by a licensee to pay tirva for enjoying the produce of trees without any kudiwaram right in him in the land on which the trees stood, I accept (if I may say so with respect) the correctness of that decision. But, as I said, I am satisfied in this case that the land itself on which the trees stand is held on patta, though the rent payable for that land varied with the number of trees standing on it, owing to a certain amount (varying according to the number of trees) being added to the invariable rent based on the extent of the land. Therefore the Estates Land Act does apply to the relationship of landlord and tenants in this case."

Spencer, J., concurs and says as follows:—

"The suggestion that s. 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act does not apply in this case was put forward on the assumption that the pattas in the suits were purely tree pattas and pattas for land. But a reference to the muchilikas on the record shows that this is not the case. I agree with my learned brother both on the general question as to the effect of s. 12 of the Madras Estates Land Act, and as to the order to be passed in particular cases."

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 60; 1 L. W. 881.

It is, therefore, quite clear that the case has been decided upon the ground that the ryots were holders of land on which trees stood, that they had cut trees standing on their own holdings, and that they had the right so to cut them in respect of s. 12 of the Madras Act. It is clear also that, had the tenants' right to the trees not depended on the fact that the trees stood on their holdings, but had depended on a separate lease of the trees as trees, whether trees stood on their holdings or on the holdings of other persons, the learned Judges would have come to the opposite conclusion and would have held that the damages for illegal cutting were to be measured by the value of the trees so cut and, lastly, it is clear that the reason that they held that the trees in question were held as part of the land holdings and not in respect of separate title was not in respect of any local knowledge as evidenced by proof led, but because they determined the fact as a matter of construction of the leases in question of which the muchilikas or tenants' counter-part were produced. Their Lordships are in entire concurrance with the learned Judges as to the result in law if trees are held on what may be called separate title. In such a case s. 12 of the Madras Act does not apply, and they think that the case cited of Murugappa Chettiar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) was rightly decided. They think also that the result that follows was rightly affirmed by the learned Judges, i.e., that the full value of the trees which had been illegally cut must be paid for.

But their Lordships are quite unable to concur with the reasons of judgment on the further point. From the reference made to the Ex. E series of the muchilikas it would seem as if the learned Judges had exclusively directed their attention to a case where there is both land and trees which are included in the lease. In one case at least, by a comparison and reference, perhaps it is possible to infer that some at least of the trees are on the land let, but that is not the case with all. Moreover there are a large number of muchilikas which deal with trees and trees alone. How can it be possible to deduce from this, as a matter of construction, that these trees are on a land holding of the person to whom the tree right is granted? How can it be told that he holds any land at all? It is matter of common knowledge—and the case already mentioned is an instance—that, in view of the known use of the palmyra trees, leases of what are only the usufruct of the trees as such are granted. Many of the muchilikas produced point to such a lease. But in the judgment they have all been compelled to suffer the fate of the muchilika, which is above mentioned. If the judgment stands it would be very far reaching and, in granting leave to appeal to the King in Council, the learned Judges seem fully to appreciate that fact. In their Lordships' view, the facts on which the case depends have not been properly found one way or other.

There are just three situations in which palmyra trees may be held :—

1. They may simply be growing on land which is held by a ryot though no mention of trees be made in any lease.
2. They may be growing on land held by a ryot, but they may be let as a separate entity in his lease.
3. They may be let to a person on whose land they do not grow.

Assuming trees to be cut without the leave of the landholder the position in law as regards 1 and 3 seems simple.

As regards 1. Section 12 of the Act of 1908 applies and the landholder has no claim.

As regards 3, s. 12 of the Act of 1908 does not apply and the landholder has a claim for the full value of the trees so cut.

As regards 2, their Lordships will not express an opinion because, as yet, there is no determination of the question so far as they know, by the Courts in India, and they would wish such a determination before coming themselves to a conclusion.

But as regards the cases in this appeal, there are no materials for ascertaining positively in regard to the 30 separate cases in which of the three categories each case falls. They cannot be taken in a block. Each case stands on its own facts. Their Lordships have, therefore, come to the conclusion that these cases must go back to the Courts in India to determine on evidence of fact in each particular case into which category it falls, and, in accordance with that determination, to pronounce or refuse decrees in each particular case. As regards costs, for the reasons stated in this judgment, their Lordships consider that the confusion into which the cases have fallen is largely due to the inadequate pleading of the plaintiff. At the same time the defendants ought not to have denied the cutting—a fact which has been determined against them. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the case should be remitted as aforesaid, that the respondents should have the costs of the appeal before this Board, and in each of the Courts below, except the costs of the original inquiry before the first Munsif; that, in that inquiry in the case of all defendants who denied cutting of trees, there should be no costs to either party and that the costs of the future progress of the case should be determined by the Courts in India. They will humbly advise His Majesty to issue an order in accordance with these views.

First appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 30th March 1924.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Suit No. 1 of 1919 in the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, the plaintiffs sued in respect of a field No. 79 of Mauza Dapora which they stated was held in trust for the villagers in connection with the supply of water at a certain well to which cisterns or tanks are attached. The field was recorded as sir, and the defendants were the sons of Dattu malguzar. The plaintiffs' case was that a very old custom amounting to a constructive trust that the field should be leased to the person who undertakes to keep the cisterns filled with water, and that the person should take the income of the field, rent-free, as his remuneration, a contribution being assessed on and collected from the villagers for paying the proportional assessment of the field, existed. The suit was brought by members of the public with permission obtained under s. 92 of the C. P. C., and the reliefs claimed were as follows:—

"(a) A declaration that field No. 79 is trust of the nature described in the plaint.

(b) The defendants be removed from position as trustees of the field and be restrained from interfering with the management of it.

(c) The Court should appoint the trustees from among the members of the proprietary body.

(d) A direction that the field vests in the trustees so appointed.

(e) The Court will settle a scheme for carrying out the object of the trust to the best advantage of the village.

(f) The Court will grant other reliefs as the case may require."

The case went to trial on the following issues:—

1. Was the land in suit subject to a trust as described by the plaintiffs?

2. Has the trust been managed from time immemorial by a Committee consisting of the malguzars of the village?

3. Has the land been let out by such Committee on condition that in lieu of rent the tenant was to keep the cisterns filled?

4. Has the tenant for the time being always filled the cisterns?

5. Did the defendant appoint the person from year to year for filling the cisterns on pay that was variable and subsequently levied by assessment on the malguzars and tenants of the village?

6. Or was the proportionate sir assessment contributed by the villagers and co-sharers in order that the tenants should hold rent-free and fill the cisterns?

7. Was the grants if any made before the Land Revenue Act came into force? If so, what effect has that?

8. To what reliefs are the plaintiffs entitled."

The case resulted in the following decree:—

".................it is ordered and declared that field No. 79 is held in trust by the whole proprietary body of the malguzars of Dapora to be let out year by year, rent-free to the person who undertakes to maintain the water supply in the public well with the cisterns attached as heretofore, the field remaining recorded as the sir of lambardar and collection being made on a basis of acreage of the holdings of those villagers who hold land for cultivations as was done before the defendant took possession of the land, the amount collected being paid to the lambardar. It is further declared that the field vests in the whole proprietary body and it is directed that on Sheoratri of each year the malguzars be called for the purpose of letting the field for the coming agricultural year, the person for the work of filling the cisterns and cultivating the field, being chosen by majority of those who attend the meeting of the co-sharers and that the sum of Rs. 640 15-0 be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff for costs of the suit. Defendants shall bear their own costs Rs. 329."

That case reached this Court as First Appeal No. 9 of 1923, being heard by Kinkhede, A. J. C. In this Court's judgment the Judge writes inter alia:—

"The attitude taken up by the defendants as disclosed in the evidence cannot be anything but hostile to the interests of the public, and to the very object of the trust, and will doubtless frustrate the intention of the founders of the trust. The evidence on record as to probabilities of the case justify the inference that in face of such attitude the defendants could not be safely relied upon to hold and manage the property in the best interests of the public and for the benefit of the community or in a matter which will serve in every way the purpose for which the trust was created or the property dedicated. It is beyond doubt that the right of management vests and ought to vest in the whole body of proprietors and not in any single individual proprietor, although one single proprietor may, by the express or tacit consent of the whole body, act for, and on behalf of, all of them, and for the common benefit of all the co-sharers and villagers. A trust once lawfully created for either a charitable or religious or public purpose is irrevocable, and similarly once a person accepts the trust he cannot be allowed to repudiate it. But the hostile attitude of the defendants in the past few years has given rise to this litigation and I do not think that the interests of the public will be properly safeguarded if the right of management is allowed to remain solely in the hands of the defendants. It is always expected that the conduct and procedure of persons who are entrusted with the management of a trust property must be bona fide and straight and such as would inspire confidence and not create suspicion. Here the defendant's intention to appropriate the income or a portion thereof at any rate, to themselves exclusively, has been clearly manifested by them. Their future management cannot be, in these circumstances, safely presumed to be, or likely to be in the interests of the public, nor is it likely that the beneficiaries can be pursuaded just now to believe that they (defendants) will fulfil the obligations of the trust, quite disinterestedly. I have no doubt that the management, if allowed to remain in their hands, will necessarily be highly prejudicial to the interests of the general public. I cannot, therefore, accede to the request and accept the conditional offer, made by the appellants' Counsel to allow his clients to act as trustees, in case it be found by me that the defendant hold the property as trust property, subject to the obligations of letting it out to the person who agrees to maintain the water supply of the cisterns. The object of the trust will be frustrated by giving effect to this request because, I am afraid, repeated efforts or injunctions to restrain the defendants from doing any acts likely to prejudice the interests of the trust would, perhaps, become necessary under certain contingencies. This will necessarily interfere with the due and smooth working and administration of the trust and the management of the trust property, which must be the chief aim and endeavour of the Court to achieve in matters such as these. By the by I must make it clear that this does not, in any way disentitle the defendants from exercising their right of voting or of having a voice, in the matter of the management of the trust property as members of the committee of management in virtue of their position as the co-sharer malguzars of the village. They will, by virtue of their position as such co-sharer malguzars of the village, be on the committee of management and can certainly have voice in the matter, in that capacity and influence the proceedings of the committee. In short, whatever part the defendants or any of them might take will be as trustees and in virtue of their position as such in the matter of the administration of the trust. Whatever collection, therefore, may come, on account of the management of this land, to the hands of the person who may be the lambardar for the time being, will be held by him in this capacity of a trustee and he will be accountable for them to the committee of management, consisting of the members of the proprietary body, who may be in office for the time being or from time to time, as the case may be."

The Judge further wrote.—

"I am not asked by either party to alter the form of the decree granted by the First Court in any respect. Apparently they were satisfied with its form. What I have said above is only to make the meaning clear. The main question on which they fought was whether the property was trust property or not and whether it was to be managed by them as such trust property or not. I hold that the plaintiffs have established the fact that the field in suit is trust property and is liable to be held and managed as trust property even in the future for the benefit of the village community and of the cattle in Dapora."

The decision of the lower Court was confirmed, and the appeal was dismissed.

The decree-holders then applied to the first Court stating as follows:—

"That in pursuance of the terms of the decree a meeting of the co-sharers of the mouza was convened and was duly attended by the defendants judgment-debtors on 21st February 1925 (the Shivratri day) fixed by the decree. At that meeting the person selected to be placed in charge of the trust work of filling the cisterns is one Onkar son of Dattu, a tenant of the mouza and he was duly selected by a majority of the co-sharers assembled there. The petitioners herewith attach a kabuliyat obtained from the person so selected and showing the terms of his appointment for the ensuing year."

And the decree-holders asked "that the Court be pleased to place the said Onkar son of Dattu in possession of the trust property field No. 79 of Mauza Dapora to which he is entitled under the terms of the decree as a necessary consequence of his appointment to discharge the duties of the trust or as such other suitable order be passed as the Court thinks fit for the due administration of the trust and the carrying out of the scheme settled therefor by this Court and confirmed on appeal." The Judge in his order of the 30th March last held that the directions as to delivery of possession of the field in suit can be enforced in execution proceedings, and that no separate suit was necessary. Against that order the present appeal has been filed.

It is clear that if, in execution the tenant appointed by the Committee is not given possession of the land, a separate suit would have to be brought. It is argued here that the decree-holders in the suit would again sue for possession, and that the decree of the District Court is merely a declaratory one of their rights, and that the scheme cannot be executed under the decree. It is true that Mr. Parry, District Judge, refused to give the relief of possession, and from that decision an appeal was filed in this Court which I disposed of on 4th December 1924. There I wrote:—(F. A. No. 80 of 1924).

"This appeal can be disposed of by a few words. In the lower Court when the plaintiffs sought to execute their decree they asked that the field be put in possession of Khushal, the person whom the whole proprietary body or a majority of them had decided to let out the field to. Here, however, the prayer is perfectly different. They ask that the plaintiffs be put in joint possession of the field No. 79 of Mouza Dapora This question had never been before the lower Court, and I decline to adjudicate upon it until it had been put to the lower Court and decided by that Court."

I do not think that these proceedings are any bar to the present appeal by the decree-holders.

It is argued that the scheme cannot be executed and I am referred to Runganatha v. Krishanswami (1), and Lachman Prasad v. Munia (2). It seems to me that in the present case the decree can be executed in the manner asked for by the decree-holders and that the Court, in granting their request, is but carrying out the scheme provided for in the decree. In Sakharam Daji Ganpule v. Ganu Raghu Gurao (3), it was held that a scheme once settled by a Court cannot be altered except by the Court, and that this would preclude suits between parties to establish a private right, which if established would interfere with a charitable scheme settled by the Court: see also Damodarbhat v. Bhogilal (4) and Rama Das v. Hanumuntha Row (5). The scheme has been settled by the Court, and it is absurd to suppose that yearly suits must be brought to carry out that scheme. And it seems that the direction in the scheme of this nature may be enforced in execution application by persons interested: see Prayag Dossji Varu Mahant v. Tirumala Srirangacharlavaru (6) I think that under the circumstances of the case the delivery of possession of the field in suit can be enforced by execution proceedings and that a separate suit is unnecessary. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs, and the appellants will pay the respondents' costs. I fix Pleader's fees at 25 rupees.

Miscellaneous Petition No. 7 of 1926 has been filed by the plaintiffs asking that the scheme be amended by the insertion of the following:—

(1) That after the meeting of the co-sharers at about the Shivratri time is held, they should make a report of the same to the District Court (presided in by the District Judge) through the Chairman of the meeting and inform the Judge of the person selected by it then at that meeting.

(2) That the said Judge after hearing the parties (if this is thought necessary) confirm the selection of the person or pass such other orders as the said Judge thinks fit.

(3) That after the confirmation of the selection of the person to hold possession of the field held in trust he be put in possession of the same.

(4) That all other matters pertaining to the administration of the trust be dealt with by the Judge on the executive side of the case.

As I have held that possession of the field can be given in execution of the decree, it seems to me unnecessary to amend in any way that decree, and I, therefore, do not do so. The miscellaneous petition was heard with the present First Appeal, and I, therefore, make no separate order as to costs with regard to it.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Martineau, in Civil Appeal No. 1683 of 1924, dated the 20th January 1925, and printed as 86 Ind. Cas. 563, reversing that of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 17th April 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parkash Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 29th of March, 1923, the District Judge of Ambala made an order for the grant of Letters of Administration cum testamento annexo to Musam-

mat Parbati in respect of the estate of her deceased husband and at the same time directed her to give a bond with one surety engaging for the collection, getting in and administering of the estate. It appears that no time was fixed within which the security was to be furnished, and though Musammat Parbati produced in March, 1924, a security bond, it was not accepted because she failed to appear on the date fixed for enquiry in regard to the surety. Consequently, the District Judge passed an order revoking the grant of Letters of Administration.

On appeal, the order of the District Judge has been set aside by Mr. Justice Martineau, who holds that the grant can be revoked only under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act, and that failure to furnish security does not constitute a "just cause" within the meaning of the section. Now, while we agree with the learned Judge that s. 50 of the Act is exhaustive, and is not merely illustrative, we are of opinion that the Court has inherent power to enforce obedience to its direction. It is quite clear that the Letters of Administration cannot be granted unless the administrator furnishes a security bond in compliance with the direction of the Court; and indeed, in this case the Letters of Administration were never committed to Musammat Parbati and could not be committed without her furnishing security as directed by the Court. There can, therefore, be no question of the revocation of the Letters of Administration and we consider that when the condition, on the fulfilment of which alone the grant can be made, is not satisfied, the Court has inherent power to withdraw the order for grant so as to prevent an abuse of its process, vide, Surendra Nath Pramanik v. Amrita Lal Pal Chaudhuri (1).

While we hold that the District Judge was competent to withdraw the order for the grant of letters, we consider that as Musammat Parbati is the sole legatee under the Will of her husband, she should be given another opportunity to furnish security. We accordingly direct her to furnish, within six months, a security bond with one surety for the due administration of the estate. In the event of her failure to comply with this order, the District Judge is authorised to withdraw the order for the grant of Letters of Administration to her. The appeal is accepted pro tanto, and the parties are directed to bear their own costs throughout.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 202 OF 1924.

November 20, 1925.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13—*Ex parte decree in reference under Land Acquisition Act—Refusal to set aside—Appeal.

No appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside an exparte decree made in a reference under the Land Acquisition Act.

Hasun Molla v. Tasiruddin, 15 Ind. Cas. 925; 39 C. 393, followed.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned District Judge of Dacca refusing to set aside an ex parte order dismissing a reference made to him under the Land Acquisition Act for default.

Mr. Guha, who has appeared for the respondent, contends that in this case no appeal lies and in support of his contention, he has referred us to the case of Hasun Molla v. Tasiruddin (1). The decision is undoubtedly on all fours with the present case. The learned Judges pointed out that an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree made in a reference under the Land Acquisition Act is not an award and, therefore, no appeal lies against that order.

The appeal must, therefore, fail as being incompetent and is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 25—Marriage, promise of—Promise to marry married lady—Legality—Fixing day for marriage after her divorce—Promise to marry inferred—Damages for breach of promise to marry—Interference by Privy Council.

A promise to marry a lady who is already married is void even though made in contemplation of a divorce which is subsequently effected. But where after the divorce is effected the parties fix a day for their marriage, a promise of marriage may be inferred and one is not bound to take it as a ratification of a contract which in itself is void.

Ditcham v. Worrall, (1880) 5 C. P. D. 410; 49 L. J. C. P. 688; 43 L. T. 286; 29 W. R. 59; 44 J. P. 799 and DeThoren v. Attorney-General, (1876) 1 A. C. 686, referred to.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council will not interfere with a measure of damages unless there is something very clearly wrong with the figure.

A promise to marry is a sufficient consideration in itself on either side.

JUDGMENT.

Viscount Dunedin.—This is an action by a lady for breach of promise of marriage against the defendant. The case was tried by the District Judge of the Civil and Military Station, Bangalore. He formulated the following issue: "Was there a valid contract of marriage?" Their Lordships think perhaps the expression there used ought rather to have been whether there was a definite promise of marriage, because the expression "contract of marriage" is usually used in another sense, but it is quite plain what he actually meant. He found that issue in favour of the plaintiff. He then went on with another issue: "If there was such a valid contract, did the defendant or the plaintiff break it either expressly or impliedly?" He found that issue also in favour of the plaintiff. When the case went to appeal the learned Resident in Mysore found that the engagement did subsist up to the time of the defendant's marriage with anothar lady, and, therefore, a breaking of the contract was necessarily inferred.

The point was taken by the plaintiff, the respondent in the main appeal, that these two findings, being concurrent findings of fact, cannot be interfered with, and, to a certain extent their Lordships think that is true, but at the same time the defendant put forward what he considered a legal plea, because he said that upon a proper consideration of the promise which had been held proved, that promise was not a promise which could be recognised in law, because it was merely a ratification of a void promise which had been made before.

That plea arises upon these facts. It is undoubtedly the case that the defendant first promised to marry the plaintiff when, as a matter of fact, she was a married woman. It was understood between them that a divorce was going to take place, and a divorce afterwards did take place; but it has been quite well settled, and no one can doubt the law upon the subject, that a promise made in such circumstances is a void promise. Nevertheless, the parties considered themselves as engaged persons; behaved as engaged persons, and, though their Lordships need not go through the various circumstances of the case, it is certain that after the divorce proceedings had gone through, and consequently the plaintiff became a free woman, the defendant bought her a ring and actually arranged the date on which they were to be married.

The legal point is whether, from circumstances like that, it is possible to infer what really is in law a new promise to marry. There is no difficulty as to consideration because the promise to marry is sufficient consideration. It seems to their Lordships that the case is in precisely the same position as the case of Ditcham v. Worrall (1), and their Lordships cannot do better than read a few words from the judgment of Lindley, J. (as he then was) in that case. He says at page 414*:—

"Unless, therefore, the Statute (he is speaking of the Infants Relief Act) forbids such an inference from their conduct, it appears to me that the Jury might have found, and ought to have found, that there was a promise by the defendant after he came of age to marry the plaintiff on the day ultimately fixed for the marriage, and not a mere ratification of a promise made previously to marry at a day to be thereafter, fixed," and then he gives reasons for saying that that opinion is warranted by the decision of the House of Lords in the case of De Thoren v. Attorney-General (2). Their Lordships entirely agree with that reasoning. It seems to them that when persons fix a day for their marriage it may be inferred from this that there is a promise of marriage, and one is not bound to take it as a ratification of a contract which in itself is void, and which, therefore, in law cannot be rectified by anything that can be subsequently done.

Accordingly their Lordships think that the learned Judges here on the facts, which cannot be controverted because they are concurrent findings, came to a conclusion which they were perfectly warranted in law in coming to.

Although their Lordships did not stop the appellant from reading the evidence, they really think that the examination of the evidence as to how the parties behaved afterwards was scarcely relevant in view of these two findings, but, as it has been gone into, their Lordships would wish to say that they think that the learned Resident has taken a perfectly correct view of what happened between these two parties. They had lover's quarrels, each was unwilling to take the first step of reconciliation, and so they drifted on with periods of separation, but after a time came together in India, when this renewed promise was made.

Now the learned District Judge held that the matter was made worse by what he considered was a proof of seduction. That proof of seduction was rejected, and rejected, their Lordships think upon perfectly right grounds, by the learned Resident on appeal. The result was that the learned Resident, on appeal, reduced the damages from Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 15,000.

Their Lordships, whatever their own views would have been if they had been trying the case, would never think of interfering with a measure of damages which had been fixed by a learned Judge unless they saw that there was something very clearly wrong with the figure which he had fixed upon, and, therefore, as regards this part of the judgment also they do not consider it right that it should be altered.

Their Lordships will therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the main appeal should be dismissed, and that the respondent should have such costs as a pauper can obtain, because she has been allowed to defend in forma pauperis, and, as her cross-appeal has not been insisted upon, it should also be dismissed, and that there should be no costs to either party in that cross-appeal.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by certain creditors named Majumdars against two orders of the District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 19th September, 1923 and 13th December of the same year.

A preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal is out of time having regard to the provisions of sub-s. (4) of s. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is necessary to state a few facts before I deal with that objection. The creditors of the insolvent put in their proofs under the provisions of s. 33 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and when the proofs had been put in they were referred to the Receiver who had been appointed to the insolvent's estate to be dealt with by him and for a report to the District Judge. The Receiver dealt with the various proofs and made his report to the District Judge on the 12th of September, 1923. That report is to be found in the paper-book and it bears this date. The Receiver in his report rejected the proofs of the Majumdars for reasons which it is not necessary for me now to state. It appears from the order-sheet dated the 12th September, 1923 that the report was submitted to the Court on that date and the order concludes with these words 'Put up the report for further orders.' Then comes the next order No. 53 dated the 19th September 1923. On that date the District Judge confirmed the Receiver's report dated the 12th September, 1923 and two further reports of the 17th and 19th of September. We asked and asked in vain as to the procedure which is adopted when a report of this nature is confirmed and we have been unable to ascertain whether notice is given to the creditors or at any rate to those creditors whose proofs have been rejected by the Receiver. Under s. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the creditor who is aggrieved by an act of the Receiver is entitled to apply to the Court who has power to confirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of and there is a proviso to the section providing that no application is to be entertained after the expiry of 21 days from the date of the act or decision complained of, that is to say, the Statute clearly gives to every creditor aggrieved by the action of the Receiver, as these creditors were aggrieved by reason of the rejection of their proofs, 21 days in which to bring the matter before the Court (in this case before the District Judge). Within 21 days, namely, on the 1st October, 1923 the Majumdars filed a petition of objection against the Receiver's report. On the 24th of May, the notice was served on the judgment-debtor and on certain creditors and apparently a question was raised on behalf of creditor No. 3 that no appeal lay. Eventually on the 13th December 1923, the District Judge rejected the application holding that as the report that had already been confirmed by him no appeal lay against that decision and that the proper remedy was by way of appeal to this Court. Now what is urged on behalf of the creditors who are opposing the appeal is that the appeal is out of time as it was not preferred within 90 days from the confirmation of the report, namely, the 19th September, 1923, and it is said that this is really the order by which the Majumdars are aggrieved and that inasmuch as the appeal was not preferred within 90 days from that date this appeal should be rejected or dismissed as out of time. Now the Majumdars had put in their objection within 21 days allowed by s. 68 ...and they were quite entitled to assume that the District Judge would consider their objection and, would not reject it on the ground on which it was rejected on the 13th December, and in my opinion, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to confirm the Receiver's report except by consent of parties until 21 days had elapsed within which the creditors who were aggrieved could apply to the Court for the reversal or modification of the act or decision by which they were aggrieved. The result is, therefore, that the preliminary objection fails and that the appeal was preferred in time because it was preferred within 90 days from the date of the order by which for the first time the Majumdars found that the District Judge had refused to hear their application of the 1st October which had been filed within time. Suppose the Majumdars had appealed from the order of the 19th September, 1923 without making the application which they did to the District Judge they would then have been told that their appeal was premature because the District Judge had not dealt with their application and had neither re-considered the Receiver's report or dismissed the application.

(2) (1876) 1 A. C. 686.

For these reasons, therefore, we think that the preliminary objection fails and this really disposes of any argument that can be urged against the appeal because clearly for the reasons which we have indicated the Majumdars were entitled to have their objections to the Receiver's report which were made within time considered and dealt with by the District Judge. It is suggested that in any case the appeal will be infructuous as all the assets of the insolvent's estate have been distributed. Whether that is so or not we do not know. We think for the reasons we have indicated, that this appeal is entitled to succeed and it is accordingly decreed and we accordingly set aside the order of the District Judge of the 13th December, 1923 and direct him to consider the Majumdars' objections to the Receiver's report on their merits.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs in this appeal—hearing fee, three gold mohurs.

Contract—Sale of goods—Breach by vendor in delivery—Series of sellers and buyers—Ultimate buyer himself vendor higher up in chain—Breach of contract with third persons—Suit by buyer for return of advance, whether maintainable.

The M Mills sold certain bales of yarn to V and sons, who sold them to the plaintiffs, who sold to H who sold to M and sons, who sold to A and sons, who again sold to the defendants, who in their turn sold to the plaintiffs who paid an advance of about Rs. 7,000 towards the contract. At the time of these transactions the market was in a highly speculative state and each one of these sales was made at a profit. But at the end the market price had fallen and the goods were not worth what the various buyers had paid for them. In a suit by the plaintiffs for return of the advance with interest the defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs could not sue them because they themselves were in default higher up in the chain of buyers and sellers:

Held, that since the defendants had contracted to deliver the bales to the plaintiffs, they could not be heard to say that the plaintiffs were out of Court because they had been in default at an earlier stage of the series and broken a contract not with the defendants but with somebody else. Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and N. Chandrasekhara Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This appeal has given rise to a very interesting argument nonetheless so that both Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Iyer and Mr. S. Varadachari who argued the appeal with great ability agreed in saying that whatever the result of the case was to be, the judgment of the learned Judge, which was a sort of compromise between the case of the plaintiffs and the defendants could not possibly stand.

The facts are very short. The contract relates to a batch of bales of yarn and the contract in question in the suit is one of 28th August 1918 for the sale of 86 bales by the defendants as sellers and the plaintiffs as buyers. The plaintiffs paid on the contract an advance of Rs. 6,966 and their claim is for that money with interest.

The point that arises in the appeal is best shown by an account of the history of these bales. There was a sale in the first instance by the Madura Mills to Venkatachalapathy Iyer and sons, who sold them to the plaintiffs, who sold to Hanumantha Iyer, who sold to P. S. N. Muruganathan Chettiar and Sons who sold to Arumugha Mudaliar and Sons, who again sold to the defendants, who sold in their turn to the plaintiffs so that the plaintiffs occur twice in the chain. What happened, of course, was that the market was in a highly speculative state and that each one of these sales was made at a profit. But at the end the market price had fallen and the goods were not worth what the various buyers had paid for them. In these circumstances the plaintiffs brought the action in which they did not claim damages based on the difference between the contract and the market price but agreed to treat the contract as a nullity on the return of the advance they had paid together with interest. The answer of the defendants is that the plaintiffs cannot sue them because they themselves were in default higher up in the chain of buyers and sellers. Plaintiffs did not take delivery from Venkatachalapathy Iyer or give delivery to Hanumantha Iyer and all the contracts down to the goods reaching the defendants were settled in one way or another, the ultimate result being that the bales were never delivered to any body because the ultimate buyer Venkatachalapathy Iyer obtained a cancellation of his contract with the Madura Mills and the defendants themselves settled with Arumuga Mudaliar who got some money out of them. The short point put for the defendants is that as the plaintiffs themselves were in default higher up in the chain of buyers and sellers they cannot have any remedy against the defendants.

The first thing that emerges is that this was in effect a contract for specific goods. The bales are described and their whole history is given. On that it would be possible for Mr. Varadachari to argue that the contract on its true construction was a contract for specific goods conditional on their reaching the hands of the defendants. But that argument is of no assistance to him, because the position would then be that its impossibility of performance having arisen, though through no fault of the defendants, they could not under Indian Law retain the monies they had received from the plaintiffs by way of advance. I am putting it in favour of the defendants because it is quite obvious that it would be equally arguable to say that as the defendants had agreed to deliver certain bales of yarn they had put themselves in the position of warranting that the sellers in all the preceding links in the chain would fulfil their contract. In order to succeed in this suit, which I have already pointed out is not one for damages, the defendants have to go further and say that by reason of the plaintiffs' default to deliver to Hanumantha Iyer, the plaintiffs are disentitled to take the attitude that this contract must be looked at by itself, as they were indirectly responsible by their failure to fulfil the contract with a third person for the default—the inevitable default—of the defendants.

The point is not covered by any direct authority but it appears to me that the law on the subject is clear. The defendants undertook to deliver bales to the plaintiffs and ran the risk of a breach of any one of the links of the chain which preceded their contract. In my opinion, it is a mere accident that one of those links—it may be the defaulting link—is the plaintiffs themselves. If I am right in my view that the defendants took the risk of all previous contracts being duly executed, they took the risk of the breach of the plaintiffs' contracts either with Venkatachalapathy Iyer as buyer or with Hanumantha Iyer as seller, as well as any other of the links. I may further point out that if the defendants were right in their contention, it would be difficult for them to justify the fact that having brought a suit against Arumuga Mudaliar and sons they settled it on terms whereby they put money into their pockets for this breach. In my opinion, the defendants having contracted to deliver these bales to the plaintiffs they cannot be heard to say that the plaintiffs are out of Court because they had been in default at an earlier stage of the series and broken a contract not with the defendants but with somebody else.

Although we listened to a very able and interesting argument from both the learned Vakils, I do not myself think that it is really a matter of very great difficulty and it seems to me for the purpose of this case that it may be treated as an accident that the plaintiffs' name recurs twice in the series of buyers and sellers because I think that for the purpose of adjusting the rights of parties each contract must be considered solely by itself.

The result is that the appeal will be allowed with costs throughout; defendants ordered to return the deposit.

I see no justification for the plaintiffs claiming interest at the rate of 12 per cent. and I think the justice of this case will be met if the defendants, who have had the plaintiffs' money in their pockets all these years, be ordered to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of default which is the 2nd September 1921 till to day and further interest at the rate of 6 per cent. till payment.

The other Appeal No. 99 will in consequence be dismissed without costs.

Viswanatha Sastri, J.—I agree with my Lord.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 49, scope of—Suit for compensation for trees cut by occupancy tenants—Limitation.

A suit by the landlord against his occupancy tenant for compensation for the trees cut is a suit for compensation for the breach of an implied contract not specifically provided in the Limitation Act and is governed by 3 years' limitation under Art. 49, Sch. I, Limitation Act. [p. 336, col. 2; p. 337, col. 1.]

Article 49 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act covers all other cases of specific moveable property wrongfully taken or wrongfully detained which do not arise out of theft or dishonest conversion as provided by Art. 48. [p. 337, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar, dated the 7th August 1923.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I cannot interfere in this appeal. The plaintiff sues, as zemindar, some occupancy tenants who cut down some trees and sold them. The case is not without its humorous aspect. The plaintiff alleged that the trees were cut down in April, 1922. He did not say that there was theft or concealment, so as to make Art. 48 applicable, or that the matter came to his knowledge at a later date. What he said was that inspite of repeated demands for the money, not for the trees, the defendants refused to pay, and he claimed damages to the extent of Rs. 500. It reads like a claim for trespsss upon immoveable property in cutting down the trees and for conversion of moveable property by turning them into money after they have been cut down. This would be prima facie a theft; but inasmuch as the defendants are occupancy tenants of the zemindar, there is a contract between them, and to cut down trees in breach of the landlord's right is clearly a breach of contract. So the action might be said to relate to compensation for breach of contract. All this would be unimportant in the ordinary way, because the plaintiff can always waive the contract; but the humorous part of the case is that, according to the finding of the lower Court the plaintiff, having thought that he had a perfectly good claim for Rs. 500 deliberately waited until the Statute of Limitation became a serious difficulty in his way, and then commenced this suit, fraudulently alleging that the act complained of occurred years after it really did, when every body knew that it was a lie. This sounds like the conduct of a lunatic; but I am bound by the findings of the lower Court in the matter. The plaintiff, having selected this curious line to adopt, did not bother himself about the Statute of Limitation, but the defendants did, and admitted that they had sold the trees in the exercise of their lawful right about four years before the suit and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by three years' limitation. They were very careful not to say by which article. It would have been much better if the Courts below had discussed the case on the merits because if the defendants had done it under a right, no puzzle would have arisen about the statutory limitation. But the lower Appellate Court has found that the trees were cut more than four years ago and that the claim is time-barred. It obviously meant to hold that a period of three years barred the suit; but it obviously followed the example of the defendants and refrained from deciding which article was applicable, so that the plaintiff was in this position that the findings of the Courts below had entirely altered the aspect of his case and he found himself with a time-barred claim, although no body concerned had ventured to say why it was time-barred. So he hit upon the ingenious idea—this is another humorous aspect of this case—of selecting Art. 120, for which six years were provided. Now Art. 120 says that six years is applicable to a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere; and one cannot blame him (the plaintiff); if neither his opponents nor two Courts of Justice had discovered any article, which was applicable in this case, he should ask this Court to hold that this is a suit for which no article can be found elsewhere. That would be an extremely easy solution of this case. I am afraid that several articles can be found elsewhere, and the only difficulty that I have is to decide which is the right one. As this is an act done by an occupancy tenant in excess of his right, it clearly arises out of contract, and it seems to me impossible to hold that it is not a suit for compensation for the breach of an implied contract not specifically provided for in the Limitation Act—the implied contract being not to cut down trees. It seems to me also that Art. 49 must apply. Articles 48 and 49 may be read together. Article 48 distinctly deals with specific moveable property acquired by theft or dishonest misappropriation and for compensation for wrongfully detaining the same. No body could say that there is anything of this kind here. It has not been found, but the defendants by their written statement claim, that they had a right to cut down the trees. It would be, therefore, wrong, and I do not know why the learned Vakil asks this Court to hold that they were guilty of theft in cutting down the trees. Article 49 to my mind covers all other cases of specific moveable property wrongfully taken, or wrongfully detained, which do not arise out of theft or dishonest conversion as provided by Art. 48; and, although to cut down trees in breach of an occupancy tenancy agreement is not only a breach of the agreement but also a trespass to immoveable property, yet when the trees have been cut down, they certainly become specific moveable property, and if they are taken away and sold, the suit is one for compensation as defined by Art. 49. This is the view that has been taken in the Full Bench reference in Calcutta in 1898, to which Mr. Nehal Chand drew my attention, reported in Mangun Jha v. Dolhin Golab Koer (1). I agree with that. There are other Articles, which it seems to me might be made applicable; but it is not necessary to discuss them. There is ample ground for holding, as the lower Court did, that a period of three years at the most is the period within which the plaintiff ought to have sued, and that on the finding his claim is barred.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 1—Petition to appeal in forma pauperis*—Subsequent deposit of money to petitioner's credit under decree of lower Court, whether amounts to, "sufficient means"—Subject-matter of suit, exclusion of, in considering means of person.*

The expression "The subject-matter of the suit" in O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., does not qualify "sufficient means" and in considering the means of a person to sue in forma pauperis, the subject-matter of the suit ought to be excluded as being out of the pauper's reach.

But where a plaintiff who has obtained a decree for maintenance applies for leave to appeal in forma pauperis claiming a larger amount and the petition is sent to the Court of first instance for inquiry into pauperism and the judgment-debtor meanwhile deposits into Court the amount of the decree, which amount is in excess of the Court-fees payable on the appeal, the petitioner must be said to be possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the stamp fee in appeal and is not entitled for leave to appeal in forma pauperis.

Application under O. XLIV, r. 1 of Act V of 1908 to be allowed to appeal in forma pauperis against a decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in O. S. No. 23 of 1923, (O. P. No. 2 of 1923).

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The petitioner applied for leave to prefer an appeal in this Court from the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in forma pauperis. Her petition was sent to the District Judge for enquiry whereupon the judgment-debtor (she herself has obtained a decree for maintenance and is appealing for a larger amount) paid Rs. 571 into Court to her credit. The District Judge passed an order allowing her to draw out the money, and reported that she had means to pay the stamp duty of Rs. 200 on her appeal. To this report she objects. Of course Rs. 571, is the subject-matter of the suit, though not of the appeal but this causes no difficulty because it has been ruled in Krishnabai v. Mandhar (1) that "the subject-matter of the suit" in O. XXXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., does not qualify "sufficient means" and the subject matter of the suit is excluded as being presumably out of the pauper's reach which is not so in the present case [Dwarkanath Narayan v. Madhavrav Vishvanath (2).] But another Bombay Bench in Bai Balagavri v. Motilal

Ghelabhai (3) besides holding that the subject-matter of the suit cannot be taken into consideration in calculating the plaintiff's means, apparently overlooking Krishnabai v. Mandhar (1) has also held that the pauper applicant is not obliged to take out of Court what is deposited or paid in, and cannot, therefore, if he choose to allow the deposit or payment made in Court to remain there, be said to be possessed of sufficient means as if the deposit were actually in his possession. This differs from a previous ruling of the same Court in Dwarkanath Narayan v. Madhavrav Vishvanath (2) and with all respect I think it a most genuine definition of "possessed" to confine the phrase to actual possession on one's own person. I see no distinction between money deposited in Court and ordered to be delivered to a person and moneys lying at a person's credit in a Bank. I should hold that a person with Rs. 571 at her disposal in the Court is possessed of sufficient means to enable her to pay a stamp-fee of Rs. 200. Nor do I think it necessary to contemplate that possibly the Rs. 571 might have been attached; it was not attached when the District Judge passed his order. I also think it unnecessary to go into the question whether supposing the petitioner's estate went into liquidation she would have sufficient balance to pay the stamp-fee. It is enough to find that at the time of hearing her application she has "sufficient means."

I have been asked to refer the matter to a Bench because of Bai Balagavri v. Motilal Ghelabhai (3) but the Bombay rulings are so contradictory that I do not consider it to be in the face of clear authority that I am deciding that petitioner is possessed in the circumstances of sufficient means and not entitled to sue as a pauper.

The petition to be allowed to appeal as a pauper is dismissed. The petitioner can pay the requisite fee within one month from the date of this order,

V. N. V.

Petition dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession of certain land. The Trial Court dismissed the suit which was decreed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court. The facts found by the Subordinate Judge are that certain lands belonged jointly to two persons Baidya Nath and Golok in equal shares. There was a partition between the two co-sharers and the lands belonging to Golok's share were inherited by one Nityamoyi. She died sometime in 1916. Before her death she executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff dated the 11th of April 1907. It was stated in that kabuliyat that the lands of which she had been in possession was found on measurement to be in excess of the original jama and, therefore, the rent was altered and certain terms were arranged between the landlord and the Nityamoyi with regard to her leasehold property. The defendants came into possession by right of purchase from one Pitambari who was the widow of the daughter's son of Golok.

The plaintiff claimed possession of these lands on two grounds. First, that the transfer to the defendants was made in contravention of the terms of the kabuliyat executed by Nityamoyi and secondly, that the tenancy being that of an occupancy raiyat the purchasers had acquired no title as against the landlord as the occupancy right was not transferable by custom.

The Trial Court found that the leasehold was a permanent tenure that the sale was of a portion of the tenancy which was saleable and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed in ejectment. On appeal by the plaintiff the Subordinate Judge held that if the leasehold interest of Nityamoyi be held to be a permanent tenancy then the sale having been effected in breach of the covenant contained in the kabuliyat executed by her the landlord was entitled to re-enter. He, however, held that the interest of Nityamoyi in the lands was that of a raiyat. He found that the leasehold did not form a holding as defined by the Bengal Tenancy Act, because it did not consist entirely of parcels of land but some undivided shares of land under the occupancy of tenants were included within the leasehold. He came to the conclusion that the Bengal Tenancy Act made no provisions for a tenancy of this character and the incidents of such a tenancy were rather uncertain, but that, at any rate, such a tenancy would not be transferable. In that view he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

Defendant No. 1 by his appeal contends that the leasehold having been found not to consist of a holding as defined by the Bengal Tenancy Act the sale to the defendants cannot be considered to be an abandonment of the holding by an occupancy raiyat which would entitle the landlord to take khas possession as on an abandonment under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is contended by the learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the leasehold really consisted of a holding and he placed the kabuliyat before us. On reading the descriptions of the lands in the schedule there cannot be any doubt that undivided portions of lands have been included within the leasehold and, therefore, according to the decision in the case of Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (1) the tenancy cannot be said to comprise a holding as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act. The sale, therefore, cannot be construed into an abandonment of a holding by an occupancy raiyat and the landlord is not, therefore, entitled to recover possession on that ground. But it is contended on behalf of the respondent that the plaintiff is entitled to take advantage of the provision with regard to the restriction as to alienation contained in the kabuliyat of Nityamoyi and that he is entitled to re-enter on account of the breach of that covenant. Clause 9 of the kabuliyat runs thus: "With respect to this jama or any portion thereof, I shall not be entitled to make a gift or sell or give settlement of or create any lien or incumbrance in favour of anybody or otherwise transfer the same in any way. In case I do so, you shall be entitled to take khas possession of the entire mehal either of your own motion or through the Court and I shall not be able to object to the same." This is a clear provision restricting alienation and reserving the right of re entry by the landlord in case of breach of the covenant. According to the plaintiff's case there has been a transfer which is a breach of the covenant. It is, however, argued on behalf of the appellant that this covenant is not valid under the Bengal Tenancy Act. I cannot find any provision in s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which prevents any such agreement being entered into. An attempt was made on behalf of the appellant to bring this covenant within the provisions of cl. (d), sub-s. (3) of s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which enacts that nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant shall take away the right of a raiyat to transfer or bequeath his holding in accordance with local usage. But the answer is that this leasehold is not a holding and the defendants have not been able to prove that there was any local usage authorising them to transfer their tenancy. There is no provision in the Act which the clause in the kabuliyat mentioned above offends against. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to re-enter for the breach of the covenant above referred to.

It is not open to a guardian ad litem to retire at his own sweet will without the permission of the Court. First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 17th August 1922.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for declaration that a decree obtained by the respondents against the plaintiffs under the guardianship of their mother, Musammat Mahindra Kunwar, is not binding on them. It appears that the plaintiffs' father, Niranjan Singh, executed a mortgage-deed on the 12th of October, 1912, hypothecating certain properties. A suit was brought on the 15th March, 1921, on the basis of this mortgage-deed against the father and his sons, the present plaintiffs. The interest of the father, who had transferred the property, being adverse to the minors, the plaintiffs very properly applied that the minor's mother should be appointed their guardian. Notice was issued to her and she did not object. She appeared through a Vakil on the 2nd June 1921 and accepted the appointment of herself as guardian. Subsequently, on the 11th July, 1921, she filed a written statement, in which she denied the existence of any legal necessity and put the mortgagees to proof of the same. Issues were settled and the next date for hearing was the 24th August, 1921, which was on the 25th July, 1921, altered to the 16th November, 1921. Till the 10th November, 1921, Musammat Mahindra Kunwar took no steps, whatsoever, to summon any witness on behalf of the minors. On that date an application was put in on her behalf, not through the Pleader who had appeared first for her, but through a new Pleader, stating that she had been ill for nearly two months and should be relieved of her duties as guardian. No affidavit was filed in support of this application to satisfy the Court that she was really ill, nor was any medical certificate produced. The learned Judge was not satisfied that this was a bona fide application; he considered the circumstances of the case and came to the conclusion that the application had been made merely to cause delay in the case, five months after she had been appointed as guardian of her own sons. The learned Judge, therefore, disallowed the application. No further application was made on behalf of the guardian for adjournment of the case in order to enable her to summon witnesses, or for giving any particular instruction to the Vakil. The case was disposed of on the date fixed. The mortgagees led evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove the existence of legal necessity. The learned Judge accepted that evidence and decreed the claim. Musammat Mahindra Kunwar took no steps to apply for a review of the judgment, nor did she take any steps to prefer an appeal against the decree which had been passed against the minors. A declaratory suit has now been instituted on behalf of the minors through Kundan Singh, their paternal uncle. Musammat Mahindra Kunwar has been examined in this case, and her statement shows that over and above the assistance and help which she might have got from her own husband, who was just as much interested in protecting the minors' interests out of Court as any body else, she had the assistance of two general attorneys; Jagat Narain and Ram Charan, who used to look after her own cases as mukhtar-i-khas in Court. These mukhtars are even now looking after the case on her behalf and Jagat Narain has been filing applications and affidavits in this case. She appears to belong to a respectable family and had several maid-servants as well as 5 or 7 other servants to attend on her. Having regard to all these circumstances, it is impossible to believe, that as she was a pardanashin lady, that she could not have the help of qualified persons who could defend her minor sons' interests as pairokars. The fact that no attempt had been made to summon witnesses for a very long time suggests that the Court was right in thinking that the application was a mere dodge to gain further time and cause delay. Her statement that she was ill is also difficult to believe. Her story is that she had an attack of rheumatism some 15 years ago and has been suffering off and on from this disease and that she had a severe attack 2½ months before her application. She, however, did not put forward any such excuse when she was appointed guardian.

The learned Advocate for the appellants contends that when Musammat Mahindra Kunwar expressed her desire to retire from the guardianship, it was the duty of the Court to allow her to retire, and inasmuch as the Court refused to do so, it committed an irregularity. We are unable to accept this contention. Under O XXXII, r. 11, C. P. C., "where the guardian for the suit desires to retire. . . . . . the Court may permit such guardian to retire, or may remove him, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks fit." That rule makes it quite clear that it is not open to the guardian to retire at his own sweet will without the permission of the Court. It is a matter of discretion for the Court, which having regard to all the circumstances of the case may permit the guardian to retire and may pass such order as to costs as it thinks fit. The matter was, therefore, discretionary. The Court did go into the circumstances of the case and refused to grant the permission. Under the circumstances it is difficult to hold that it committed an irregularity. The learned Advocate relied on sub-cl. (2), r. 11. But that subclause has no application, because it directs the Court to appoint a new guardian when a former guardian has retired, died or has been removed. The sub-cl. (2) does not give any substantial right to guardians to retire at their own will. Reliance has been placed on the case of Jangi v. Sundar (1). That case on its facts was a very special one. A suit had been brought for restitution of conjugal rights against a young woman, who was first alleged by the plaintiff himself to be a major. He then changed his mind and treated her as a minor and proposed to appoint a relation of her as her guardian ad litem. A notice was issued to the proposed guardian but was never served on him personally. His views on the subject were never definitely ascertained. An order appointing him as guardian was passed on the 9th March, 1920, and, as soon as the guardian came to know of it, he appeared in Court on the 13th March and protested and stated that he did not wish to act as guardian. Inspite of the fact that the notice was not served on him personally and inspite of the fact that his views had not been definitely ascertained and he came to the Court to express his refusal, the learned Munsif refused to permit him to withdraw from the guardianship. The result was that he refused to act, and an ex parte decree for restitution of conjugal rights against the young woman was passed in favour of the plaintiff. It was on these circumstances that a learned Judge of this Court thought that the order passed by the Munsif refusing to grant permission to the guardian ad litem to withdraw was not justified. The language employed in the judgment must be understood in relation to the facts of that case.

In the present case we are satisfied that there was no good ground for Musammat Mahindra Kunwar to withdraw from the guardianship of her own sons.

We also cannot believe that the minors have been really prejudiced. In the previous case, although proceedings were ex parte, both oral and documentary evidence was led to prove legal necessity, which satisfied the Court. If the evidence was insufficient, the mother would have certainly taken steps to prefer an appeal from that decree. It is also difficult to believe that the father of the minors, who would be interested in their welfare, would also not have taken some steps. Having regard to these circumstances, we find it difficult to differ from the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge, and we dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

A suit which in essence is one for declaration of title and recovery of possession is governed by Art. 144 and not Art. 148 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 342, col. 2.]

The possession of a mortgagee does not become adverse to the mortgagor merely because the mortgagee remains in possession after the mortgage-money has been satisfied. [p. 343, col. 2.]

The question whether the possession of the mortgagee after the mortgage-debt has been satisfied is adverse to the mortgagor or not is always a question of intention of the parties concerned. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The plaintiff who was unsuccessful in the Courts below has preferred this appeal with respect to 5 bighas of land. The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that it was barred by limitation. The first ground urged on behalf of the appellant is to the effect that Art. 148 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act applies to the case and, therefore, it should have been held that the suit was well within time. In order to deal with this ground it is necessary to consider the allegations upon which the plaintiff came to Court. Shortly stated the plaintiff's case was that about 13 bighas of land belonged to one Jafer Sheik and after his death it passed by inheritance to his son Kinu and daughter Umeda, that in 1887 Kinu mortgaged the land by way of usufructuary mortgage to two persons, Sheik Jamait, Sheik Chhakuri, that in 1888 the said mortgagees or one of them it is not very clear whether both or one of them were parties to the transaction—sub-mortgaged the property to Anantaram and Dayal Mandal who were put in possession thereof. The plaintiff's case was that after the death of Kinu, Umeda Kinu's sister became entitled to the property and that on the 7th July 1920 the plaintiff purchased the same from Umeda, paid off the debt due on the mortgage and got back the mortgage-deed. He wanted to take possession of the property after his purchase but that the defendants acting in collusion with each other forcibly resisted and prevented him from taking possession. The defence, shortly stated was that of these 13 bighas of land, Kinu in 1893 sold 8 bighas to Ananta and Dayal and thus paid off the mortgage in their favour that thereafter there was an oral sale by Kinu in favour of Ananta and Dayal in respect of the remainder of the land and that the defendants had purchased the land in execution of a decree against Ananta and Dayal. The suit, therefore, in essence was a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. There was no relief claimed in the plaint as against the defendants on the footing of their being mortgagees or persons who represented the mortgagees. To such a suit Art. 148 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act cannot possibly apply and the Courts below were, in my opinion, right in applying Art. 144 to the case.

The second ground taken on behalf of the appellant relates to the sufficiency of findings of the lower Appellate Court upon which the suit has been disposed of. The learned Subordinate Judge first of all set out the pleadings of the parties. He then stated in his judgment that the defence had adduced evidence to prove the oral sale in respect of the rest of the land in favour of Ananta and Dayal. He observed that that evidence was accepted by the learned Munsif but it was urged before him that the story of the verbal sale was not to be found in the written statement. He then gave an explanation as to why this story may not have found a place in the written statement. Then he observed thus: "When a part of the mortgaged property was sold and according to the recital in the kobala the mortgage debt was satisfied and only the balance of the consideration money was taken by Kinu, the mortgagee could not retain the remaining land. In the ordinary course the rest of the land would be returned to the mortgagor so that if the remaining land returned to the possession of Ananta and Dayal there must be a legal origin for the possession or if the possession was unlawful, then it was apparently adverse to the mortgagor. In the lattercase the plaintiff's claim would be obviously time-barred." The learned Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, was not right in disposing of the question of limitation in this way. He did not arrive at any finding on the question as to whether there was a transfer of possession in respect of the 5 bighas of land on the mortgage being satisfied from Ananta and Dayal to Kinu or whether the land came back to the possession of Ananta and Dayal afterwards. He says that in ordinary course after the mortgage was satisfied the land would come back to the mortgagor and if Ananta and Dayal came to be in possession afterwards the possession of Ananta and Dayal must be taken to have been based either on legal origin or it amounted to unlawful possession. The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondents has urged that this judgment be read as embodying the findings with regard to all these points. I am unable to accede to his contention in this respect. It seems to methat in order to dispose of the question as to whether the suit is barred by Art. 144 the learned Subordinate Judge will have to come to the following necessary findings. In the first place he will have to find whether in point of fact after the satisfaction of the mortgage debt the 5 bighas of land which was not included in the kobala of 1893 came back to the possession of Kinu and thereafter Ananta and Dayal could not claim to be in possession of it. If this question is found in the affirmative then it will not be necessary to go into other matters; and on a finding in the affirmative with regard to this point the learned Judge will be right in holding that in that case the possession of Ananta and Dayal must have been either under the verbal sale or it was possessive which was adverse to the mortgagor. If, however, the point is not decided in the affirmative then the learned Judge will have to find as a fact whether there was an oral sale in respect of the 5 bighas. If the question cannot be determined in the affirmative then the question will arise as to whether the possession of Ananta and Dayal became adverse to that of Kinu and if so, at what point of time. It is not the law that simply because a mortgage debt has been satisfied and the mortgagee continues in possession became adverse from the point of time of satisfaction of the mortgage debt. If any authority is needed for this proposition reference may be made to the case of Habeebullah v. Abdul Hamid (1). At page 265 the learned Judges observe as follows: "The possession of a mortgagee does not become adverse to the mortgagor merely because the mortgagee remains in possession after the mortgage money has been satisfied out of the usufruct or has been otherwise paid off. Much more is required to set time running against the mortgagor." The question whether the possession of the mortgagee after the mortgage debt has been satisfied is adverse to the mortgagor or not is always a question of animus or intention of the parties concerned. The whole of the circumstances will have to be considered in order to find out whether the mortgagees in the present case continued in possession as mortgagees or as owners in respect of the property. I am therefore of opinion that the findings of the Subordinate Judge are not sufficient to dispose of the question of limitation which arises in the present case.

In this view of the matter I would set aside the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal to his Court so that the questions to which I have referred may be considered afresh and the appeal disposed of in the light of the observation I have made. Costs will abide the result.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—Rana Sir Sheoraj Singh, father of the plaintiff-appellant Rana Uma Nath Bakhsh Singh, put a certain Ram Bakhsh Singh in possession of an area of 50 bighas 5 biswas 16 biswansis in the village of Seora on the 20th August, 1910, on a rent of Rs. 75 a year. Ram Bakhsh Singh, who is defendant-respondent in this case, and his wife have been in possession of this area from then till now. They have never been ejected, although an attempt was made to eject them. They are paying the rent fixed. This is common ground. Sir Sheoraj Singh died in 1920 and was succeeded by the present plaintiff-appellant. Very shortly after the death of Sir Sheoraj Singh the plaintiff-appellant issued a notice of ejectment upon the defendant-respondent No 1 under the provisions of s 55 of Act XXII of 1886, as it was before the recent amendments of 1922. This notice of ejectment is not on the record, but it is admitted by the appellant's learned Counsel that in order to issue such a notice effectively, it was necessary to assert that the defendants-respondents were tenants not having a right of occupancy and not holding under special agreement or decree of Court. Defendant-respondent No. 1 thereupon filed a suit under s. 56 of the Act (as it was then) contesting the notice. The plaintiff-appellant, who was defendant in that suit, maintained that he had a right to eject him, but at a certain period in the hearing of the suit he withdrew the notice of ejectment thereby consenting for the time being to the retention by the defendants of the land in question. The Assistant Collector did not decree the suit in favour of the defendant-respondent No. 1, who was then plaintiff, in very clear terms but he did decree the suit in his favour. The words he used were these:—

"Notice issued by defendant, as prayed by the defendant, is cancelled. Case to be struck off from the registers and consigned to the record. The plaintiff shall remain in possession of the land as usual."

This order is dated 27th October 1921. The plaintiff-appellant then filed a suit in the Civil Court on the 16th September, 1922 asking for a declaration that the two defendants-respondents had neither superior nor under-proprietary right in the land in question under a certain sanad of the 20th August, 1910, and further for a declaration that the sanad was legally ineffectual and unfit to be admitted in evidence as against the plaintiff and that the defendants-respondents could have no right under the aforesaid sanad. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff-appellant's suit on the 30th October 1924 on the ground that no cause of action had arisen to him; and against the dismissal on that ground the present appeal is preferred.

The first point which we propose to consider is the question of valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction. This point is important. The suit being brought for a declaratory relief the Court-fee paid was at fixed rates, but for the purpose of jurisdiction the plaintiff appellant valued the relief at Rs. 10,000. The defendants respondents asserted that the relief should not be valued at more than Rs. 4 500 The learned Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion that Rs 4,500 was a reasonable valuation and accepted it. The plaintiff-appellant, however, has preferred an appeal to this Court on the assertion that the valuation is Rs. 10,000. The point is important because upon its decision must be determined the question of jurisdiction. If the valuation is correctly Rs. 4,500 the appeal lay to the District Judge and this Court has no jurisdiction. We consider, however, that although the valuation of Rs. 10,000 is excessive, the valuation of Rs, 4,500 is too little. We have examined the evidence upon this point and we consider that there is force in the appellant's contention that as the Rs. 75 rent which has been paid is a favourable rent the market rent must be greater. We do not wish to determine finally the market rent upon the land. It may be necessary for that point to be considered in subsequent matters, but this much we can say with confidence that Rs. 75 is clearly a very favourable rent and that the market rent must be at least Rs. 200. At 30 years' purchase this would come to Rs. 6,000 and we should accordingly put the correct valuation at Rs. 6,000 which is more than Rs. 5,000 and less than Rs. 10,000. We, therefore, have jurisdiction to decide this appeal.

We now come to the only point to be decided at present. Had the plaintiff-appellant a cause of action when he brought this suit? In order to decide this point it is necessary to examine with some care the positions asserted by the two parties. The plaintiff-appellant has not in his plaint definitely stated the position which he assigns to the defendants-respondents, but in the course of argument it was admitted to us that he considered them to be agricultural tenants with no special rights and considered himself to be landlord. The defendants-respondents did not either put their position very clearly but in the course of argument their learned Counsel has informed us that they set themselves up as persons holding land at a favourable rate of rent under a grant and that they acquired the land in perpetuity by a written instrument for valuable consideration.

As the plaintiff-appellant is asserting that the defendants-respondents are his tenants, and the land is agricultural land in Oudh, his only method of recovering possession of the land would be under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act by ejectment, and he thus has clearly no title to recover this possession through a Civil Court. So in considering what the cause of action is, it must be carefully borne in mind what his remedy can be against the defendants-respondents. It can only be by the issue of a notice of ejectment under the Rent Act the validity of which can be contested in a Rent Court. It is to be observed that that is the remedy that he took. His case is that the cause of action arose owing to certain statements made by defendant-respondent No. 1 in the suit which he brought to contest that notice, and by the fact that he supported those statements by producing the sanad. We shall first see what these statements are. They are contained in the second paragraph of the defendants-respondents' plaint. We give their translation :—

"Paragraph 2. The notice is liable to be cancelled for the following grounds :

"(a) The plaintiff is not a mere tenant but he is an under-proprietor of the land in dispute along with other land.

"(b) The plaintiff holds the land on favourable rent and is not liable to be ejected by notice.

"(c) In lieu of the distinguished services of the plaintiff and his family the defendant and his father Sir Rana Sheoraj Singh having taken a large sum as nazrana, Sir Rana Sheoraj Singh, Taluqdar of Khajurgaon gave a grant of 50 bighas 6 biswansis land situate in village Seora, Pargana and Tahsil Dalmau, District Rae Bareli, to the plaintiff in perpetuity and put him in possession thereof. Sir Rana Sheoraj Singh has also given a written sanad to the plaintiff with respect to the same. This grant has been maintained and kept subsisting even by the defendant in his writings and made it binding upon himself; rather this grant was made to the plaintiff by the efforts and on the recommendation of the defendant."

The plaintiff's case is that by making the first statement and producing a sanad which is on the record of this case as Ex. A-22, the defendant-respondent No. 1 made an assertion of under-proprietary title which gave him a cause of action to apply for a declaration in the Civil Court that the defendants-respondents have neither proprietary nor under-proprietary rights. In the 8th paragraph of his plaint in the present suit he says : "That the cause of action in respect of this suit accrued within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli on the 17th July 1921, when the defendant produced evidence to prove the sanad and the Revenue Court did not pay any heed to the objection of the plaintiff at village Seora, Pargana Dalmau." The passage might have been drafted better but we are ready to accept the position taken by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant on this point. It is undoubtedly the case, as was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohammad Abul Husan Khan v. Prag (1) that in Oudh the Court of Revenue has the exclusive jurisdiction to determine what is the status of a tenant of lands, and what are the special or other terms upon which such tenant holds, and that the Civil Courts have the exclusive jurisdiction to decide whether or not a person in possession of the land holds a proprietary or under-proprietary right in the lands. But in the use of the word "under-proprietary" their Lordships were referring to the ordinary under-proprietary rights as known to law, and there is a peculiar form of under-proprietary right not coming under such rights which can come into existence when a tenant, holding rent-free land or land at a favourable rent, which is not liable to resumption and which has been acquired in perpetuity by a written instrument and for a valuable consideration, as sued for resumption under the provisions of Ch. VII of Act XXII of 1886 as amended at present (There has not, as a matter of fact, been any important change in this provision of the Act since 1901). The provision is contained in s. 107-H. It is to be remarked that here a person, such as is described in the section who may be called for convenience a muafidar—can be called upon by the superior proprietor, when his land is not liable to resumption, to take upon himself the responsibilities of an under-proprietor in the matter of payment of revenue and to have a rent assessed upon him as an under-proprietor. But it is to be noted that such under-proprietary right is created by the Revenue Court when the question of the resumption of such land is brought before it. We are of opinion that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was not intended to have reference to under-proprietary titles created under s. 107-H, for it is obvious that the creation of such under-proprietary titles being in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, a Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to issue a declaration in respect of such a title. We read para. 2 of the defendants-respondents' plaint in the rent case merely to mean that the defendant-respondent No. 1 having received a notice of ejectment, which treated him as a tenant not having a right of occupancy and not holding under a special agreement or decree of Court, put forward the following position. He said in effect: "We are not tenants having no right of occupancy and not holding under special agreement or decree of Court. We are tenants holding the land on a favourable rent under a grant in writing for consideration. We cannot be ejected as ordinary tenants. At the most the taluqdar can apply under s. 107-H to have us declared as under-proprietors holding the under-proprietary right created by s. 107-H and assessed to liability to pay land revenue and rent." That is what we understand the plaint to mean when it asserts that the defendant-respondent No. 1 was an under-proprietor. The production of the sanad in respect of this plea was essential towards proving the plea and the interpretation of the sanad in respect of this plea was an interpretation which the Revenue Court alone had jurisdiction to make. In order to decide whether the defendant-respondent No. 1 was or was not liable to ejectment the Revenue Court had to construe the sanad. What the construction would be is another matter. Thus clearly when the plaintiff-appellant comes into this Court asking for a declaration that the defendants-respondents are neither proprietors nor under-proprietors the reply given to him to the effect that they never asserted that they were proprietors and that they only asserted such under-proprietary rights as could be created under s. 107-H, in other words potential rights in the future and not actual rights in the present, is an unanswerable reply, and shows clearly that the plaintiff-appellant has no cause of action in respect of the statement, however, that statement might have been proved. Further in respect of the sanad he has no cause of action either, for the sanad has so far only been produced in order to resist the ejectment, and there has been and could have been no constructions by the Revenue Court other than for that purpose. There was nothing to cloud the plaintiff-appellant's title to full proprietary rights and no improper assertion of under-proprietary rights, for the defendants-respondents have never claimed at any time proprietary rights and did not claim such under-proprietary rights as could be determined by a Civil Court. We, therefore, uphold the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 4th December 1924.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for consideration in this appeal is, whether there is a decree capable of execution as against Mulu. It appears that there was an attempt at house-breaking committed at the house of Mulu in 1919. Two persons were named in the first report made by Mulu at the Police Station, one of whom was Mohsham Ali Khan, the present appellant. Bhawani had accompanied Mulu when he had gone to the Police Station to make that report. Both the persons named in the report were originally convicted, but on appeal Mohsham Ali Khan was acquitted.

The suit which has given rise to this appeal was then brought by Mohsham Ali Khan for damages for malicious prosecution. It was decreed by the Trial Court both against Mulu and Bhawani. Mulu did not appeal. Bhawani filed an appeal making Mohsham Ali Khan alone a party to it. Mulu subsequently appeared before the Appellate Court and asked that his name should be added as a co-appellant, alleging that he had paid Rs. 16 to Bhawani of a joint appeal and that Bhawani had fraudulently kept his name out. Bhawani, however, denied that he had been paid any money. The application was, therefore, rejected.

The Appellate Court then proceeded to hear the appeal and the conclusion at which it arrived was that there was no satisfactory evidence that Mhosham Ali Khan had failed to establish that he had been falsely named through enmity. It allowed the appeal accordingly, and dismissed the suit of Mohsham Ali Khan, and what is more significant, it set aside the judgment and the decree of the Trial Court.

An attempt is now being made by Mohsham Ali Khan to execute the decree which had been given to him by the Trial Court against Mulu. Both the Courts below have refused to entertain his application because they found that there was no subsisting decree capable of execution against him. Order XLI, r. 33 provides that an Appellate Court shall have power to make or pass such decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by it, notwithstanding that the appeal is as to a part only of the decree and it may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not file any appeal or objections. Mulu was not a party to the appeal but he was a party to the original suit which had given rise to that appeal. Both he and Bhawani filed a joint and common defence. The ground upon which the Appellate Court proceeded to dismiss the suit was a ground common to Bhawani and Mulu, namely, that no sufficient case for damages had been made out. Although Mulu was not a party to the appeal, the Appellate Court passed a decree which had the result of dismissing the suit in its entirety and setting aside the judgment and decree which the Trial Court had passed in the case. It is open to an Appellate Court to vary the decree appealed against, where there is a common defence even in favour of persons who have not appealed but were parties to the suit and that is what the Appellate Court seems to have done when it dismissed the suit and set aside the judgment and decree which the Trial Court had passed and from which one of the defendants, namely, Bhawani alone had appealed.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff has referred to the decision in Puran Mul v. Krant Singh (1). That was a case decided under the old C. P. C., and all that was held therein was that, unless the Appellate Court proceeded upon a ground common to all the defendants, a defendant who did not appeal was not entitled to the benefit of a decree framed in favour of the others. Even that case is not an authority for the proposition that where the Appellate Court proceeds upon a ground common to all the defendants and dismisses the suit as against all, the decree passed by the Trial Court against any of the non-appealing defendants can be enforced. A reference has also been made to the decision in Niaz-ud-din v. Abdul Aziz (2). But in that case the suit had been decreed against one of the defendants and dismissed against the other. An appeal was filed by the defendant against whom the claim was decreed and it was held that since the plaintiff had not appealed, the Appellate Court could not convert the decree of dismissal in favour of the successful defendant into a decree imposing a liability upon him in an appeal filed by the unsuccessful defendant.

The question is really one of interpretation to be placed on the decree passed on appeal. The decree in question here specifically directed that the suit shall stand dismissed and that the decree and judgment of the Trial Court should be set aside. In the face of that direction, the view taken by the Courts below ought to be upheld.

We dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41—Second appeal—Neglect—Finding of fact.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was wilful neglect on the part of the appellant is a finding of fact and cannot be disturbed in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 13th May 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Muktsar, District Ferozepore, dated the 4th June 1924.

Lala Jagan Nath Bhandari, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge has held that the consignment was booked under Risk Notes A and B and that missing bags were lost somewhere between the Rewari and Hansi Railway Stations, and also that the Railway Administration were guilty of wilful neglect, inasmuch as they did not take such care of the consignment as a prudent person would take in respect of his own property. The neglect consisted in the omission by the Railway Administration to put a lock on the wagon in which the consignment was loaded. In the opinion of the learned Judge it was a case of mere "theft" and not of robbery from a running train because the latter imported the idea of use of force. This view of the learned District Judge is against authority. The word "robbery" as used in the Risk-Note is synonymous with theft, as to the meaning of the term "theft" from a running train, Secretary of State for India v. Charanjit Lal (1) is an authority in support of the view of the learned Judge. That judgment also is an authority in support of the contention of Counsel for the respondent that the finding of the District Judge that there was wilful neglect was a finding of fact and, therefore, conclusive against the appellant. But for the ruling already cited I would have felt considerable doubt as to the existence of wilful neglect in this case. The authority cited, however, fully covers the case and, therefore, I dismiss this appeal with costs. Appeal dismissed.

Grove—Plot of land given for planting trees—Landlord's right to re-enter on portion becoming devoid of trees—Grove-holder, status of—Illegal ejectment of grove-holder—Rights of grove-holder.

Where a plot of land has been given to a person to plant a grove thereon, the landlord is not entitled to enter into possession of portions of the grove which have become vacant or to cultivate them himself or to let them for cultivation to others. [p. 350, col. 2.]

Jwala Singh v. Saheb Din Singh, 9 O. C. 109 and Har Sahai v Dhanpal Singh, 32 Ind. Cas. 368; 2 O. L. J. 589, relied on.

Where a grove-holder is ejected illegally by the landlord whether through the Revenue Court or out of Court, a suit for possession by him would clearly lie in the Civil Court. If, after an order of ejectment by the Revenue Court, the grove-holder is able to recover possession or refuses to deliver possession, he is quite justified in his action and if he is subsequently sued in the Civil Court, the decision passed by the Revenue Court does not constitute a bar in his way to plead in the Civil Court that he was a grove-holder and was wrongly ejected by the Revenue Court. [p. 350, col. 2; p. 351, col. 1.]

A grove-holder cannot be considered to be a tenant within the meaning of the said word as defined in s. 3, cl. (10) of the Oudh Rent Act, such a person neither paying rent to the landlord, nor being liable to pay rent to him. [p. 350, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 14th October 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Kunda, dated the 18th August 1924.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and S. N. Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for possession brought by him against the defendant on the allegation that the defendant had been ejected from the land in suit through the Revenue Court, but had wrongfully planted new trees which constitute the dispossession of the plaintiff. The land in dispute consisted of three plots Nos. 1506, 1507 and 1508 (recent), situate in village Nariyawan, District Partabgarh.

The defendant contended that the land in suit constituted his old grove which had been planted by his ancestors on land granted to them by the talaqdar under an old shankalap deed. He also contested the validity of his ejectment through the Revenue Court.

The Trial Court, the learned Munsif of Kunda, found that the plots in suit did not constitute the grove of the defendant and in view of the ejectment proceedings held in the Revenue Court, he held that the defendant was no more entitled to retain possession of the said land. On these findings he decreed the plaintiff's suit and ordered that the defendant should be ejected therefrom.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh took a different view of the matter and held that the plots in suit constituted the defendant's grove and that the proceedings in the Revenue Court were without jurisdiction and on that finding he decreed the defendant's appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal and the learned Pleader on his behalf raises two main grounds in appeal. The first point which he argued was that the land in dispute did not any more bear the character of a grove, and the second point was that under the circumstances the decision of the Revenue Court was binding on the parties and the defendant's plea could not, therefore, be maintained.

I will deal with the first point, namely, whether the plots in dispute still retain the character of a grove. It is necessary for me to give my own finding upon this point inasmuch as the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal in this matter is, in my opinion, rather unsatisfactory. He has not dealt with all the evidence which has a bearing on this point and has not referred in his judgment to much that was relevant and it is on that ground that his finding has been challenged before me in this appeal. I have, in many cases, drawn the attention of the lower Appellate Courts that their judgments should be complete and self-contained and that the result of their writing short and unsatisfactory judgments is that the work of this Court is thereby increased to a great extent.

The evidence on the record shows that the three plots in dispute, namely, plots Nos. 1506, 1507 and 1508 formed part of one plot old No. 708. In the khasra of 1300-F. (Ex. A-2) which is the recent settlement khasra, plots Nos. 1506, 1507 and 1508 are recorded as corresponding to Nos. 708/1, 708/2 and 708/3 respectively. It is admitted by the parties before me that recent No. 1509 was old No. 708/4. The patwari of the village, who was examined in the case on behalf of the plaintiff taluqdar, stated in his evidence that at first plots Nos. 1506, 1507, 1508 and 1509 constituted one grove and the trees on these four plots were in possession of the defendant. It is, therefore, quite clear that the three plots in suit are only a portion of a big plot No. 708 which constituted the defendant's grove at the time of the old settlement. It is also clear from the patwari's evidence that in 1916 when the ejectment proceedings took place in the Revenue Court there were 5 trees on plot No. 1506, 4 mango trees on plot No. 1507 and 2 mango trees on plot No. 1508. Out of the 5 trees on plot No. 1506, 2 were very old and the rest four years old in 1916. It is also clear from the report of the Commissioner that on plot No. 1509 there were 29 trees, of which 26 were mango trees, 2 mahwa and 1 jamun and that excepting one mahwa tree which appeared to him to be 12 years old the rest of the trees were more than 50 years old. From this it appears that plot No. 1509 cannot by any stretch of imagination be considered to have lost the character of a grove and similarly regarding plots Nos. 1506, 1507 and 1508 which at present contain 11 trees and which originally formed part of a big plot of which 1509 is the major portion, it cannot be said that they have lost the character of a grove. My finding on this point, therefore, is that in the year 1916 when the plaintiff-appellant took ejectment proceedings against the defendant-respondent the plots in suit retained the character of a grove and that the defendant was not liable to ejectment from them.

It was contended by the learned Pleader for the appellant that although these plots of land originally constituted portions of a larger plot yet they were treated as separate plots, having been recorded as such in the village papers and having been brought under cultivation. This may have been, so, but I am not prepared to look upon these three plots in suit as separate from the larger plot No. 1509. It appears to me that the entire plot No. 708 must be taken to have been granted as a whole by the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title to the ancestors of defendant for the purpose of planting a grove thereon and the tenure must stand or fall as a whole. I am supported in this view by two decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, one by Chamier, A. J. C. in Jwala Singh v. Saheb Din Singh (1) and the other by Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C., in Har Sahai v. Dhanpal Singh (2). These cases lay down the proposition, and in my opinion correctly, that where a plot of land had been given to a person to plant a grove thereon, the landlord was not entitled to enter into possession of portions of the grove which had become vacant or to cultivate them himself or to let them for cultivation to others. The plot must be taken to have been granted as a whole and the tenure must stand or fall as a whole unless some custom or contract is shown to the contrary. The mere fact that a portion of the grove has become devoid of trees does not entitle the landlord to resume that portion of it, in short, there can be no resumption piecemeal. I am aware that in some cases decided by the Board of Revenue, U. P., an opposite view has been taken, but I must confess that I do not consider these cases to have been correctly decided.

The conclusion to which I, therefore, arrive is that the defendant was wrongfully ejected from these plots in suit through the Revenue Court in the year 1916.

It, therefore, remains for me to consider what is the effect of the ejectment proceedings taken by the plaintiff-appellant in the Revenue Court in that year. If the defendant was a grove-holder, as I hold he was, of all these plots in dispute in the year 1916 he could not be, in any way, treated as plaintiff's tenant. It was held in Durga Prasad v. Ram Charan (3) by Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C., that a grove-holder could not be considered to be a tenant within the meaning of the said word as defined in s. 3, cl. (10) of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) because such a person neither paid rent to the landlord, nor was he liable to pay rent to him. This case was followed by me only recently in Secretary of State for India v. Harcharan Das (4).

Following these cases I hold that the defendant was not the tenant of the plaintiff and was, therefore, illegally ejected by him through the Revenue Court. If a grove-holder is ejected illegally by the landlord whether through the Revenue Court or out of Court, a suit for possession by him would clearly lie in the Civil Court. In my opinion, therefore, the decision passed by the Revenue Court in the year 1916 does not constitute a bar in the way of the defendant to plead in the Civil Court that he was a grove-holder and was wrongly ejected by the Revenue Court. If he has now been able to recover possession or has refused to deliver possession to the plaintiff he is quite justified in his action. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed by the Court below.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 5—Insolvency Court, power of, to review orders—Creditor who has tendered proof of debt, right of, to appeal.

By s. 5, Provincial Insolvency Act, an Insolvency Court is invested with the powers and jurisdiction to review its own orders in circumstances laid down in O. XLVII, C. P. C. [p. 351, col. 2.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Guntur, dated the 27th January 1925, in O. P. No. 165 of 1924, in I. P. No. 46 of 1920, praying to excuse the delay in filing the said O. P. No. 165 of 1924 to review an order of the said Court annulling an order of adjudication, in I. P. No. 46 of 1920.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Sundaram Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first respondent was adjudicated an insolvent in I. P. No. 46 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of Guntur. As he failed to apply for discharge within the time fixed, his adjudication was annulled. The petitioners are some of the creditors and they applied to the District Court to have the order of annulment reviewed. The learned Judge thought that the petitioners had a good case on the merits but declined to grant the review as he thought that he had no power to review an order made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. The petitioners have preferred this revision petition against his order.

Section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920 says:—

"Subject to the provisions of this Act the Court, in regard to proceedings under this Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction."

The Court exercising ordinary original civil jurisdiction has power to review its orders. There is no warrant for the proposition that a Civil Court cannot correct its own orders or cannot modify any order which it has passed when it finds that the order is patently wrong. The power of review is inherent in the Civil Court and in what cases it can be exercised is laid down in O. XLVII. When an Insolvency Court has the same powers and follows the same procedure as a Civil Court exercising ordinary original civil jurisdiction it cannot reasonably be contended that the powers to review has been taken away. Under the English Bankruptcy Act the power to review is specifically given vide s. 103. Such provision is not specifically enacted in the Provincial Insolvency Act as the Insolvency Court is invested with jurisdiction which an ordinary Civil Court has in the exercise of its original jurisdiction.

This point has been specifically dealt with by Spencer, J., in the Official Receiver of Tanjore v. Nataraja Sastrigal (1). In

Munnu Lal v. Kunj Bahadur Lal (2) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that a District Judge was competent to review his judgment in appeal. They observe at page 606:*

"We are content to say that, in our opinion, the District Judge had jurisdiction to review his own order, because s. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920 gave him, when sitting as an Appellate Court, the same powers under the C. P. C., which he would have had if he had been sitting to hear any ordinary appeal."

In spite of these two rulings the learned Judge thought that the decision in Arunagiri Mudaliar v. Kandaswawi Mudaliar (3) was against his power to review his own order and he could not, therefore, review it. In Arunagiri Mudaliar v. Kandaswami Mudaliar (3) the question of the power of review of an Insolvency Court was not raised. One of the questions there was whether the time fixed for an application for discharge by the insolvent could be extended or not. Krishnan, J., was of opinion that he could, but Waller, J., thought that the Court had no power to extend the time fixed for an application for discharge by the insolvent and that the provisions of s. 43 were obligatory on the Court to annul the adjudication if an application was not made within the time fixed. It is not necessary to deal with this case in detail as the point raised here did not arise for decision there. If an expression of opinion is necessary, we would be inclined to hold with Krishnan, J., that the Court has power to extend the time for making an application for discharge, provided that the application is made before the order of annulment is made. The case of Arunagiri Mudaliar v. Kandaswami Mudaliar (3) does not decide anything about the power to review an order and the learned District Judge was not right in thinking that that decision stood in the way of granting a review.

The next point is whether the petitioners are persons aggrieved. It has been brought to our notice that at least two of them have tendered their proof. If they have tendered their proof, they are creditors and they are persons aggrieved by the order of the Court annulling adjudication. It was held in In re Langtry, Ex parte Stevenson (4) that a creditor who had tendered his proof was a person aggrieved within the meaning of s. 104 of the English Bankruptcy Act. In Ex parte Ditton, In re Woods (5) the Court of Appeal held that a person who had not tendered his proof was not entitled to appeal as a person aggrieved. Seeing that two of petitioners have already tendered their proof, they are entitled to maintain this appeal.

The appeal is allowed and the order of the learned Judge is set aside and he is directed to restore the application of the petitioner to file and dispose of it on the merits after taking such evidence as he may think necessary. Costs to abide the result.

No appeal lies against an order refusing to stay execution of decree.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Mymensingh, dated the 5th of April 1924.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Dass and Babu Bhuban Mohun Saha, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—As this is an appeal purporting to be against an order which merely refuses to stay execution of a certain decree, there is no appeal under the Code against such an order which is not an order under s. 47, C. P. C.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed but without cost as there is no appearance on behalf of the respondent.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 417—Taking thumb impression—Offence.

Mere taking thumb impressions on a blank piece of paper may be a preparation to cheat but unless something is written on it, it cannot amount to cheating or attempt to cheat.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi, dated the 21st November 1925, affirming that of the Deputy Commissioner, Ranchi, dated the 22nd June 1925.

Messrs. Rai Guru Saran Prasad and S. R. Sen Gupta, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 were convicted in the Trial Court under s. 417 read with s. 511 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 50 each; the third petitioner, a Constable, was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 20 under s. 417 read with s. 114 of the Indian Penal Code. On appeal the convictions under s. 417 read with s. 511 of the first two petitioners have been changed to convictions under s. 417; the conviction of petitioner No. 3 under s. 417 read with s. 114 was maintained. The sentences have been maintained.

The petitioner No. 1 is the landlord of village Narekela and petitioner No. 2 is his relation.

There had been a paddy looting case in the village and the Sub-Inspector, accompanied by the Constable, petitioner No. 3, went to the village in order to take recognizance from certain tenants who were to be witnesses in the case. The Sub-Inspector stayed at the house of petitioner No. 1. The witnesses were called to that house to give recognizance to appear. The Sub-Inspector was sitting in the room, and the first and second petitioners as well as the Constable were also there. Before thumb impressions were taken on the recognizance bonds, it was suggested that it would be well first to test the ink with which the impressions were to be taken. The witnesses were, therefore, called forward to give their sample thumb impressions on a blank piece of paper; one of them refused but the others allowed the Constable to ink their hands and their impressions were taken on the blank piece of paper. The petitioner No. 1 supplied the paper, and after the impressions were put on it, took it away. The next day the witnesses, who had put their thumb impressions on the paper went to their padre the Rev. Father Bodson, and told him what had happened and expressed to him a fear that the landlord, with whom their relations were strained, might use the blank piece of paper with the thumb impressions upon it for the purpose of bringing a case against them. The padre went to the Police Station and told the Sub-Inspector the fears of the villagers and the Sub-Inspector promised to get the paper back. Next day the Constable, petitioner No. 3 was sent to the village from the Police Station and recovered the blank piece of paper from the petitioner No. 2 and tore away from it the portion containing the thumb impressions. The thumb impressions were taken on the 28th November 1924. Nothing more was done till the 13th February 1925 when the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gumala went on tour to the village. There he was told by the tenants that they were frightened that the petitioner No. 1 might make use of the document on which they had put their thumb impressions. Their statement was taken and was treated as a complaint and proceedings were started against the three petitioners, and they were convicted of an attempt to cheat and, in the case of petitioner No. 3, of an abetment of the offence of cheating.

An appeal was made to the Deputy Commissioner, Ranchi. He held that the facts showed, not an attempt to cheat, but a substantive offence of cheating and altered the convictions accordingly.

The learned Judicial Commissioner was then moved to refer the case to this Court, but he refused, for he found that the Appellate Court had come to the right conclusion in finding that the petitioners had committed the offence of cheating.

The prosecution case was that the petitioners intended from the first to obtain from the tenants thumb impressions on a blank piece of paper by representing to them that the reason for taking the thumb impressions was in order that the ink to be used might be tested, and that their dishonest or fraudulent intention was afterwards to convert the blank piece of paper into some document which they might use against the tenants for their own end.

Both the Courts below have found that the action of the petitioners amounted to more than a preparation for the offence. Evidently the Courts held that the petitioners fraudulently or dishonestly deceived the tenants, and thus intentionally induced them to put their thumb impressions on the blank paper, an action which they would not have taken if they had not been deceived by the petitioners, also that the action, which the tenants were deceived into taking was likely to cause damage or harm to the tenants in body, mind, reputation or property. There can be no doubt that, if the petitioners had this fraudulent or dishonest intention and deceived the tenants and thus induced them to give their thumb impressions, on the wording of s. 415 the offence of cheating would be complete when the action was taken. But there are elements in this case which, to my mind, cannot bring the action of the petitioners under the purview of s. 415. In the first place with regard to the intention, it is assumed that the petitioners intended to convert the blank piece of paper into some written instrument and to use it for their own purpose dishonestly. Had the petitioners gone one step further and made any entry on the blank piece of paper, if they had begun writing the words "I promise," there might have been some good reason for concluding that the intention was to use this paper for dishonest purposes. But in the present case all we have is a blank piece of paper with thumb impressions upon it; there is nothing written on the paper, and that being so, there is hardly sufficient to show a dishonest intention. It is not enough to assume that probably the intention of the petitioners was to convert the blank paper into a written document. Were we to find that the mere presence on the paper of thumb impressions was sufficient to show an intention to use that paper dishonestly, then the hobby of autograph collecting would be a dangerous one.

Then again the Court must be satisfied that the tenants were deceived. One tenant refused to give his thumb impression; the other tenants in their evidence state that they gave their thumb impressions unwillingly. It is clear, I think, that the thumb impressions were given by these tenants not under the impression so much that they were being used as a test, but because the Sub-Inspector and the Constable were present and they were told to put their thumb impressions on the paper. Their action in going to the padre next day and telling him what their fears were would point to the fact that they were not deceived. To my mind the elements necessary for constituting the offence of cheating were not all present in the present case. There may have been a preparation to cheat but the action of the petitioners fell short of an attempt at cheating and the substantive offence of cheating. No attempt was ever made to use the blank piece of paper, and, so far as we know, nothing was ever written on it. The petitioners could not even be prosecuted for an attempt at forgery until they had made some entry on the blank paper which would show a stage going further than mere preparation.

The convictions of the petitioners must be set aside and they must be acquitted and set at liberty; the fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Musammat AMIR BEGUM—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance—Another's child, maintenance of—Maintenance prior to date of application.

An order directing payment of maintenance for any period prior to the date of application is illegal.

Omree v. Elahee Buksh, 5 P. R. 1870 Cr., referred to.

A father is liable for the maintenance of his own child whether legitimate or otherwise but not for the child of another man.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, with his No. 176-G of 13th February 1926.

FACTS.—This case was under s. 488, Cr. P. C., by a wife against her husband for an order of her own maintenance and that of her two children, one daughter of her present husband, the petitioner, and a boy by her former husband. The application under s. 488, Cr. P. C., was filed before the Magistrate on the 7th October 1925.

The defence was that the appellant had been divorced on the 4th July 1925. The Magistrate accepted the plea that the applicant had been divorced on the 4th May 1925 and held that her divorce was communicated to her on the 15th July 1925 and that the applicant with her children had been neglected by her husband from about the middle of October 1924 to about the 14th July 1925 and for this period he granted maintenance to the wife at the rate of Rs. 25 a month and to her two children at the rate of Rs. 10. The second party has filed a revision application on the following grounds :—

1. The Magistrate at the most could award in law maintenance from the date of the application and his order for maintenance for the period prior to the date of the application was illegal.

2. The petitioner was not liable for the maintenance of the boy who was the son of another man.

3. The monthly rate of maintenance is excessive.

Section 488 (2) says that such allowance shall be payable from the date of the order or if so ordered from the date of application for maintenance. According to Omree v. Elahee Buksh (1) the Magistrate had no power to make an order for payment of any sum for the maintenance for any period prior to the date on which the application for maintenance was lodged. As in this case the application for maintenance was filed in Court on the 7th October 1925 the order of maintenance for a period prior to this date was clearly illegal.

Under s. 488 (1) a father is liable for the maintenance of his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself but not for the child of another man. So the order of the Magistrate regarding the maintenance of the boy in this case was also clearly wrong.

The petitioner is bound to maintain his minor daughter Musammat Shah Jahan Begum aged 15 months who is with her mother but the Magistrate made no order for her future maintenance. A sum of Rs. 5 per month for her maintenance is not too much because her father, the petitioner, is an Overseer and is drawing Rs. 80 a month.

The proceedings are forwarded to the High Court under s. 488, Cr. P. C. with the recommendation that the order for the maintenance of the divorced wife Musammat Amir Begum and her son be quashed and an order for the future maintenance of the minor daughter Musammat Shah Jahan Begum at the rate of Rs. 5 a month from the 7th October 1925 be passed against her father Abdul Rahim.

ORDER.—For the reasons given in first order of the reference I set aside the order directing payment of maintenance prior to the date of the application and order that the petitioner Abdul Rahim shall pay to the respondent Musammat Amir Begum the sum of Rs. 5 per mensem from the 7th October 1925 for the support of his daughter Musammat Shah Jahan Begum.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 409—Detention of money by postal servant against rules—False entries in register and false explanation—Offence.

Detention by a postal servant of monies received by him in his capacity as such through V. P. parcels etc., for several days in violation of the postal rules, coupled with a false explanation that the monies were not received on the days on which they were actually received and false entries in his register showing that the articles were still undelivered in the Post Office, constitutes an offence under s. 409, Penal Code. Criminal appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 9th of December 1925.

Messrs. Deoki Prasad Sinha, B. P. Varma, Raghosaran Lal, S. P. Varma, B. N. Mitter, Bhagwan Prasad and Kamada Nath Moitra, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—These are two appeals, one by Chandra Prasad who was Sub-Post Master of Roserah, Sub-Post Office, and the other by Debendranath Ganguly who was a clerk in the same office; against the conviction under s. 409 of the Indian Penal Code. The appellants were charged with criminal breach of trust in their capacities of public servants in respect of three sums of money, namely, Rs. 307-15-0 which was paid for V. P. Letter No. 641 on the 30th of May 1925, Rs. 119-7-0 which was paid for V. P. Letter No. 3 on the 27th of May 1925, and Rs. 303 which was paid on account of insured V. P. Parcel No. 738 on the 23rd of May 1925, these sums not being accounted for until the 9th of June 1925.

The defence of the Sub-Post Master was that the V. P. articles referred to in the charges were all along in the exclusive custody of Debendranath Ganguly and that the money realized for them was never made over to him and he did not know that it was realized before the 9th of June. The defence of Debendranath Ganguly was that the letters and parcel were not delivered to the addressees on the 23rd, 27th and 30th of May, but on the 9th of June.

This latter defence was found to be untrue at the trial where it was conclusively shown that the sums of money referred to in the charges had been paid to the Post Office on the dates specified therein; and in the appeal, this defence was abandoned.

The facts as found by the learned Sessions Judge are no longer disputed. These facts are that V. P. Letter No. 641 was sent by Messrs. H. D. Nandi and Co. of Taltola to a firm in Roserah called Friends and Co. of which the sole proprietor is Lachminarain Purvey. The letter contained the Railway receipt for a bicycle consigned to sender. The letter was despatched on the 25th and arrived at Roserah on the 27th. It was received by Debendranath Ganguly in the usual course and entered by him in the Register of V. P. articles received. He also issued a receipt form on the 27th of May. The money was paid to Debendranath Ganguly by Lachminarain Purvey on the 30th of May 1925; but the V. P. letter appears in the Register in an entry made by Debendranath Ganguly as still undelivered on the 4th of June, and the money-order in respect of this receipt was not issued until the 9th of June.

V. P. Letter No. 3 was sent by Jhallu Sahu Bijadhar Ram of Benares to Bhailal Gobind Lal of Roserah on the 19th of May. It contained the Railway receipt for a bag of German Silver lotas. The letter was received on the 21st of May and was registered by Debendranath Ganguly, who also issued the usual receipt form. On the 27th of May Badrilal, the proprietor of the firm, paid Rs. 119-7-0 to Debendranath Ganguly and got delivery of the letter. In this case also the money was not remitted to the sender by Debendranath Ganguly until the 9th of June.

The insured Parcel No. 738 which was said to contain gold-leaf was despatched by S. C. Singh from Strand Road, Calcutta, to Bhailal Gobind Lal at Roserah on the 22nd of May and was received at Roserah on the 23rd and entered as an ordinary value-payable article in the Register by Debendranath Ganguly on that date. He also issued the usual receipt form. The money Rs. 303 was paid by Badrilal on the date of receipt, namely, the 23rd of May to Debendranath Ganguly and the parcel was delivered to him. The parcel was still shown as undelivered on the 1st of June and on the 4th of June by Debendranath Ganguly in his Register and the money was not remitted to the sender until the 9th of June.

The contention, on behalf of the Sub-Post Master, Chandra Prasad, is that as the money was never entrusted to him, he cannot be held guilty of criminal breach of trust. The learned Assistant Government Advocate contended that both the appellants are Post Office servants and both are bound by the terms of their appointment to dispose of the property entrusted to them in accordance with the contract which is implied under the rules. If they are bound by the rules to send money received on account of value-payable articles to the sender on the date of receipt or at the latest on the next day, as the rules provide they violate the contract if they dishonestly retain the money. The duties of the parcels clerk are to receive parcels and deliver them and make over the money received for them to the Post Master. The duty of the Post Master is, as soon as he receives the money to send it to the Cash Office at Samastipur. It is admitted by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that the prosecution has not proved that the money was received by the Post Master; but it is contended that the Post Master wilfully suffered the parcels clerk to dispose of the money in a manner contrary to his legal obligations. He knew of the receipt of the money in the Post Office; and, if he dishonestly omitted to send off the money, he is guilty of criminal breach of trust. It is argued that once the money comes into the Post Office to the knowledge of the Post Master, it is entrusted to him. He has made some of the entries in the Register of value-payable articles received and has also initialled the balance of articles undisposed of. Now it seems to me that on the facts found no charge is proved against the Post Master. He may have been negligent in supervision; and from the fact that the parcels clerk, who was in receipt of a salary of Rs. 74 a month, must have been of almost the same standing in the service as himself, his pay being Rs. 78 a month, it is not unlikely that he exercised insufficient control. But from the mere fact that he made some of the entries in the Register and initialled the daily balance of articles undisposed of, it cannot be inferred that he knew that these monies had been paid. If he had checked the Register with the articles actually in hand, the fraud must have been discovered; but his failure to do this cannot take the place of proof that the money received on account of these articles was entrusted to his care. In the case of the insured article Art. 393 of the Post Office Manual requires that in Sub-Post Offices where the pay of the Sub-Post Master is less than Rs. 100 a month, the duty of examining the insured parcels must be performed by the Sub-Post Master and the undelivered insured parcels must be kept under lock and key in his personal custody. But this rule is not available to the prosecution for two reasons first, the insured article was entered in the Register as an ordinary V. P. article; and, secondly, it was delivered to the addressee on the date of receipt.

There is, in my opinion, no case against Chandra Prasad; and his appeal must be allowed.

The case of Debendranath Ganguly stands on a different footing. Learned Counsel argued on his behalf that accepting the findings, the facts do not amount to an offence under s. 409. They prove that certain sums of money were received on the 23rd, 27th and 30th May and were not transmitted until the 9th of June. But this only amounts to detention of the money and the prosecution must prove that within this priod of detention the money was converted to the appellant's own use; but there is no such finding and there is no evidence to show that the money ever left the Post Office, and the period of detention was so short that it was not safe to presume that the appellant intended to cause wrongful loss or gain. The following decisions were referred to: R. v. Jones (1) where it was held that the mere fact of not entering the sum of money received was insufficient to support an indictment for embezzlement: although it was observed that had the prisoner denied the receipt of the money, the case might have been different. Archbold in his Criminal Pleading and Practice (6th Edition page 618) refers to this decision and says that it must be taken to be overruled by the contrary decision in R. v. Jackson (2) where it was held by Coleridge, J., that "where it is the servant's duty to account for and pay over the monies received by him at stated times, his not doing so wilfully is an embezzlement, although he did do not actually deny the receipt of them." The next case was In re Kuppili Prakasarow (3). The head-note to that case says that "where the only evidence against the accused, charged with misappropriating a telegraphic money-order, is that the postal account contained entries of delivery on dates different from those on which the actual deliveries were made, that merely creates a suspicion and is not a sufficient proof of misappropriation." The finding was that there was no evidence to show that the sum was misappropriated by the accused and not by the postman. The decision, therefore, went on the facts which are entirely different from the facts of the present case. The next case was Mathura Prasad v. Emperor (4) where it was held that the detention of money by a servant or clerk for fifteen months after its receipt raises a very serious doubt of bona fides against him, but the detention is not conclusive proof of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust. The decision in that case, however, proceeded on the absence of any rules regarding the paying in of money realized, as well as on facts showing that the accused had attempted on various occasions to pay the money, but it had been refused by the Treasurer. Knox, J., observed: "In the present case the estate is a private estate. No attempt has been made on the part of the prosecution to prove that any rule of the estate, or any contract, express or implied, lay between the estate and Mathura Prasad regarding the time and the manner in which all such monies were to be deposited. It is easy to say that they should be deposited without delay, but that must be a matter of proof as much as any other matter of fact in the case." This observation clearly differentiates that case from the present where the rules of the Post Office are definite that the money must be remitted on the day of receipt or at the latest on the following day. Reference was also made to Ram Bajas Rai v. Emperor (5) but that decision proceeded entirely on the facts which negatived any dishonesty on the part of the accused in retaining certain documents. The last case was Queen-Empress v. Ganpat Tapidas (6). There money received on account of the Government had been detained for sometime by a revenue patel. He had, however, taken formal receipts for the money from the payees and it was found that the reason for his not immediately paying the money to them was that they were willing to trust him with the money. That decision has, therefore, no application to the present case. The accused Debendranath Ganguly kept these monies which were entrusted to him as a public servant for periods of seventeen, thirteen and ten days in violation of the rules by which he was bound. This in itself raises a case which he has to answer. He gave a false explanation that the monies had not been received until the 9th of June. He also made entries in his Register showing that the articles were still undelivered in the Post Office long after they had been delivered and the money for them had been received. This amounts to a denial of the receipt of the money and is conclusive evidence of criminal breach of trust. In my opinion, therefore, Debendranath Ganguly was properly found guilty of the charges framed against him.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Police diaries, improper use of.

To believe a witness because a perusal of the Police diaries shows that he was examined at earliest opportunity and had made the same statement is to make an improper use of the diaries.

Petition for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with appellate powers, Lyallpur, dated the 7th December 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, Second Class, Semundri, District Lyallpur, dated the 29th October 1925.

Lala Nawal Kishore for Lala Ramchand Manchanda, for the Petitioners.

Lala J. N. Bhandari, for Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The stolen bullocks were undoubtedly found in the hut of one Taju, but there was no evidence to connect Taju with the commission of the crime and the investigating officer was consequently justified in not proceeding with the case against him. Two persons, namely, Fazal and Nura were subsequently prosecuted for the theft of the bullocks, and they have been convicted and sentenced under s. 379, Indian Penal Code.

The judgment of the Appellate Court shows that the conviction rests upon the uncorroborated testimony of only one witness, namely, Turezi. Now, Turezi is related to Taju described as an independent witness. The Appellate Court has believed his evidence because a perusal of the Police diaries satisfied the Court that "this witness was examined at the earliest opportunity and at the very time he had stated that he had seen two persons with Taju along "with the cattle." This is an improper use of the Police diaries, and there can be no doubt that inadmissible evidence should not have been invoked in order to sustain the conviction.

After considering the matter carefully I have reached the conclusion that the guilt of the petitioners has not been established. Accordingly I accept the application for revision and setting aside the convictions and sentences I direct that both the prisoners be released forthwith.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated the 22nd December 1925.

Mr. S. C. Goyle, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This riot case really presents very little difficulty on either the law or the facts. A riot took place at Jalalpur. As usual both sides were sent up, the Police leaving it to the Magistrate to convict both sides if he wished. In Trial No. 24 the accused, the complainants in the present case, were all acquitted. In Trial No. 23 against 17 persons including the present appellant the Magistrate convicted the other sixteen under s 325 read with s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and acquitted Yad Ram. We accept for the purpose of the present appeal, that the Police sent the accused up on charges under ss. 147 and 302, it being the fact established beyond doubt that one Mohan who was one of the present complainants' party, was killed in the course of the riot.

The sixteen men appealed to the Court of Session and their conviction was set aside and their commitment ordered on charges including one under s. 302. That case was finally disposed of by the upholding of the conviction of a number of men by this Court including the sentences of several of them to transportation for life. At the conclusion of that case in the Sessions Court the Assessors asked the Judge to record their opinion that in fact the present appellant before us, Yad Ram, ought to have been committed to the Court of Session too, as he was equally guilty with the other accused. As a result of this the District Magistrate ordered the committal of Yad Ram to the Court of Session on a charge of murder. As a result of that commitment Yad Ram has been convicted. The learned Sessions Judge has found the accused guilty under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and finding his guilt to be equal with that of Bed Ram, Lekha, Ganga and Dan Sahai, the four men who received the sentence of transportation for life in the previous case, sentenced Yad Ram also to transportation for life, and declined to make any recommendation for the reduction of the sentence. He was further convicted under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment, which was to run concurrently.

In this Court a legal objection is taken that the accused having been acquitted by a Magistrate on a charge under s. 302, he could not be tried again on a charge under that section until and unless the previous acquittal under s. 302 had been set aside. It is clear that there is no force whatever in this objection. In the proceedings before the Magistrate in which Yad Ram was acquitted there was no "trial" of Yad Ram on a charge under s. 302, nor was he "acquitted" under s. 302. Nor, if the Magistrate had endeavoured to try him and had endeavoured to pass any order of acquittal or conviction under s. 302, would his procedure have been within his jurisdiction. This is such an elementary proposition of law that it is impossible to conceive of any Magistrate regarding himself as "trying" or attempting to "try" a charge of murder. We have seen a certified copy of the Magistrate's order and it is perfectly clear that he did what, holding the view that he did of the case (though that view was quite wrong), he was fully entitled to do, i. e., refrained from framing any charge under s. 302, and proceeded to try the accused before him on charges under ss. 325 and 147. We have said that he was legally entitled to abstain from framing a charge under s. 302. We do not for a moment suggest that the facts justified any such self-restraint. We think that no authority is required for the interpretation which we put upon the law, which is, in our opinion, quite obvious. But if authority be needed it can be looked for in Sheo Narain Singh v. Radha Mohan (1) and Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (2). There can be no doubt, therefore, in our opinion, that the trial on a charge under s. 302 was in no way contrary to any provision of law.

As regards the conviction under s. 147 no objection has been taken before us, but in fact the argument addressed to us in regard to the conviction under s. 302 though it is of no force in regard to s. 302 is a valid argument as regards the conviction under s. 147. In respect of that section there was a charge framed by the Magistrate. There was a trial of the case and there was an acquittal of Yad Ram on that charge, which acquittal has not been set aside by any due process of law.

Coming to the facts it is unnecessary to review them in detail. The whole case was examined when the facts regarding the offences for which the other accused were punished were examined in this Court. On that occasion the evidence for the prosecution as to the main facts of the case was accepted. We, of course, have to examine them minutely and have examined every line of it. We see no reason whatever to disbelieve that evidence. There is the evidence of four or five men clearly establishing that Gokul Singh lambardar went to appraise the field of Udmi, that having appraised it in the presence of Udmi he went on to a field of one Chutia about a 100 paces away, that while engaged on that field he and Udmi saw a number of men on the field of Udmi apparently engaged in cutting Udmi's crop. On Udmi going there he was assaulted and Mohan, who was in the close neighbourhood, on going to Udmi's assistance, was assaulted, and he was the man who was killed. On others, including Gokul, Durga and Baldeo arriving, they were in turn assaulted. Mohan was killed and died almost immediately on being taken to his house. Another of the complainants' party, Chutia, who received injuries, died later, his death being probably hastened by the injuries he had received. Others were badly beaten, but we are not really concerned with them in view of the main fact that Mohan was killed practically on the field. We note that Gokul Singh according to the learned Sessions Judge's English record says "Yad Ram was not one of the first to beat me but he joined when they thought Mohan was dead". We have looked at the evidence in vernacular of the witness and that makes it still more clear that what the witness said was that Yad Ram was engaged in beating Mohan while at first others were beating the witness Gokul Singh, but that when Yad Ram thought that Mohan was done for, then he left Mohan and joined those who were assaulting Gokul Singh. In one respect we think that the evidence is even stronger than the learned Sessions Judge's estimate of it. The Judge has remarked that all the witnesses for the prosecution are reliable and have not been shown to have any such enmity against the appellant as would be likely to lead them to implicate him falsely. But he continues "the utmost that has been suggested against any one of them is the fact that in a statement before the Police one Daulat Singh did not admit that he witnesses the assault on Mohan, although he named the accused as taking part in the riot. Even if this one witness did not see the assault upon Mohan, it helps the accused very little".

We think that the worst that could possibly be said against Daulat Singh is that he has spoken of seeing the assault on Mohan because in fact from some little distance he saw an assault taking place, and on running up closer to the spot found Mohan unconscious on the ground, and then in fact saw, from a close distance, later stages of the fight. We see no reason whatever to disbelieve the evidence that Yad Ram with his own hand and lathi took a leading part in the assault on Mohan, from injuries committed in the course of which assault Mohan very shortly died. There is not, in our opinion, any doubt that Yad Ram is guilty under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of the death of Mohan without any necessity for reference to s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code. In regard to the conviction under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code we have already given our reason for holding that that conviction should be set aside and we set it aside accordingly. In regard to s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code we maintain the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 96, 302, 304—Private defence, plea of—Fatal blows, infliction of.

In the course of a family quarrel between a brother and sister, as to possession of a store room, the sister was roughly handled and on hearing her cry out for help, the husband who was working near about turned up and finding the wife being assaulted by her brother and another and her hands cut and bruised, struck the brother one deadly blow with an aruval and on himself being attacked by the other man, dealt another fatal blow to him also :

Held, that the accused had reason to suppose that his wife might be severely injured and the blows struck by him on both the men were in exercise of the right of defence of his wife and himself.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Court of Session of the South Kanara Division, in Case No. 16 of the Calendar for 1925, and case taken up under the orders of the High Court, dated the 26th August 1925, calling on the appellant to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced.

Mr. T. A. Anantha Iyer, for the Accused.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted of offences under ss. 303 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code. There can be no doubt that there was a fight in the course of which he caused the death of two persons and was himself seriously injured. He pleads the right of private defence.

One of the deceased men Sankappa Shetty was the brother of the appellant's wife. There was a dispute about the headship of a family under whom he and she were joint tenants. Sankappa was supporting one candidate, while his sister supported the other. On the day of the occurrence, he wanted paddy for paying his rent, broke out the store room, removed the paddy and put his own lock on the door. When he came back for more paddy, he found another lock on the door, and was told that it was his sister's. On this occasion he was accompanied by Narayana Hegde, the son of the candidate for the headship. When he was preparing to remove the lock, his sister came and held it. There was a struggle between them, in the course of which she called out that she was being killed. At this, the appellant who was working in a shed behind the house, ran up and struck Sankappa one blow with an aruval which killed him on the spot. This is the story of Sankappa's death as told by the prosecution witnesses themselves. It is clear that the appellant's wife was roughly handled. Her hands were cut and bruised, evidently with the idea of making her release her hold on the lock. The appellant heard her cry out that she was being killed, and found her being assaulted by certainly one and probably two men. Under the circumstances, we think that his plea should have been accepted. He had reason to suppose that his wife might be seriously injured and he struck one blow in her defence.

As regards the death of Narayana Hegde, it is obvious that the prosecution witnesses have concealed a great part of the truth. They do not attempt to account for the numerous wounds found on the appellant. The probability is that when he felled Sankappa in defence of his wife, he was attacked by Narayana Hedge who was undoubtedly armed. This being so, it is difficult to say that he was not exercising his right of private defence here also.

We set aside the conviction and sentences and direct that the appellant be set at liberty.

If a few stolen articles are found in possession of a person under circumstances which may give rise to the probability of his coming by them honestly some time after the theft the presumption does not arise. [ibid.]

In making a reference to the High Court under s. 307 (2), Cr. P. C., the Sessions Judge should not enter his finding on any of the charges but should refer the entire case for consideration. [p. 363, col. 2.]

Reference made by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Pabna.

Mr. Khondkar, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference under s. 307, Cr. P. C. by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Pabna who was unable to agree with the unanimous verdict of the Jury finding the accused Nos. 2 to 6 guilty under s. 395, Indian Penal Code. With regard to accused No. 1 who was also found guilty under s. 395, the learned Judge has accepted the verdict of the Jury and sentenced him to transportation for life. In respect of the other accused persons the learned Assistant Sessions Judge has made no definite recommendation in referring the case to this Court under s. 307, Cr. P. C. but it seems from a perusal of this letter of reference that he is of opinion that these five accused should be acquitted.

All the six accused were charged under ss. 395, 412 and 120-B, Indian Penal Code. The facts which gave rise to the prosecution are that there were two dacoities committed on the 10th June 1923 in the houses of two persons Prasunno Kumar Guha and Girish Chandra Ghose. There were several other dacoities committed—one on the 21st June and another on the 18th July 1923. But in the present case the accused were charged with committing dacoities on the 10th June and with being found in possession of stated properties which were the subject of those dacoities. On the 14th August 1923 the Police which was deputed to petrol the river and watch the boats passing by, noted in the early hours of the morning a boat going down the stream. It was challenged and the boatmen gave an answer which did not satisfy the Police. They were asked to stop but they did not pay heed to it and adding more force dashed down the stream as quickly as possible. The Police gave chase—the Sub-Inspector following the boat in his boat and the several other Policemen pursuing the fugitives along the bank of the river. These men as they were running along raised a hue and cry and attracted a large number of villagers. After ten miles one of the villagers managed to reach the accused's boat and got into it but was thrown down into the river. One of the villagers then fired and the helmsman having left his charge the boat was secured. All the accused including the present accused persons gave fight and it was after a great deal of struggle that the men on the boat were secured one of whom subsequently died of the wound received in the affray. The boat was searched and a search list was prepared of the articles found on the boat. The persons who had complained of dacoities taking place in their houses were sent for and these articles were identified by them. A large number of articles (Exs. 1-35) were identified by Prasunno Kumar Guha and Girish Chandra Ghose as belonging to them and evidence was given by the prosecution to prove that these articles belonged to these persons and were taken away by the dacoits on the 10th June. On this evidence Jury brought in a verdict of guilty under s. 395 against all the accused persons and acquitted them under the other charges, namely, under ss. 412 and 120-B, Indian Penal Code. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge has been unable to accept the verdict of the Jury on the ground that there is no evidence that these persons took part in the dacoities of the 10th June and he has, therefore, asked us to set aside the verdict of the Jury convicting them under s. 395, Indian Penal Code. We have to see after giving due weight to the opinion of the Judge if the verdict of the Jury is so unreasonable that it ought not to be upheld. The evidence consists of the identification of the articles recovered from the boat and the confessions of accused No. 1, Waris and accused No. 6, Baram alias Badulla Bepari. As for the confession of Baram it is not very clear and it is difficult to convict him upon it of the dacoity of the 10th June. Waris in his confession implicates not only himself but accused Nos. 3 and 4, Afza-ud-din Sheikh and Ayez-ud-din Sheikh as being members of the party going to commit the two dacoities of the 10th June. As far as these two accused are concerned, we have the confession of Waris which is corroborated by the fact that the articles which were taken possession of by the dacoits were found in the boat in which these two accused were. Apart from this evidence as against these two accused persons, we have considered the whole evidence in the case against all the five accused whose case has been referred to us by the Judge. The evidence against them principally consists of the finding of these articles in the boat which they were in possession of, and secondly, the fight they set up and the desperate attempt they made to escape when challenged by the Police. This conduct of the accused might have some bearing upon the knowledge of the accused as to the nature of the articles found in their possession. Under s. 114 of the Evidence Act (Illustration A) if a man is found in possession of stolen goods soon after theft he is either a thief or a Receiver of goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. In the present case the accused have given no sufficient explanation of their possession of those goods. In fact they denied it. It has, therefore, to be considered whether they were found in possession of the goods so soon after the dacoity as to raise the presumption that they were either thieves or receivers of stolen property. The learned Judge in his letter of reference has expressed his opinion that the things having been discovered two months from the date of the dacoities, their possession should not be considered to be recent. No fixed time-limit can be laid down to determine whether possession of articles is recent or otherwise. But every case must be judged on its own facts. If a few stolen articles were found in possession of a person under circumstances which may give rise to the probability of his coming by them honestly some time after the theft the presumption under the law might not arise against him. But in the present case the articles that were recovered from the boat were articles which were the loot of several dacoities the last of which took place on the 18th July 1923. It may not be wrong, therefore, to presume that these persons were out on the errand of committing dacoities all over the place and were still engaged in their occupation when they were arrested. In these circumstances, therefore, we cannot say that the Jury was wrong in holding that the possession of the accused was so recent as to raise the presumption that they were the thieves. There is enough evidence, therefore, to support the verdict of the Jury. We are accordingly of opinion that the verdict of the Jury should be upheld and the accused should be convicted under s. 395, Indian Penal Code.

It is not necessary to consider the verdict of the Jury under s. 412, Indian Penal Code, as they have acquitted the accused of that charge and that verdict has been accepted by the Judge. But we should like to point out that under s. 307, cl. (2) the Judge in referring a case to this Court should not enter his finding on any of the charges but should refer the entire case for the consideration of this Court.

The result is that the Reference is rejected, the verdict of the Jury upheld convicting the accused under s. 395 and each of them sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. If they are on bail they must surrender and serve out their sentence.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Muttra, dated the 21st of November 1925.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The three appellants in this case, Chandan, Udai Singh and Bansi, all brothers, have been convicted in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Muttra on charges under s. 325, Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced each to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and fine.

The accused were committed for trial on a charge under s. 304 and, in my opinion, they ought to have been convicted on this charge and not under s. 325.

The case against the accused was that on the 18th of September 1925 they joined in attacking one Kalla jat with lathis with the result that Kalla received injuries which caused his death on the following day. The medical evidence shows that death was caused by fracture of the skull.

On the morning of the 18th of September these three accused went to the door of Kalla's house where some cattle were ied up. It is said that they loosed the cattle and began to drive them towards the pound at Sadabad. Two brothers of Kalla named Moti and Bhopal heard about this and came and remonstrated with the accused. The accused retorted by saying that they were driving the cattle to the pound because Moti and his brothers had done the same thing to their, (accused's) cattle some eight or ten days before. The accused took the cattle to the pound at Sadabad. Moti and Bhopal followed them and there a report was made to the Police about the wrongful impounding of the cattle. Moti afterwards went to the pound and got the cattle released and handed them over to Bhopal to take back to the village. He himself went off meanwhile to file a complaint before the Honorary Magistrate of Sadabad.

It appears that some of the cattle belonging to Kalla and his brothers had remained behind and could not be taken to the pound along with the other animals. A brother of the accused, a man named Jaswant, remained behind to look after these cattle, and it is said that while doing so Jaswant was assaulted. Jaswant then went to Sadabad where he met the accused Chandan and Udai Singh to whom he related what had happened to himself. Udai Singh and Chandan then came back to the village where they got hold of their brother Bansi, the third accused. They proceeded to attack Kalla and some of his relations. The evidence shows that the conflict between these two parties began with the throwing of brickbats. Kalla and his party were posted on a chabutra, whilst the accused were in their fields close by. Eventually Kalla and the others retreated from the chabutra whereupon they were pursued by the three accused appellants. Bhopal a brother of Kalla who was present at the time was beaten but managed to make his escape. The three accused fell on Kalla with their lathis and knocked him to the ground. A report was made to the Police and Kalla was taken to the hospital where before his death he made a dying declaration which was recorded by a Magistrate and which has been used in evidence against the prisoners. In that statement he described how he had been assaulted by the three accused appellants. Bhopal, one of the men who was attacked by the accused and who escaped gave evidence in support of the prosecution case, and we have also the statements of three witnesses Girdhari, Ganpat and Bidha who are apparently independent witnesses and who all describe the occurrence in the same manner as is done by the witness Bhopal. They all say that the three accused felled Kalla to the ground with their lathis. Another witness, Shib Nath, corroborates the evidence of these men in part. He saw something of the preliminary fight during which the parties were throwing missiles at each other but he went away before the lathi attack was made upon Kalla.

The defence set up a plea of enmity of which the Judge says there is no proof forthcoming. In the Magistrate's Court they stated that they would account for the manner of Kalla's death when they would be put on their trial before the Sessions Judge. When they came into the Sessions Court, however, their story was that they knew nothing about the death of Kalla. There was some evidence put forward to show that there was enmity between the accused and Moti, the brother of the deceased Kalla, over the purchase of a bullock. The story was that Moti had bought a bullock from the accused for Rs. 100 and had not paid the money. The Judge disbelieved this statement, and there was no reliable evidence to show that any such incident had ever occurred.

The Assessors were all satisfied that the accused were the men who attacked Kalla with lathis. The Judge was of opinion that because it could not be ascertained from the evidence which of the accused struck the blow which resulted in the fatal injury, namely, fracture of the skull, none of them could be convicted under s. 304. He refers to a number of cases of this Court in support of this opinion. The law as stated by the learned Sessions Judge is wrong and has been correctly laid down in a recent case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council [Barendra Kumar

Ghose v. Emperor (1).] The prisoners ought to have been convicted under s. 304 and I alter the conviction accordingly. I have entertained some doubt as to whether the sentences passed by the Sessions Judge are adequate to the gravity of the crime. On consideration, however, I have decided not to issue notice to the accused-appellants to show cause why those sentences should not be enhanced. They have each received a substantial sentence and on the whole I think the ends of justice are satisfied thereby. I dismiss the appeals.

LABH SINGH —APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—One previous conviction—Enhanced sentence.

One previous conviction does not necessarily mean that the convict is a habitual criminal, though a subsequent offence, shortly upon the release from Jail, is certainly a matter which entitles the Trial Court to impose a more severe sentence than would be the case if there has been no other conviction.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Lahore District, dated the 31st July 1923.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Labh Singh and Mathra Das have been convicted by the First Class Magistrate with s. 30 powers of an offence under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code. Labh Singh has, under the enhanced provisions of s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code, been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment with three months' solitary confinement and has further, under s. 565 of the Cr. P. C., been ordered on release to notify his residence for the maximum term of five years. Mathra Das, who appeals through Jail, has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment with three months' solitary confinement.

The case against both appellants has been amply proved. I need add nothing to the reasons given by the learned Magistrate for coming to his conclusion that the guilt of the appellant has been established.

The only question is that of the sentence upon Labh Singh. It appears that he was previously convicted in 1922 when he received 18 months' rigorous imprisonment. One previous conviction does not necessarily mean that the convict is a habitual criminal, though a subsequent offence, shortly upon release from Jail, is certainly a matter which entitles the Trial Court to impose a more severe sentence than would be the case if there has been no other conviction. I think, however, that the present sentence is, under the circumstances, rather too severe, and I, accordingly reduce it to one of five years' rigorous imprisonment and set aside the order for notification under s. 565 of the Cr. P. C. In other respects both appeals are dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 164—Confession, recording of, in Calcutta of offence committed in Mofussil—Formalities to be observed.

Where an accused is arrested in Calcutta in pursuance of a request made by the Police at Burdwan who evidently were holding the investigation with regard to the matter under the provisions of Ch. XIV, Cr. P. C., the arrest and production of the accused before a Magistrate at Calcutta for recording of confession must be taken to have been an act done in the process of investigation that was being held and the Magistrate is bound to comply with provisions of s. 164, Cr. P C., in recording the confession. [p. 367, col. 1.]

Where a Magistrate records the accused's confession not in the form prescribed for recording confessions but puts down the gist of the confession in the narrative form without recording the questions put to and answers given by the accused, though both the Magistrate and the accused are Bengalees, and does not remember the exact words used by the accused, and the only warning which he gives to the accused is that he asks the accused whether he is willing to make a voluntary confession and that if he makes a confession that might be used against him, and does not inform the accused that he is a Magistrate nor does he put to the accused questions to find out whether the reply which the accused is about to make is a voluntary one, there is no compliance with requirements of law for recording a confession. [p. 366, col. 2.]

Reference made by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Burdwan, dated the 15th September 1925.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Babu Panchanan Choudhury, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Refereuce by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan under the provisions of s. 307, Cr. P. C. The accused Garib Hari was tried for an offence under s. 304, Indian Penal Code, for having caused the death of one Kiranbala Harini who is said to have been his mistress and to have been in his keeping for a number of years. The prosecution case is that on the day of the alleged occurrence there was a quarrel of some sort between the accused and the deceased and that on account of the provocation which the accused received in the course of the quarrel he struck her with a knife, the result of which was that she died. The Jury brought in a unanimous verdict of not guilty and the learned Judge being of opinion that that verdict should not be accepted but that the accused should be convicted under s. 335, Indian Penal Code, has made this Reference to us.

The learned Judge in his letter of reference has very clearly and carefully set out the different items of evidence upon which the prosecution relied for the purpose of showing that the accused was guilty of the offence. The first item of evidence relates to the confession which the accused is said to have made on the day shortly after his arrest. The accused was arrested about 4 or 4-30 in the afternoon of the 16th April 1925. He was thereafter taken to the Jorasanko thana and the Police Officer in charge of that thana took him to the residence of an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, Mr. B. N. Mitter, and at his house the confession was recorded. The evidence of the Police Officer is to the effect that at the time when he was so taken the accused was smelling of liquor but that he was not in a drunken state. The confession was not recorded in the form prescribed for recording confessions and it does not contain the questions which were put by the Magistrate to the accused; nor the answers which the accused gave to those questions but the whole confession was put down in a narrative form. The warnings, such as they are said to have been administered to the accused, also do not appear on the record of the confession. The Honorary Magistrate is a Bengali gentleman, and the accused spoke in Bengali and yet the confession was recorded in English. No explanation also appears to have been given as to why instead of waiting till the next day and producing the accused before a Magistrate who was sitting in Court, the accused was produced before the Honorary Magistrate that very night at his residence and the confession was recorded there. Under these circumstances it is necessary to scrutinise the evidence of the Magistrate with some degree of care in order to find out what he exactly did or whether he did really comply with those formalities which have been from time to time laid down for the guidance of Magistrates in the matter of recording confessions. The Magistrate in the course of his evidence stated that he remembered only the gist of the confession, and that the accused did not say for what time he had been in Police custody. The Magistrate also stated that he does not remember what the exact words were that were used by the accused; nor does he profess to remember the exact questions that were put to the accused or the order in which they were put. The only warning that he gave to the accused appears to have been this that he asked him whether the accused was willing to make a voluntary confession and that if he made a confession that might be used against him. He does not appear to have even informed the accused that he was a Magistrate and he certainly did not put to the accused questions in order to find out whether the confession which the accused was about to make was a voluntary one or not. Under these circumstances it is difficult for us to hold that there was such enquiry as was necessary for the Magistrate to make in order to enable us to form an opinion as to whether the confession was voluntary or not. This is the view that I take of the confession apart from the provisions of s 164, Cr. P. C. But, in my opinion, the learned Magistrate has failed in the present case to record the confession strictly in accordance with the provisions of that section. The accused was arrested in Calcutta in pursuance of a request made by the Police at Burdwan who evidently were holding the investigation with regard to this matter under the provisions of Ch. XIV of the Cr. P. C. The arrest of the accused by the officer of the Calcutta Police and his production by that officer before the Magistrate must be taken to have been an act done in the process of the investigation that was being held; and if that is so, the Magistrate was bound to comply with the provisions of s. 164, Cr. P. C., in the matter of the recording of the confession. Though he may have given the warnings required by the first part of cl. (3) of s. 164, Cr. P. C., he has done nothing which he is bound to do under the latter part of that clause which provides that "no Magistrate shall record any such confession, unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily." It has been urged by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that although there was an investigation which was being held by the Burdwan Police the arrest of the accused and his production before the Magistrate in Calcutta must be considered as something done not in the course of that investigation but apart and quite detached from the investigation that was being so held. I am unable to accept this contention as I think the proper view of the matter is that the officer of the Calcutta Police merely lent his services to the Burdwan Police who were holding the investigation. But assuming for a moment that that was so and that the Police Officer had authority to act in this matter apart from the investigation that was being held by the Police at Burdwan there was no reason whatsoever why the Magistrate who has got to record the confession made by the accused should not comply with those statutory rules which have been embodied in s. 164, Cr. P. C., and why he should not proceed on the lines indicated in that section and in conformity with the Rules and Circular Orders issued by this Court.

On the whole, we are not satisfied that the record of the confession that is before us is one upon which we can act, nor is the record such as would enable us to say in disagreement with the verdict of the Jury that it was a confession made by the accused person voluntarily and that it should be acted upon.

The next item of evidence is the evidence of P. W. No. 2, Gobinda Hari, the son of the deceased. He is the only witness who speaks to the occurrence itself. He is a boy aged 12 and he professes to have been present at the time of the occurrence. He states that he was in the kitchen at the time when there was an altercation between his mother, the deceased, and the accused on the verandah adjoining the kitchen and that in that altercation the accused inflicted the injury upon his mother. In cross-examination, however, he stated that he did not see the actual stabbing and he did not notice how many times the accused struck his mother, and he stated also that it was quite dark at the time. The evidence of this witness is practically all the evidence that we have on the record as to the actual occurrence. Having regard to the statement made by this witness in his cross-examination to which I have referred I am not of opinion that the evidence is so very convincing that it should be right for us dealing with this case under the provisions of s. 307, Cr. P. C., to accept it as conclusive in view of the fact that the Jury evidently were of opinion that it was not sufficient to fix the guilt upon the accused.

The third item of evidence referred to by the learned Judge relates to the evidence of certain witnesses who spoke to the fact that shortly after the occurrence P. W. No. 2, Gobinda told them that he was an eye-witness to the occurrence and that the accused had inflicted the injury upon his mother. Having regard to what I have said as to the value of the evidence of Gobinda himself I do not think that the third item of evidence even if it be accepted as true, carries the case very far.

The last item of evidence is that of the P. W. Nos. 6 and 11 who say that on the day of the alleged occurrence and shortly before it took place the accused was seen in the village where the occurrence took place. This no doubt is a piece of circumstantial evidence but if we are not prepared to rely on the confession of the accused and if we are not satisfied with the evidence of Gobinda, it cannot be said that the mere fact that the accused was seen in the village where the occurrence took place short ly before the time of the occurrence is a fact upon which the conviction of the accused can possibly be founded.

There are certain other matters which present some difficulty to us, though perhaps if we were to deal with the case independently of the verdict of the Jury we might not regard them very seriously. Though the injury was inflicted on the verandah of the kitchen the deceased was found lying with the knife beside her at no less a distance than 130 feet from that place. It may be that she ran after the assault and was chased by her assailant who dropped the knife when she fell, or it may be that she ran with the knife sticking on to her and then she pulled out and threw the knife and herself fell. But these are mere theories, for there is no evidence on the point, and indeed we do not know whether it was possible for her to run this distance after the injury she had received. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has argued on the presence of blood in the verandah and the fact that there were blood spots on the cloth which the accused was wearing at the time of his arrest. So far as the presence of blood on the verandah is concerned that only goes to show, if that evidence is accepted, that the occurrence took place there, and as regards the presence of blood on the cloth which the accused was wearing at the time of his arrest the chemical examiner's report is to the effect that although blood spots were found on the cloth, the origin of the blood could not be determined.

The evidence on the record is not of a very convincing character and we are of opinion that in this case we should not be justified in interfering with the unanimous verdict of the Jury. The Reference is accordingly discharged, the verdict of the Jury upheld and the accused Garib Hari is acquitted and directed to be set at liberty.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562—Accused above 21 years—Benefit of section—Revision, interference in.

In case of an accused not under 21 years of age s. 562, Cr. P. C., is only applicable when the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with the imprisonment for not more than seven years.

The High Court is not bound to interfere on its revision side with an order under s. 562 even when it is illegal.

Abdul v. Emperor, 6 Ind. Cas. 639; 16 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.; 11 Cr. L. J. 389 and Ala Dya v. Emperor, 5 P. R. 1906 Cr.; 4 Cr. L. J. 75; 116 P. L. R. 1907, followed.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal.

FACTS.—Hoshiara accused was challaned under s. 457, Indian Penal Code, for breaking into the shop of Gandhela, complainant, at night and has been convicted by the Bench of Honorary Magistrates at Panipat under s. 457, Indian Penal Code, and released on probation of good conduct under s. 562, Cr. P. C., on a small bail of Rs. 100 for the short period of four months.

GROUNDS.—Accused is aged over twenty-one years. He gave his age as twenty-two in the lower Court. Section 562, Cr. P. C., is only applicable (in cases of persons not under twenty-one) when an accused is convicted of an offence punishable with imprisonment for not more than seven years. House-breaking by night with intent to commit theft is punishable under s. 457, Indian Penal Code with 14 years' imprisonment. The order passed by the Magistrate is, therefore, illegal. It is recommended that the order may be set aside and the accused sentenced to whipping or a substantive term of imprisonment.

Lala Parkash Chand, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—It is clear that the order under s. 562, Cr. P. C., is illegal. The question is whether sitting as a Court of Revision I am bound to interfere and if not, whether I ought to interfere. In Abdul v. Emperor (1) Johnstone, J., refused to interfere in a case which was practically on all fours with the present. Sitting as a Court of Revision I am not bound to interfere even when an order is illegal. [Ala Dya v. King-Emperor (2).] And in the present case I do not feel called on to do more than record the fact that the order is illegal and draw the attention of the Trial Court to the illegality.

Second rent appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 21st November 1924, setting aside that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Sultanpur, dated the 22nd September 1924.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. D. Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for arrears of rent under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). The facts are to the effect that the plots in dispute regarding which the rent is claimed by the plaintiff, appertain to an under-proprietary mahal named Pura Bachchil, belonging to village Aidhi, District Sultanpur, the said village being situate within the taluqdari of the plaintiff. The said mahal consisted of a large area out of which one Kunj Behari was the owner to the extent of 14 bighas 2 biswas 16 biswansis. The defendant, Ram Autar, was also a co-sharer in the said mahal. Kunj Behari sold his under-proprietary holding to the plaintiff, Badri Bishal Singh, but soon after the sale the defendant, Ram Autar, instituted a suit for pre-emption against the plaintiff and got a decree in respect of the property sold. Subsequently in the year 1916 the plaintiff in execution of a decree held by him against the defendant, purchased the land in suit along with other property with which we are not, in any way, concerned in this appeal. The defendant did not deliver possession of the land in suit to the plaintiff in spite of his purchase but continued to realize rent himself from the tenants who cultivated the land in suit. An attempt was made by the defendant in the Rent Court to get ex-proprietary rights in this land but that Court rejected his claim by an order dated the 3rd July 1923 passed by Mr. Farid ud-din Ahmad, the Sub-Divisional Officer. The said order was upheld in appeal by Mr. Mudie, the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur, by his order, dated the 27th September 1923. He ordered that Ram Autar having no right in the land in suit his name should be removed as an ex-proprietary tenant and names of actual cultivators should be entered as statutory tenants of the said land. Armed with this order the plaintiff brought the present suit for arrears of rent under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, as stated above, on the 11th December 1923.

The defendant contended inter alia that the suit under the aforesaid section was not maintainable and contested the right of the plaintiff to claim rent from him. It is not necessary to state in detail the various pleas taken by him in defence as they are not necessary for purposes of this appeal. The suit was tried and decreed by Mr. N. N. Chakarvarti, Assistant Collector, First Class, Sultanpur, by his decision dated the 22nd of September 1924. The defendant appealed to the learned District Judge of Fyzabad who, by his decree dated the 21st November 1924, allowed the defendant's appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

At the outset I may state that the case has been tried most unsatisfactorily by the learned Assistant Collector. Trials of rent cases by Assistant Collectors are usually unsatisfactory and this case is not an exception to the usual rule. I find that the learned Assistant Collector, who tried this case, instead of recording proceeding separately took down the statement of the patwari on the back of the plaint, as is usually done in a criminal case, and that the issues fixed in the case instead of being recorded separately in English proceedings were recorded by him on the back of the written statement. Besides this I find that the case has not been approached from the correct point of view. The issues fixed in the case were several, but the real issue whether the plaintiff could claim rent in respect of the land in suit under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, was never framed.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal and looking to the enormous delay that has already occurred in the disposal of this case I have taken the trouble of going through the entire record and finding out the facts to see how far the plaintiff's suit was maintainable. After doing so I have come to the conclusion that the suit is not maintainable.

It is clear from the facts stated above that the suit was brought by the plaintiff for arrears of rent, under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, as stated above in respect of the land which he had purchased at an auction-sale in execution of his decree against the defendant. It is also clear from Mr. Mudie's order, referred to above, that the plots in suit were in occupation of the tenants and that the defendant merely realized rent from them. In my opinion s. 127 was not intended to cover such a case. Section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act runs as follows:—

"(1) A person taking or retaining possession of land without being entitled to such possession may, at the option of the person entitled to eject him as a trespasser, be treated as a tenant, and shall thereupon be liable for the rent of that land...at such rate as the Court may determine to be fair and equitable, and he shall not in respect of that land have any of the statutory privileges conferred by this Act."

"(2) When a Court passes a decree for arrears of rent under sub-s. (1) read with cl. (2) of s. 108, it shall, on the application of the plaintiff, also pass a decree for ejectment of the defendant from the land."

I have underlined (italicised) the words "taking or retaining possession" and "ejectment" in order to show what the actual intention of the Legislature was. On my reading of the section, it appears to me that the section was intended to cover the case of a person who has actually taken possession of the land for the purpose of cultivation. It was not intended to cover the case of a person who had merely realized rent of the land which had originally belonged to him but subsequently ceased to be his property and who had thus caused the dispossession of the person to whom the land now belonged In Suraj Bali v. Govinda (1) a case decided by the Board of Revenue, United Provinces, it was held by Sir Duncan Baillie that such a suit was not maintainable in the Rent Courts under the provisions of s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. In that case a person had got a decree from the Civil Court against a lambardar for possession of some land and the Civil Court directed him to claim mesne profits through the Revenue Courts. The lambardar, even after the decree had been passed against him, continued to collect rents from the tenants in actual possession of the land. The decree-holder thereupon issued a notice of ejectment against the lambardar treating him as his tenant under s. 127 of the said Act. It was held that s. 127 was not applicable to the case and that the remedy of the decree-holder lay in the Civil Courts, and the notice of ejectment was, on that view of the case, cancelled. In a subsequent case the Board of Revenue held that s. 127 was applicable also in the case of a person who had taken possession of the land without the consent of the landlord but had not actually cultivated it but had allowed it to lie fallow, vide Sheo Piyarey Lal v Aughar (2). I am also supported in this view by a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Kamta Prasad v. Panna Lal (3). That case dealt with s. 34 of the Agra Tenancy (Act II of 1901). In that case Sir Henry Richards, KT., C. J., and Tudball, J., observed that s. 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act was intended to apply to the case of a person taking possession for the purpose of cultivating the land as a tenant without the consent of the landholder. It is clear in the present case, that the land is in occupation of tenants and not in that of the defendant. He cannot, therefore be said to have taken possession or retained possession in the sense in which these words are used in s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act.

It has also been brought to my notice that the plaintiff appellant subsequent to the dismissal of his suit by the learned District Judge of Fyzabad, brought a suit for profits against the defendant. A certificated copy of the plaint in that suit has been filed before me, which is admitted by the other side as correct. In para. 5 of the plaint, the plaintiff has clearly stated that the defendant being an influential man had realized the rent and spent the sum so realized for his own benefit. In my opinion these allegations show clearly that the defendant cannot be sued under s. 127 of the Oudh Rent Act, and that the plaintiff appellant has chosen his proper remedy by instituting a suit for profits in respect of the land in suit against the defendant who is alleged to be the perpetual lessee of the other lands situate in the aforesaid under-proprietary mahal.

JUDGMENT.—In 1921 a considerable amount of business known as 'Golo' business was done in Karachi in white Java sugar of June 1921 vaida godown delivery. The parties to these transactions acted really as principals and the transactions were on the pukka adatia system. After June 1921 disputes arose in the bazar relating to these transactions between sellers and buyers. The buyers generally contended that the sellers had committed breach of contract; that the due date in respect of the June vaida was 25th or 26th June; that the market rate on due date was Rs. 35-0 per cwt, and that they were entitled to damages on the basis of that rate The sellers on the other hand contended that the breach of contract was on the part of the purchasers, that the due date for the vaida was the last day of the month, and that the rate on such due date was something like Rs. 23-8 per cwt.

Litigation followed and about the first suit filed in respect of these transactions of June 1921 vaida was suit 134 of 1922 of this Court. The plaintiffs in that suit were the firm of Jetha Devji, purchasers, the defendants being the Joria Bazar Sugar Co., in which Jetha Kallianji was the principal partner. The Joria Bazar Sugar Co., replied by filing a counter suit No. 389 of 1922 against the firm of Jetha Devji. The contentions of the purchasers in these suits were that the breach of contract was on the part of the sellers, that 25th or 26th June was the due date, that the market rate on such due date was Rs. 35-0 per cwt., and that they were entitled to a decree for damages on the basis of that rate. The sellers in these suits contended that the purchasers were guilty of breach of contract, that 30th June was the due date and that the rate on the due date was Rs. 23-8 per cwt. The two suits came to be regarded by dealers who had entered into Golo contracts of June 1921 vaida as test suits, The suits were tried by Aston, A. J. C., who in February 1924 decided that the breach was on the part of the sellers, that 25th or 26th June was the due date of the vaida, that the rate on such due date was Rs. 31 10. On these findings Suit No. 134 of 1922 was decreed in favour of the plaintiffs and Suit No. 389 of 1922 was dismissed.

Some time later the parties in the above test suits appealed from the decision of Aston, A. J. C., Jetha Devji's appeal being First Appeal No. 35 of 1924, and that of the Joria Bazar Sugar Co., being First Appeal No. 36 of 1924.

The plaintiffs in this suit had entered both as purchasers and sellers into Golo contracts for white Java sugar of June 1921 vaida. Inter alia they had purchased from the defendants 175 bags of this vaida at rates ranging between Rs. 26·2 and Rs. 27-8 per cwt. Till the decision of the test suits referred to above, the plaintiffs had filed no suits in respect of their purchases of sugar of June 1921 vaida. Their period of limitation for filing such suits was to expire in June 1924. On 16th June 1924 the plaintiffs and the defendants in this suit executed an agreement which is Ex. 5 in this case. This agreement after reciting the facts relating to the test suits referred to above, states that the parties thereto agree to abide by the decision in Appeals Nos. 35 and 36 of 1924, that the parties will in accordance with the said decision of the appeals pay and receive damages according to the rate fixed by the decision and that they shall not raise any question as to breach or any other contention. The agreement refers to the contracts between the parties for 175 bags of June 1921 vaida and states that it is an arrangement which is to operate as a new arrangement and/or new agreement giving rise to a fresh cause of action.

Having secured the execution of Ex. 5 by the defendants, the plaintiffs desisted from filing suits against the defendants in respect of their contracts for sugar of June 1921 vaida.

First Appeals Nos. 35 and 36 of 1924 were disposed of on 21st August 1925. Appeal No. 36 arising out of Suit No. 389 of 1922 was dismissed with costs. In Appeal No. 35 of 1924 arising out of suit No. 134 of 1922 the rate fixed by the Appellate Court was Rs. 30·8 per cwt.

Thereupon the plaintiffs called upon the defendants for payment of Rs. 1,068-10-6 as damages on the above recited contracts for 175 bags on the basis of the decision of the Appellate Court and under the agreement, Ex. 5. The defendants having refused to pay the amount the plaintiffs instituted the present suit, based on the agreement, Ex. 5.

The main defence raised by the defendants to this suit is contained in para. 6 of their written statement. Therein they contend that the agreement, Ex. 5, is not valid and binding as it was signed by the defendant No. 1, Jethalal Kallianji, after the defendants firm had, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, been dissolved. They further contend that the agreement, Ex. 5, is void as being without consideration. By an amendment of their written statement which was allowed by me, they have further pleaded in amended para. 6 of their written statement that the agreement, Ex. 5, is void as being against law and public policy and by way of wager.

Issues were framed on 10th November, 1925. By consent of the parties I have tried Issues Nos. 3, 6 and 7 as preliminary issues, as obviously if these issues are decided in favour of the plaintiffs, the suit will be disposed of.

Issue No. 3 is: "Is the agreement referred to in para. 4 of the plaint for consideration and binding on the defendants for reasons given in para. 6 of the written statement?"

Issue No. 6 is: "If the agreement referred to in para. 4 of the plaint is valid and binding, can the defendants be permitted to raise the pleas involved in Issues Nos. 4 and 5?

The seventh is the general issue.

Before dealing with the legal arguments addressed to me on the various legal points involved in Issue No. 3 it is necessary to have a clear idea of the facts and circumstances attending the execution of Ex. 5 which is the basis of this suit.

As I have stated above, the test suits in these Golo transactions were disposed of by Aston, A. J. C., in February 1924. The proprietor of the plaintiffs Benarsidas Bhagwandas was in Karachi at the time, but as he states, left soon after for his native place. The fact has not been denied. Banarsidas returned at the end of May or in early June 1924, and there can be no doubt that the object of his return to Karachi was to take action in respect of the Golo transactions in which his firm was concerned as purchasers. He states that he approached Jethalal of the defendants firm for payment of his due on the basis of the judgment in the test suits. He states he was on friendly terms with Jethalal, and unwilling, therefore, to file suits against him in respect of the transactions in question. According to Benarsidas he proposed to Jethalal that it would be unnecessary waste of money to file suits against Jethalal's firm in view of the decision of Aston, A. J. C., and of the fact that an appeal was pending against that decision and proposed to Jethalal that an agreement might be come to under which his firm and Jethalal's firm should pay or receive damages according to the decision of the High Court on the appeal in the test suits. He states that Jethalal said he would consider the matter. Mr. Kalumal who has been examined as a witness states that after the decision in the test suits Benarsidas came to him and requested him to file suits against Jethalal's firm in respect of his contracts of purchase from Jethalal's firm of sugar of June 1921 vaida. Mr. Kalumal, according to his evidence, was unwilling to do this for more reasons than one. In the first place his position was awkward because both Benarsidas and Jethalal were his standing clients. In the second place, he had appeared for Jethalal's firm in the test suits tried by Aston, A. J. C., and it was awkward for him in these circumstances to espouse the cause of Benarsidas who stood in the same position as Jetha Devji stood in the test suits He, therefore, according to his evidence, took the opportunity when both Benarsidas and Jethlal were in his office to advise them not to go to Court in respect of their contracts but to execute an agreement that both parties would be bound by the decision of the Appellate Court in the test suits. There seems little doubt that this must have occurred after Benarsidas had returned from his native place in May or June 1921.

Jethalal, who has given evidence in this case, denies the negotiations referred to by Benarsidas which led to the execution of Ex. 5. Having regard, however, to the circumstances of the case I feel that Benarsidas' version of what led to the execution of Ex. 5 is true and can well be relied on. Both parties accepted the advise of Mr. Kalumal; Ex 5 was drafted and after some alteration, finally executed on 16th June 1924.

These are my findings with regard to the facts and circumstances attending the execution of Ex 5, and, in my opinion, they are well justified on the evidence of Benarsidas, Ex. 6, of Mr. Kalumal, Ex. 9 and of Jethalal Ex. 13.

I will now deal with the various legal points involved in para. 6 of the written statement of the defendants, and covered by Issue No. 3 in the case.

The first contention is that Ex. 5 having been signed by Jethalal alone after the defendants firm had, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, been dissolved, it is not valid and binding on the defendants.

Jethalal has given evidence that he and Moosa Usman carried on business in the name and style of the Joria Bazar Sugar Co., till 31st May or 1st June 1924 when they dissolved the partnership; that thereafter he alone carried on business in the name and style of the New Joria Bazar Sugar Co. Jethalal alleges that Benarsidas was aware of the dissolution and relies on the fact that prior to 31st May 1924 the form of acceptance letters used by the Joria Bazar Sugar Co. contained the names of himself and Moosa Usman as proprietors whereas after 1st June 1924 the form of acceptance letters used by the New Joria Bazar Sugar Co. contained only his name as proprietor. He admits, however, that no public notice was given of the dissolution of the partnership between him and Moosa Usman. He further admits that the plaintiffs did no business with the New Joria Bazar Sugar Co. He also admits that the New Joria Bazar Sugar Co. carried on business in the very premises in which the Joria Bazar Sugar Co. had its place of business. Benarsidas denies that he was aware of any dissolution between Jethalal and Moosa Usman. In these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that the plaintiffs had any knowledge of the dissolution of partnership between Jethalal and Moosa Usman. The agreement, Ex. 5, therefore, would not be invalid or not binding on the defendants for the reason alleged.

But even assuming that Benarsidas was aware of the dissolution of the partnership between Jethalal and Moosa Usman, the execution of Ex. 5 by Jethalal was clearly a necessary act for winding up the business of the partnership and, therefore, under ss. 251 and 263 of the Indian Contract Act the partners would be bound by the agreement as after a dissolution of partnership the rights and obligations of the partners continue in all things necessary for winding up the business of the partnership.

I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no substance in this contention of the defendants.

The next contention of the defendants is that the agreement, Ex. 5, is void as being without consideration; (section 25 Indian Contract Act). Various authorities have been quoted by Mr. Khanchand to the effect that motive must be distinguished from consideration, that consideration must be real that consideration must move from the promiser etc. He argues that it is to be gathered from Ex. 5 that the consideration for it was the mutual promise of the parties to abide by the decision of the High Court, that therefore, no oral evidence can be referred to as to what was the consideration for the execution of Ex. 5.

In my opinion the arguments on this question of consideration are largely technical and academical. The agreement, Ex. 5, is, as a matter of fact, silent on the question of consideration and under s. 92 of the Evidence Act oral evidence is admissible to determine what was the consideration for Ex. 5. Mr. Kimatrai for the plaintiffs argues that the consideration for which Jethalal executed Ex. 5 was that Banarsidas agreed to refrain from suing Jethalal's firm on his contracts for sugar of June 1921 vaida. Having regard to the evidence recorded and the general facts and circumstances attending the execution of Ex. 5, I am of opinion that Mr. Kimatrai's contention is well founded. The position between the parties in June 1921 was as follows: Benarsidas' period of limitation for suits in regard to sugar of June 1921 vaida would expire by the 25th of that month. He was, therefore, anxious either to file his suits or obtain a settlement by means of an agreement in the nature of Ex. 5. There can be no doubt that it was for this very reason that he came down to Karachi from his native place at the end of May or in early June 1924 and I believe his evidence in which he states that he gave Jethalal notice verbally that he must either settle and enter into an agreement to abide by the decision of the High Court in the test suits or that he would be compelled to file his suits. It may be, of course, that there was no actual request by Jethalal in so many words to Benarsidas that he should refrain from filing suits, but the law certainly does not require such actual request and there can be no doubt reading the evidence, as a whole, and bearing in mind the general facts and circumstances, that the consideration for which Jethalal executed Ex. 5 was Benarsidas' refraining from filing any suits in respect of sugar of June 1921 vaida against his firm.

I am, therefore, of opinion that Ex. 5 was executed for consideration and is, therefore, binding on the defendants.

A more serious objection, however, to Ex. 5 is that it is void as being against law and public policy in so far as it offends against s. 28 Indian Contract Act.

Mr. Khanchand argues that in the operative part of Ex. 5 the third clause is that the parties to the agreement shall not raise any question as to breach or any other contention, that this is an agreement by which the defendants are restricted absolutely from enforcing their rights under the original contracts by the usual proceedings in the ordinary tribunals, that a contract which includes such an agreement is void to that extent and that it is, therefore, open to the defendants in this suit to raise and have decided the pleas involved in issues Nos. 4 and 5.

Before dealing with the authorities relied on by Mr. Khanchand in support of his proposition three points in connection with Ex. 5 must be noted; In the first place, Ex. 5 recites that the parties thereto enter into an agreement and arrangement which is to operate as a new arrangement and/or new agreement giving rise to a fresh cause of action. This can only mean that the parties to Ex 5 mutually agree to abandon or relinquish their respective rights, liabilities, and obligations which have already arisen under the original contracts referred to in Ex. 5, and to substitute for them new rights, liabilities and obligations which are embodied in Ex. 5. Again, it has to be noted that there is in Ex. 5 no express provision by which the defendants are restricted absolutely from enforcing their rights under the original contracts by the usual proceedings in the ordinary tribunals. Lastly, Ex. 5 makes it clear that there is no restriction of any kind on the parties, thereto enforcing their rights under that agreement by the usual proceedings in the ordinary tribunals. On the contrary the use of the words "giving rise to a fresh cause of action" indicate that the parties to Ex. 5 contemplate the possibility of litigation in the ordinary course.

Coming now to the authorities quoted by Mr. Khanchand:

The cases cited by him and reported as Coringa Oil Co., Ltd. v. Koegler (1), Mulji Tejsey v. Ransey Devaraj (2), Burla Ranga Reddi v. Kalapalli Sithaya(3) and Naraindas v. Kewalram (4), are all cases in which parties agreed by virtue of a clause in the original contracts which established legal relations between them that in respect of disputes that may arise out of such contracts they would abide by the decision of brokers, arbitrators, the sub-committee of an Association etc., and that such decision should be final, unappealable etc.. It was held in these cases that such clauses offended against s. 28, Indian Contract Act, and were to that extent void as being attempts to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts. These cases are entirely distinguishable from the present case. There is a statutory right to attack an award made by arbitrators, surveyors, etc., in a Court of law, and parties who purport to contract themselves out of such statutory rights may well be said to be attempting to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, and thus to be offending against the principle involved in s. 28, Indian Contract Act. Here there was no clause in the original contracts between the parties which in any way restricted them from enforcing their rights thereunder by the usual proceedings in the ordinary tribunals. It was only when there had been a breach of the contracts and disputes had arisen between the parties, each party asserting and claiming his rights thereunder and demanding from the other the fulfilment of his obligations thereunder, that the parties by Ex. 5 agreed to relinquish or abandon their respective rights, liabilities and obligations under the original contracts and to substitute for these new rights, liabilities and obligations. This is an entirely different thing from agreeing to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts.

Equally distinguishable are the cases quoted by Mr. Khanchand and reported, as Raja of Venkatagiri v. Vemuru Chinta Reddi (5) and Cooper v. Wills (6) for these were cases where the parties having actually taken action in a Civil Court and submitted themselves to its jurisdiction attempted by agreement to prevent the Court from deciding matters which it had jurisdiction to decide and which the parties had actually put before it for decision. The case in Seumal Nihalchand v. Pursomul (7) dealt merely with the validity or legality of a compromise under O. XXII, r. 3, C. P. C., by which parties to a pending suit agreed to abide by the decision of their Pleaders, in whatever manner arrived at.

No case has been cited which could be regarded as judicial authority for the proposition that an agreement which embodies a compromise of doubtful rights arising out of a previous contract between the parties offends against s. 28, Indian Contract Act, because thereby the parties thereto agree that they abandon their rights under the original contract which necessarily include the right to resort to a Civil Court in regard to the contract. And this, in my opinion, is exactly what has taken place between the parties to this suit. On the contrary, there are rulings entitled to the greatest weight which establish the proposition that a compromise of doubtful rights is outside the scope of s. 28, Indian Contract Act. In the Privy Council case reported as Munshi Amir Ali v. Maharani Inderjit Koer (8) Counsel for the appellant had agreed at the hearing of the appeal before the High Court that if the High Court would restrict its judgment to a finding on one of several issues, his client would not appeal to the Privy Council. It was held that the agreement was for consideration and binding and that the appeal to the Privy Council could not be heard. This was a case before the enactment of the Indian Contract Act. It was however followed by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case reported as Anant Das v. Ashburner & Co. (9) after the Indian Contract Act was passed. In this case, in consideration of A giving B time to satisfy a decree against him held by A, B agreed not to appeal against the decree and did appeal. It was held that the agreement was not prohibited by s. 28 of the Indian Contract Act, and that the Appellate Court was bound by the rules of justice, equity and good conscience to give effect to it, and to refuse to allow B to proceed with the appeal instituted in contravention of it. The learned Judges said, "By the agreement not to appeal, for which the indulgence granted by the respondents was a good consideration, the appellant did not restrict himself absolutely from enforcing a right under or in respect of any contract. He forewent his right to question in appeal the decision which had been passed by an ordinary tribunal." To my mind these decisions are entirely in point.

(9) 1 A. 267; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 181.

Other aspects of the case have been presented to me by Mr. Kimatrai for the plaintiffs. He has drawn my attention to the cases referred to at pages 218, 219 of Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on the Indian Contract Act dealing with agreements providing for the enforcement of rights by suit within a period shorter than that prescribed by law. Prima facie such agreements are contrary to the provisions of s. 28, but in many cases they have been held to be valid and binding as providing for a release or forfeiture of rights if no suit is brought within the time stipulated in such agreements, and not limiting the time within which rights may be enforced.

Again Mr. Kimatrai has argued—and in my opinion with considerable force—that the case of the plaintiffs may well be considered to fall within Exception I to s. 28, Indian Contract Act. If an agreement to abide by the decision of arbitrators, brokers, referees, etc., be held to fall within the Exception, why not also an agreement to abide by the decision of a Court albeit in a case not inter parties. Lastly Mr. Kimatrai has pointed out that the offending cl. 3 in the operative part of Ex. 5 is really redundant and may well have been omitted. It is a mere corollary to cls. 1 and 2.

I have given this objection to the validity of Ex. 5 my best consideration and cannot but conclude that s. 28, Indian Contract Act, does not render Ex. 5 invalid or void.

The last objection urged against Ex. 5 is indeed both novel and ingenious. It is argued that if the original contracts between the plaintiffs and the defendants were by reason of Ex. 5 entirely wiped out, then Ex. 5 must be regarded as a wagering contract and as such is void and unenforceable under s. 30, Indian Contract Act.

When it is borne in mind that there is no allegation that the original contracts between the parties for sugar of June 1921 vaida were wagering, it is really difficult to understand this plea of wager. It really seems to me to be based on a misapprehension as to what a wager really is. Mr. Khanchand refers to Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on the Indian Contract Act, page 226 (5th Edition) for a definition of 'wager'. The passage is really a quotation from Anson's Law of Contract, page 228 (14th Edition). A reference to the Illustrations given by Anson, however, makes it clear that the agreements by A with the D referred to in the Illustrations were clearly wagering because D had no interest whatsoever in the contract between A and X, and his agreements with A were collateral agreements in which each side stood to win or lose according to the uncertain or unascertained event in reference to which alone A and D had agreed. Reference has also been made to the cases reported as Kaluram v. Ram Dayal (10), Vithoba v. Sitaram (11) and Walter Mitchel v. A. K. Tenant (12) for the same purpose. A really exhaustive and truly classical definition of a wagering contract is that given by Hawkins, J., in the well-known case of Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. (13) and quoted at length by Chitty in his Law of Contract (17th Edition) page 795: "A wagering contract within the Statute is one" it is said by Hawkins, J. "by which two persons, professing to hold opposite views touching the issue of a future uncertain event, mutually agreed that, dependent upon the determination of that event, one shall win from the other, and that other shall pay or hand over to him, a sum of money or other stake; neither of the contracting parties having any other interest in that contract than the sum or stake he will so win or lose, there being no other real consideration for the making of such contract by either of the parties." The latter part of this definition which I have underlined (italicised) makes it manifest that Ex. 5 is not a wagering contract. The parties to Ex. 5 each had an interest in the original contracts for which Ex. 5 was substituted, and Ex. 5 was executed for real consideration.

This last objection must, therefore, also fail.

My answer to Issue No. 3, therefore, is that the agreement Ex. 5 is for consideration and binding on the defendants. It is unnecessary to discuss Issue No. 6. As Ex. 5 is valid and binding on the defendants, it follows that they cannot be permitted to raise the pleas involved in Issues Nos. 2, 4 and 5 which relate to the original contracts between the parties. As to issue No. 1, the suit is obviously in time. This disposes of the suit.

The plaintiffs claim Rs. 1,068-10-6 as per memo attached to the plaint the correctness of which is not disputed. There will, therefore, be a decree against the defendants for Rs. 1,068-10-6, costs of the suit, and interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit till payment.

I am asked by the Pleader for the plaintiffs to note that in view of this judgment it has become unnecessary to dispose of his amendment application filed on 16th January 1926.

SUITS NOS. 994 AND 995 OF 1925.

Suits Nos. 994 and 995 of 1925 transferred to this Court from the Court of Small Causes, Karachi, have with the consent of the parties been tried along with Suit No. 702 of 1925. The plaintiffs in all the three suits are the same, the defendants in suits Nos. 994 and 995 though described as the firms of Abdulla Moosa and Moosa Usman are really the same as the defendants in Suit No. 702/25. By consent of the parties the evidence recorded in Suit No. 702 of 1925 has been treated as evidence in these two suits and no further evidence has been called. My judgment in Suit No. 702 will, therefore, cover Suits Nos. 994 and 995 of 1925. In the former there will be a decree for plaintiffs for Rs. 233-15 6 with costs and interest at 6 per cent. from date of suit till payment. In Suit No. 995 there will be a decree for plaintiffs for Rs. 364-5-0 with costs and interest at 6 per cent. from date of suit till payment.

In both these suits costs to be calculated on the Small Cause Court scale.

Cause of action for a suit for a declaration that a particular decree was obtained by fraud and for an injunction restraining the decree-holders from executing it partly arises at the place where the decree is obtained and partly where it is sought to be executed and consequently Courts at both the places have jurisdiction to try the suit. Mr. J. M. Mackay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th March, 1918, Messrs. E. D. Sassoon and Company obtained a decree for a certain sum of money against the Firm of Nidhan Singh-Jawahar Singh in the Court of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Karachi. The decree was transmitted for execution to the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar, and in execution thereof certain immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtors was attached

The plaintiff, Jawahar Singh, has brought the present suit for a declaration that the decree is inoperative as it was obtained by fraud, and for an injunction restraining the decree holders from executing the decree against his property in Amritsar. The question for determination is whether the Amritsar Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Now, s. 20, C. P. C., lays down, inter alia, that a suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises. The cause of action in the present case consists of two parts, one of which arose at Karachi where the decree sought to be impeached as fraudulent was passed, and the other at Amritsar where the property of the plaintiff was attached. The Amritsar Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain and determine the suit. This rule has been laid down in Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (1), Jawahir v. Neki Ram (2), Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (3) and Kedar Nath Mukerjee v. Prosonna Kumar Chatterjee (4).

The learned Counsel for the decree-holders contends that in the cases cited above the suit was brought by a judgment-debtor, but that the present action was brought by the plaintiff as a third party on the allegation that he was not liable under the decree. Now, we have carefully considered the allegations in the plaint, and we are of opinion that, though that document is not artistically framed, the substance of the plaintiff's claim is that, while under the decree as it stands he is liable for the payment of the money, there are various reasons why the decree should be held to be inoperative as against him. The suit must, therefore, be treated as one brought by a judgment-debtor; and, as a material portion of the cause of action, namely, the attachment of his property, arose at Amritsar, he is entitled to ask the Amritsar Court to determine the suit.

If the suit had been solely for setting aside the decree obtained at Karachi, the Amritsar Court would not have been competent to entertain it. The only cause of action in that case would have been the obtaining of the decree by fraud, and, as it arose in Karachi, no Court other than the Karachi Court would have been competent to hear the suit. Such a suit belongs to the category exemplified by the judgment in Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (5), but, as pointed out above, the plaintiff in the present case seeks two reliefs: (1) a declaration that the decree is inoperative on the ground of fraud, and (2) an injunction for the protection of his property against attachment and sale in execution of that decree; and we consider that the second prayer cannot be ignored for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the Court. It is, therefore, clear that part of the cause of action arose at Amritsar, and the suit is consequently cognizable by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar.

For the aforesaid reasons we accept the appeal, and setting aside the judgment of the Single Bench as well as that of the Subordinate Judge we remit the case to the latter for disposal in accordance with law. Costs of this appeal shall be costs in the cause.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 24th March 1925, in Regular Civil Appeal No. 84 of 1924, confirming that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 31st October 1924.

Mr. Ali Zaheer, for the Appellants.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the appellate decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dismissing the plaintiffs-appellants' suit for pre-emption in respect of plot No. 113/3 in village Nandapur.

The facts of this case, so far as it is necessary to state them for the purpose of disposing of this appeal, are as follows :—

Durga executed a sale-deed in favour of Khaderu, defendant No. 1 in respect of a plot which was described in the deed as No. 113/2 for Rs. 80 on the 18th July 1919. After Durga's death, his widow Musammat Dasi, defendant No. 2, executed a deed in respect of No. 113/3 for the purpose of correcting the number entered in the deed of the 18th July 1919. The plaintiffs brought the present suit alleging that Durga had no title to plot No. 113/2 and consequently nothing was transferred by that deed and so the present suit for pre-emption does not relate to that deed, that Musammat Dasi had executed the sale-deed in respect of Nos. 113/3 and it was by this deed that Plot No. 113/3 was transferred to the vendee Khaderu, that the vendee came into possession of the said plot (i.e, 113/3) after this sale deed was executed in his favour by Musammat Dasi and that it is the sale-deed dated the 31st May 1923 which gives rise to a right of pre-emption.

The claim was resisted by Khaderu vendee, defendant No. 1. He denied the plaintiffs' right of pre-emption and alleged that No. 113/3 was actually transferred by Durga by the deed dated the 18th July 1919, but by a mistake No. 113/2 was entered in the deed, that it was to correct this mistake that the deed of 31st May 1923 was executed in his favour by Musammat Dasi, widow of Durga, that the deed of 31st May 1923 cannot give rise to any right of pre-emption as it was not a sale-deed at all and that any suit in respect of the earlier deed of 18th July 1919 is now barred by time. Musammat Dasi, defendant No. 2, also supported the defendant No. 1 in his defence.

The learned Munsif found that the plaintiffs have got a preferential right of pre-emption but the deed dated the 31st May 1923 is not a sale-deed at all and does not give rise to any right of pre-emption, that it was executed simply to correct a clerical mistake in the sale-deed dated the 18th July 1919, by which the real plot transferred was No. 113/3, but by mistake it was written as No. 113/2 in the deed and that the vendee came into possession of No. 113/3 on the 18th July 1919 and consequently the suit was barred by time. The plaintiffs' claim was, therefore, rejected. The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the findings of the learned Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal on the 24th March 1925. The plaintiffs have now come to this Court in second appeal.

The only point for determination in this appeal is:—

Whether or not the deed dated the 31st May 1923 executed by Musammat Dasi in favour of Khaderu gives rise to a right of pre-emption?

It has been found that No. 113/3 was really transferred to the defendant No. 1 by the deed dated the 18th July 1919, that plot No. 113/2 was entered in the deed by mistake, that that mistake was corrected by the deed dated the 31st May 1923 and that the deed dated the 31st May 1923 is not really a sale-deed as alleged by the plaintiffs. These are the concurrent findings of both the lower Courts in this case. In my opinion the appeal must fail on these findings. In the case of Harpal Singh v. Bajrang Bahadur (1), the vendor executed a deed of sale of certain plots of land in favour of the vendee on the 5th June 1895. Certain numbers with areas were given as those of the plots sold. Subsequently on the 18th July 1902, the vendor executed another document, in which it was stated that a mistake had been made in the deed of the 5th June 1895, which did not contain the exact area and particulars of the land which had been actually sold and purported to give the actual numbers and areas. The plaintiff claimed the right of pre-emption in respect of the plots which were entered in the latter document, but not referred to in the former. It was not stated that there was any consideration for the execution of the second document. It was held that the deed of 18th July 1902 was not a sale deed, as it did not purport to transfer anything to the vendee for a price, and that the suit was barred by time. The ruling in fact supports the respondents. It is on all fours with the present case. The appellants' learned Counsel has argued that this ruling is not good law. I am not prepared to agree with him on that point. Following that ruling I hold that the plaintiffs' claim must be rejected. The suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Courts.

I should like to note that the appellants' learned Counsel has referred to a statement made by the Pleaders of the parties in the Court of first appeal. I do not think that that statement really means that Khaderu had not really got possession of No. 113/3 by virtue of the sale-deed dated the 18th July 1919. The statement was made with reference to the said deed. No. 113/3 was not of course entered in that deed.

The result is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is confirmed in all respects.

G. H. Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10—Company going into liquidation—Devolution of interest—Legal representative, necessity of bringing on record.

When a plaintiff Company registered under the Companies Act goes into liquidation, there is no assignment, creation or devolution of an interest within the meaning of O. XXII, r. 10, C. P. C., the Company continues to be the plaintiff and there is no need of bringing any legal representatives on the record.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.
Mr. V. N. Herleker, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There has been a waste of some years of time and hundreds if not thousands of rupees in this case. That must always result from not getting down to the bottom of question that arises, or rather that is raised in a suit; a question that is raised will often be found as here not to rise. The suit was properly instituted by the Company duly incorporated as limited under Act VII of 1913. One of the specified powers of the Board of Directors is to institute, conduct, defend, or compound or abandon any legal proceedings by and against the Company, and the plaintiff as well as the vakaltnama of the Pleader who presented it, are duly signed by the Chairman of the Board, as is provided by the r. 1 of O. XXIX, of the C. P. C.

About five months after the suit had been instituted the Company went into voluntary liquidation and the application was made to the Court that name of one T. N. Deshpande should be "brought on the record" as he had been appointed Liquidator. The defendant opposed this on the ground that the appointment of Deshpande was illegal and void because one V. Kshirsagar, had been previously appointed Liquidator and his appointment had never been cancelled by the competent Court.

For two years the parties have been disputing about whether the second appointment could be valid after the first had been made. On the assumption that the validity of the first was unquestionable, grounds were stated for the contentions that it was invalid and, therefore, not an appointment at all that could stand in the way of the making of another without cancellation by a Court, but they have never been examined. It seems clear that if the validity or the legality of the second appointment can be attacked, that of the first can be also.

But there was never a question of bringing any name on the record at all and, therefore, no question of the validity of either appointments of the Liquidator. Under s. 205 of the Companies Act the "corpotestate and corporate power of the Company contained till it is dissolved" and there has been no "assignment, creation or devolution of an interest" by the Company's going into liquidation so as to bring r. 10 of O. XXII of the C. P. C. into operation. All that has happened is a certain internal change in the Company of which the result under cls. 3 and 4 of s. 207 and cl. (a) of s. 179 of the Companies Act is that the powers of the Directors in respect of this suit are transferred to the Liquidator, whoever he may be.

But the plaintiff is still the Company, and there is no necessity to bring the name of person entitled to act on its behalf on the record. If there were then the name of the Chairman should have been brought on the record in the first place or perhaps the name of the Pleader appointed by him. As a matter of fact there is no body to conduct the suit at present but that Pleader and we are not concerned with any Liquidator unless a person claiming to be Liquidator appears and says he wishes to take the conduct of the suit out of that Pleader's hands or to compound or abandon it. The position of the Company is exactly similar to that of Municipality which instituted a suit through one of its officer generally authorised by it to institute and conduct suits and while it was pending transferred that general authority to another of its officers.

The orders of the Courts below are set aside. It is difficult and unnecessary to specify them all. All that need be said is that all the proceedings subsequent to the application for bringing the name of Deshpande on the record are to be considered void and ineffective and the trial of these are to be carried on from the beginning. Any decree against the Company will be equally binding on it and any payment to it by the defendant will give him an equally clear quittance, whoever the person may be from whom the Pleader in charge of it takes his instructions.

The defendant-respondent is responsible for the whole of this waste of time and money. He will accordingly pay all the costs incurred by the plaintiff Company in both Appellate Courts with the exception of the Court-fees paid on the two petitions of appeal of which the appellant can obtain a refund by applying for it under s. 13 of the Court Fees Act. He will also pay all costs the Company has incurred up to the present in the first Court with the exception of the Court fees on the plaint and the Pleader's fee. In respect of the Pleader's fee the first Court will consider, in case the defendant eventually succeeds whether he ought not be ordered to pay so much of that as can fairly be assigned to the proceedings that have now terminated in nothing.

Messrs. Pugh, Langford James and Westmacott, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. C. Mitter, A. N. Chaudhdri, B. K. Ghose, T. A. Bradley and J. C. Hazra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Mr. Gus Alexander Mackenzie against the decision of my learned brother Mr. Justice Pearson which was delivered on the 17th of April 1924.

The plaintiff sued to recover a large sum of money as damages from the Himalaya Assurance Co., Ltd., for the alleged breach of an agreement by which the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant, Rajabally, were appointed Managing Agents of the Company.

The 2nd defendant was joined as a party to the suit, because it was alleged that the plaintiff had requested Rajabally to join as a plaintiff in the suit but Rajabally had declined so to do. Therefore, the plaintiff had joined him as a defendant.

The plaintiff and Rajabally were in partnership. There were two agreements which dealt with the matter of partnership. The first was dated the 24th of September 1919 and the second one was dated the 29th of May 1920. In the interval, the Company had been registered on the 27th of October 1919 and the agreement, dated the 30th December 1919, between the defendant Company and the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally, had been entered into. By the agreement the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally were appointed Managing Agents of the Company for a period of at least 35 years. The agreement contains provisions about remuneration which are not material for the purpose of this appeal: Clause 5 provides that "the Managing Agents shall, subject to the supervision and control of the Directors, manage, conduct and carry on the business of the Company both at the head office and at all branches and agencies wheresoever situated" and then it provides that they "shall have and possess all powers, authorities and discretions necessary for or incidental thereto, and, without in any way limiting or restricting the general powers hereby conferred upon them, the Managing Agents shall in particular possess and enjoy the following powers."

Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Rajabally were also appointed Directors of the Company.

The suit, as I have already said, was brought on the ground of an alleged wrongful breach of the managing agency agreement.

In the plaint there was an allegation in para. 7 that "at sometime during the first half of the year 1922 the Directors (other than the plaintiff) decided to oust the plaintiff from the said managing agency and to appoint the defendant Rajabally sole managing agent and also decided to dismiss all the European staff from the service of the Company and in furtherance of such designs in concert and collusion with each other they carried out the following plan of action: On the 12th of August 1922 the defendant Rajaballv wrote and addressed a letter to the plaintiff suggesting that the latter should retire from the said partnership but the plaintiff declined to do so."

It is material to notice that in the letter of the 12th of August, amongst other things, Rajabally cancelled the power-of-attorney which he had given to the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff was conducting the affairs of the Assurance Company and those of the firm of Mackenzie and Rajabally.

The plaint further alleged that "on the 14th August 1922 the defendant Rajabally caused his attorney K. B. Ghose to address a letter to the plaintiff purporting to give the latter notice that the partnership would be dissolved as from that date and informing the plaintiff that in default of his consenting to that course within 24 hours the said Rajabally would file a suit for dissolution of the firm." It then alleged that the Directors had passed a resolution on the same day whereby Rajabally was appointed the Managing Agent of the Company.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not proved that Rajabally was acting in concert and collusion with the Directors as alleged in the plaint: and, he also came to the conclusion, shortly stated, that such a situation had arisen on the morning of the 14th of August 1922 between Rajabally on the one hand and Mackenzie on the other that the Directors were justified in putting an end to the agency agreement.

The position seems to me to be as follows: The agreement between the Company on the one hand and the plaintiff and Rajabally on the other was admitted. There was no doubt that that agreement was put an end to by the Directors of the Company.

The onus, therefore, was on the Company to justify the action which the Directors took in terminating the agreement. The agreement was alleged to have been terminated because of the deadlock which had been created by the action of the members of the partnership. It would then be for the plaintiff to prove, if he could, that the situation which undoubtedly existed on the morning of the 14th of August 1922 had been brought about or engineered by the Directors or that they had been parties to the scheme which it is alleged Rajabally had conceived, and which, in fact, he carried out.

I am of opinion that the learned Judge's decision, that the plaintiff had not proved that Rajabally was acting in concert with the Directors of the Company in bringing about the situation which existed on the 14th of August 1922, was correct.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant in his argument (which, if I may say so, was a very able argument) placed great reliance on the letter of the 12th of August 1922 which was written by Rajabally to the plaintiff. He urged that only one inference could be drawn from the terms of that letter, and that was that Mr. Rajabally had made up his mind to bring the partnership to an end in one way or an other, and that for the purpose of doing so he had before-hand consulted the Directors and had obtained their consent to that course.

The learned Counsel made some severe criticisms upon the evidence of Rajabally; and, argued with much insistence that the explanation which Mr. Rajabally had given for the writing of that letter was one which should not be accepted.

It is not necessary for me to give any decision upon that point, because, even if we reject the reason which Rajabally gave for the writing of the letter of the 12th of August 1922, and even if it be assumed that Mr. Langford James' argument was correct that Rajabally's evidence ought not to be relied upon, that is not sufficient for the plaintiff. The plaintiff had to go much further than that: it was necessary to show that the only inference that could be drawn from the facts of this case was that the Directors were a party to the course which Rajabally took on the 12th and the 14th of August.

I agree with the learned Judge that that has not been proved.

Even if Mr. Daud's evidence be accepted to its full extent it merely amounts to this, that in July 1922 Rajabally in Mr. Daud's presence told Mackenzie that some of the Directors were very antagonistic towards Mackenzie and that he had been asked by one or two of the Directors (without naming them) if it was possible for Rajabally to lay charge against Mackenzie whereby the Directors might be in a position to get rid of him, and that (then turning towards Macknzie) Rajabally said;

"If at any time I appear to side with the Directors, that is not so : it was only to find out what their plans may be towards you."

As I understand, it was common ground that at that time Rajabally was on good terms with Mackenzie.

It is not possible for the Court to hold, by reason of the above-mentioned conversation between Rajabally and the plaintiff in July 1922, that the Board of Directors were acting in concert with Rajabally in the action which he took on the 12th and the 14th of August.

Therefore, as I have said already, I agree with the learned Judge's finding that the plaintiff had not proved that the Company was responsible for the action which was taken by Rajabally on the 12th and the 14th of August.

There remains the question whether the Company was justified in putting an end to the agency agreement.

Having read the evidence I have come to the conclusion that the learned Judge summed up the situation accurately in his judgment. He said as follows: "There had been Rajabally's letter of the 12th August, the cancellation of the power-of-attorney, notice of dissolution of partnership, the plaintiff's action in consequence, the visit to the office on the 13th, tearing off the 2nd defendant's padlock to obtain admission, and removal of certain things to protect his own interest; another visit on the 14th with Mr. Warden, the cancellation by the plaintiff of his power-of-attorney to the second defendant. I think there can be no doubt that conflicting and contradictory orders were given to the office staff by the plaintiff and 2nd defendant. As one of the witnesses said. 'There was more than an earthquake' Mr. Gregory's account gives some indication of how they felt to each other on the 14th. Both said the position was such that they could not work with each other, because neither could trust the other and Mackenzie had ordered the clerks not to obey the orders of Rajabally, and Rajabally had dissolved the firm and would not work with him any more. Plaintiff's conduct in cancelling the power-of-attorney and breaking the padlock shows his attitude."

In discussing this part of the case, I desire to make it clear that I am not deciding which of the two parties was responsible for bringing about the deadlock. It may be that everything which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff urged as regards Mr. Rajabally was correct: on the other hand, we have not heard what the learned Counsel for the Company, Mr. Chaudhuri, had to say on that point. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument that Rajabally was in the first instance in the wrong, it seems to me that the plaintiff by the action which he took, played into the hands of Mr. Rajabally ; and, the result was that such a situation was created that it was necessary for the Directors of the Company to take action immediately. It is clear to my mind that the business of the Company could not be carried on, having regard to the action which had been taken by Mr. Rajabally and by Mr. Mackenzie. The office had been closed on the 14th August and the Company had to take steps at once with a view to carrying on the business. In my judgment, they were justified in putting an end to the partnership business: and, they carried that out by the resolution which they passed. That resolution was as follows:—

"Resolved that having regard to the position now and in the face of the dissolution of the Firm of Messrs. Mackenzie and Rajabally and the difference existing between them, Mr. N. Rajabally be asked to carry on the business as the Managing Agent. . . . . ."

It is true that Mr. Mackenzie had stated that the firm was not dissolved. On the other hand, Mr. Rajabally had given notice of the dissolution and he was asserting that it was dissolved although he declared that the Solicitors had advised him that it would be necessary to take legal proceedings to make it effective. There is no doubt about the position which existed in the office on that day and there is no doubt about the difference which was existing between these two parties: each of them declared that it was impossible for him to work with the other. It seems to me that it became absolutely necessary for the Directors to appoint somebody to carry on the business of the Company. The facts that they appointed Mr. Rajabally to carry on as Managing Agent until the share-holders could be communicated with and a meeting held either to confirm him or to appoint another Managing Agent cannot be said to be unreasonable. This was a Company which had been promoted to a large extent by the efforts of

Mr. Rajabally, and having regard to the state of affairs which had arisen it was necessary to appoint somebody as Managing Agent and I cannot say that it was unreasonable for them to appoint Mr. Rajabally.

For these reasons, I agree with the decision at which the learned Judge arrived that the defendant Company were justified in putting an end to the managing agency agreement, and, consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages from the Company.

In the pleadings specific charges of misconduct and insubordination were made by the defendant Company against the plaintiff and the defendants added allegations of misconduct and dishonesty, by a letter which was dated the 10th of January 1924, from the defendant's attorney to the plaintiff's attorneys.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant Company's case as regards the allegations of insubordination, misconduct and dishonesty failed and that none of the allegations which the defendant Company put forward was sufficient to justify the action which the Company took on the 14th of August.

It is not necessary for me to deal with any of these points except as regards the costs. It seems to me that the learned Judge with great respect to him ought to have made some provision in the decree with regard to the costs of the issues relating to the particular charges levelled against the plaintiff which had failed. It must be obvious that the length of the trial was considerably increased by those charges being made and by the investigation which was necessary in respect of them.

In fairness to the plaintiff it seems to me that it should be made clear that he was absolved with regard to the charges of misconduct, insubordination and dishonesty, except that it may be said that he may have been indiscreet in assuming in some respects more authority than he was justified without consulting the Directors and in respect of those charges he should get costs from the defendant Company.

As regards the costs of the issue on which the plaintiff succeeded, it has been left to this Court by the learned Counsel appearing for both parties to decide the amount.

We have already expressed our opinion that the plaintiff ought to have some costs in respect of those issues. That would mean the reduction to some extent of the defendants' bill of costs and the awarding of some costs to the plaintiff. After taking all matters into consideration and what the learned Counsel have said, we have arrived at the conclusion that the defendants' taxed bill of costs in the trial Court shall be reduced to five thousand rupees.

The appeal in all other respects is dismissed and the plaintiff-appellant must pay the costs of the defendant Company in the Appeal Court.

Rankin, J.—I agree.

A debtor who has more than one debt to pay to the same creditor and makes a payment, is not bound to intimate to the creditor the appropriation he desires along with the payment itself or so soon afterwards as to form part of the same transaction, but may do so after a reasonable interval. [p. 387, col. 2.]

The essence of an appropriation under s. 59, Contract Act, is that it should be known to both parties. [ibid.]

An uncommunicated entry in an account-book of the creditor is not effective as between the parties. [p. 388, col. 1.]

If more than one place is mentioned in a negotiable instrument as the place of presentment, there must be presentment at one or other of these places. [p. 389, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover money due on two promissory notes. The plaintiff is the appellant before us, the learned Trial Judge having dismissed the suit except as to Rs. 800 admitted to be due by the defendant and deposited by him in Court. The suit was filed on the 24th of January 1923 under the summary procedure. The defendant applied for leave to defend in February. Leave was granted on the 5th of March and the written statement of defendant was filed on 15th of March. The two suit promissory notes are dated 17th December 1921 (Ex. B) and 22nd December 1921 (Ex. A) and carry interest at the rate of Rs. 2-13-0 per cent. per mensem. The plaintiff and defendant ordinarily reside at Tindivanam in the South Arcot District. On the 22nd of April 1922 the plaintiff through his Madras Vakil Mr. Mahadeva Iyer sent a notice demanding the balance due on Ex. B (Ex. V). Two days after, the same Vakil issued another notice, Ex. D, in which he mentions that he was really instructed by his client to demand the amount due on both the pro-notes but that one of them was omitted from the first demand by mistake and the mistake having been detected, the second notice was sent. In the second notice he mentions that two amounts of Rs. 100 each were paid on 3rd February and 16th April. The defendant in his reply notice Ex. VI dated 1st May 1922 and in his written statement pleaded that besides the payments admitted by the plaintiff he made two other payments, viz., a sum of Rs. 1,000 on 5th January 1922 and another sum of Rs. 700 on 22nd April 1924. I shall first deal with the payment of Rs. 700. [On examining the evidence relating thereto, the learned Judge concluded:—] The result is, we must believe the evidence adduced by the defendant and find that this payment of Rs. 700 has been proved. It follows that the plaintiff is not an honest man.

The other payment of Rs. 1,000 is admitted by the plaintiff before us and also in the Court below at the time of trial. But his contention with respect to it is, that it was credited by him towards a third pro-note executed by the defendant to the plaintiff on 5th November 1921 for Rs. 1,000 carrying interest at 2 per cent. The defendant in his affidavit (dated 23rd February 1923) which he filed for obtaining leave to defend mentioned in para. 5: "The account book of the plaintiff himself may, if produced, substantiate the payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,700". In the counter-affidavit of the plaintiff, para. 2, the plaintiff said, "I deny that the defendant paid the sums of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 700 referred to in paras. 4 and 5 of the affidavit and say that the said payments are absolutely false". This statement of the plaintiff is now sought to be explained by his Advocate as meaning that the payments towards the suit pro-notes were meant to be denied and not the fact of payment itself so far as the payment of Rs. 1,000 is concerned. Even with this explanation, as far as the payment of Rs. 700 is concerned, I have already found that the statement must be false. As to the other payment, seeing that the defendant who sent the amount through his son, who signed in the plaintiff's account book and who must have informed his father of the entry, refers to the fact of entry in the account book in para. 5 of his affidavit and that the plaintiff himself relied on such account-books at the trial to prove the credit towards another pro-note—I find it difficult to believe that the plaintiff, assuming that he is dishonest, meant to deny the payment of Rs. 1,000 of 5th March 1923. It seems to be unlikely that he meant to deny both payments on 5th March and afterwards in August during the time of trial meant to admit one of them. It seems to me that the affidavit of the plaintiff who is a Marwari was drafted for him by a careless Pleader or Pleader's clerk and signed by him without realising its full import. I make these remarks not for the purpose of establishing that the plaintiff is an honest man—and with the other finding he cannot be made honest—but merely to know what the probability is. Whatever it may be, we have got the fact that he admits payment of Rs. 1,000 and the only question is, whether there is a legally binding appropriation of the payment towards another pro-note. This other pro-note was mentioned to the defendant in his cross-examination and he was asked to produce his day book of that date. But he said he has not got it. The day book produced by him begins from 21st November but its non-production is immaterial. He admitted the pro-note after he was shown the entry in the plaintiff's book signed by the defendant's son. He said: "This pro-note amount was not borrowed for my business. You may look into my account. The entry is signed by my son Ramalingam. I might have borrowed another amount from the plaintiff on 5th November 1921. (By Court). I did borrow it. I have been keeping separate ledgers. There is a ledger prior to the one I have filed in Court but it belongs to my own business while the one I have filed belongs to the joint business. Prior to November 1921, I have got a day book for my own business. There is also a ledger page maintained for my dealings with the plaintiff for that period. The balance due on that ledger has been brought over to this ledger. It would have been entered in all other ledgers like that. That is paddy business, joint business and this is ground-nut business. In regard to my own business there would have been nothing there prior to November 1921 and so it would not have been brought forward." This deposition shows that the defendant admitted the pro-note of 5th November 1921 after some hesitation but suggests that it is connected with some joint business which is a paddy business. He does not say who the other partner is, nor does he say that the pro-note was signed by himself and the other partner. Nor does he say that the plaintiff knew it was a business joint between defendant and another. I do not suggest by referring to his hesitation that the defendant is dishonest. I am satisfied that he has been honest throughout this case. But he hesitated at first probably because he was afraid that the entry signed by his son may bind him as an appropriation towards the other note. The defendant's son was examined as D. W. No. 5. He was in school in the year 1921. He says his father gave him Rs. 1,000 and he paid it to the plaintiff but did not get any document or pro-note. In cross-examination, he admits his signature under the entry in plaintiff's day-book, Ex. C, which shows that the amount of Rs. 1,000 was credited towards the pro-note of 5th November 1.21. He was then asked: "Q. You told your father what you wrote here? A. No." This question suggests that he wrote the whole entry. It is true that the question is a double question and that double questions are not generally fair to witnesses. But seeing that the question was not objected to either by the witness or by his Vakil Mr. Govindachari and seeing it is a very simple question which is not apt to confuse a witness, I think it is clear to me that neither the witness nor the defendant's Vakil meant to suggest that the entry was not written by the witness. The only other alternatives are that the entry was written by some other person but signed by the defendant's son or there was no entry then but the bare signature of the witness taken then and there was an interpolation afterwards. There is no re-examination of the witness suggesting such interpolation. Nor did Mr. Govindachari seriously suggest before us, though I put the suggestion to him, that the entry was interpolated afterwards. I cannot imagine that the Judge and the practitioners on either side were thinking that they were exhibiting the signature of the witness only as an exhibit, for, such exhibit is of no use in the case. I think all understood in the Court below that the whole entry with the signature was meant to be exhibited and that all were content to take it that it was written by the defendant's son. But this does not advance the case of the plaintiff very much. His clerk who produces the account-books does not prove that the account-books were kept in the course of business, though I think this is immaterial. If the entry is made in a regular account-book or in a mere note-book or in a slip of paper and afterwards communicated to the defendant, it will be equally good as an appropriation. The real difficulty in the way of the plaintiff is that this entry has not been communicated to the defendant. The defendant's son D. W. No. 5 was a young man who had just left school. He was not charged by his father to see the payment entered towards any particular pro-note. Neither the father

D. W. No. 11 nor the son D. W. No. 5 say this. Nor was he charged by the plaintiff to carry back the fact or entry towards a particular pro-note to the defendant. It does not appear that he knew that the defendant executed three pro-notes to the plaintiff. In the absence of clear knowledge on his part it cannot be assumed that the mere entry signed by him, assuming that he wrote the entry or at least that he heard it read or saw it written carried any significance to him and unless the entry was significant to his mind as something done in opposition to his father's wishes it is not likely that he would have reported the entry to the defendant. All that we can infer from the evidence in the case is that he reported the payment and its entry in an account-book to his father (see para. 5 of the defendant's affidavit) but no more. And for aught we know, the defendant might have been still under the impression that the payment was credited towards one of the suit pro-notes. It is clear that was his desire but it was not carried out, but there is nothing to show that he knew it was not carried out. On the other hand, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff knew the defendant's desire.

On these facts the question of law arises, what is the effect of the entry made by the plaintiff but not communicated to the defendant. Mr. Thirunarayanachari, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff, contended that the notice, Ex. D, may be taken to be a notice of appropriation towards the note of 5th November. But this contention cannot be accepted. Exhibit D makes no reference to the pro-note of 5th November. It is true that, in that notice the payment of Rs. 1,000 on 5th January was not mentioned as a payment towards the suit notes. But it cannot be necessarily inferred from this that the amount must have been credited towards the third note. There are other alternatives. The amount might have been kept in suspense or one might imagine that it was a mere piece of omission as Ex. D already shows that the Vakil committed other mistakes. In Ex. VI the defendant mentions to plaintiff that that amount was sent towards the suit pro-notes. This is the first occasion on which an appropriation known to both parties is stated. Mr. Thirunarayanachari contends that a debtor can intimate the appropriation he desires only along with the payment or so immediately after it as to form part of the same transaction and cannot make his appropriation long after the payment. It is true that if the defendant does not intimate his wishes along with the payment, there is a chance of the creditor making an appropriation and intimating to the debtor and thus shutting the mouth of the debtor for ever. But supposing the creditor has not made any appropriation can it be said that the debtor cannot make the appropriation which he wishes, some reasonable time after, say, a week or a month or three months. It may be said that whenever he intimates such a wish after a reasonable interval, it formed part of the same transaction as the payment. But should it be immediately after the payment? I do not see why it should be immediately after the payment. The words "with an intimation" in s. 59, Indian Contract Act, are not inconsistent with an intimation after a reasonable interval. So long as both have not made an appropriation, I do not see why the debtor cannot intimate the appropriation he wishes, to the creditor later on. Mr. Thirunarayanachari, though he had first denied that a debtor cannot do this, practically conceded this in his argument. In such a case he said the creditor leaves it open. If once so much is conceded, it follows that the essence of an appropriation is that it should be known to both parties and if not communicated by the creditor that it is left open, for, if we hold an uncommunicated entry in an account-book effective, an entry in an informal note book or a loose piece of paper or even a piece of paper put in an envelope and secreted or even a bare mental resolution to appropriate in a particular way (sworn to by the creditor) would bind the debtor. In the case of regular account-books generally an extract of the account-book is sent to the opposite party according to the custom in commercial circles. In "The Mecca" (1) cited by the appellant Lord Herschell said at page 292* :

"It is clear that if the appellants had merely entered in their own books an account such as was transmitted, it would not have amounted to any appropriation by them, and they would still have been at liberty to appropriate the payment as they pleased. It is equally clear, however, that when once they had made an appropriation and communicated it to their debtors, they would have no right to appropriate it otherwise. What, then, was the effect of bringing the items of debt into a single account, and transmitting it to their debtors in the manner they did."

This quotation shows that so long as the appropriation was not communicated to the debtor, the creditor can alter it afterwards, thereby showing that an uncommunicated appropriation is not complete as between both parties. If it is so complete, one cannot alter it. There seems to be an analogy between this and the communication of an acceptance of an offer of a contract or a revocation. The principle seems to be that unless both parties have known the entry it is not complete as between both the parties. It is difficult to see why an uncommunicated appropriation in an account-book should be binding on the debtor but the creditor may be at liberty to alter it. At page 294* Lord Macnaghten says:

"But it has long been held and it is now quite settled that the creditor has the right of election 'up to the very last moment,' and he is not bound to declare his election in express terms. He may declare it by bringing an action or in any other way that makes his meaning and intention plain. Where the election is with the creditor, it is always his intention expressed or implied or presumed, and not any rigid rule of law that governs the application of the money. The presumed intention of the creditor may no doubt be gathered from a statement of account, or anything else which indicates an intention one way or the other and is communicated to the debtor, provided there are no circumstances pointing in an opposite direction." The use of the words "expressed, implied or presumed", "communicated" indicates an intention shows that a concealed or secreted entry cannot satisfy the requirements laid down by Lord Macnaghten. In Simson v. Ingham (2) Bayley, J. observed "If, indeed, a book had been kept for the common use of both parties as a pass-book, and that had been communicated to the opposite party, then the party making such entries would have been precluded from altering that account;" see also Friend v. Young (3) and Smith v. Betty (4) and Chitty on Contracts pages 851 and 852. In the present case up to 1st May 1922 neither party communicated his intention to the other. For the first time in Ex. VI the defendant mentioned that he paid the amount towards the suit notes. Within four months after the payment he repeated this in his affidavit of February 1923. The plaintiff does not contradict it up to the trial. I do not see that we must infer that he accepted the defendant's wishes, for he was pressing his suit, but it seems to be a piece of foolish and meaningless cleverness in not stating his own appropriation up to the trial. Though I am not able to infer that the payment must be taken to be appropriated by the creditor towards the suit notes under the circumstances existing on 5th January 1922 within the meaning of s. 59 of the Contract Act, see Rameswar Koer v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (5) all the later circumstances up to the trial I think justify me in rejecting the plaintiff's earlier concealed appropriation as ineffective and in holding that the defendant's intimation in Ex. VI was reasonable in the circumstance and binds both the parties. This conclusion is not inconsistent with the expressions of Lord Macnaghten in The Mecca (1) or of Vaughan Williams, Romer and Stirling, L. JJ., in Seymour v. Pickett (6) for the question whether the debtor may intimate if the creditor has left it open, did not arise and was not considered in these cases. At first I thought this conclusion is hard on the plaintiff for the suit on the other note would now be barred. On the other hand Mr. Govindachari pointed out that a suit for contribution by him against his partner will now be barred. The result is I excluded all questions of hardship from my mind in dealing with the case especially as I have no sympathy with the plaintiff. But I may now point out that a suit on the other note by him will not be barred as the defendant's deposition in August 23 is an acknowledgment of that note. Anyhow the plaintiff is not now entitled to recover Rs. 1,000. I have dealt with the case at great length just as the argument also took a little more than the usual time a case of this kind ought to have taken, because I was anxious to deal with the facts and the law only on the merits uninfluenced by the opinion which we have formed about plaintiff's honesty with reference to the other payment. It is admitted that the interest due to the plaintiff is still due. The amount of intrest was admitted also in Ex. VI, in May 1922. No arrangements were made for paying it up to the date of suit and even after the suit defendant deposited only the principal amount of Rs. 800 and not the interest thus necessitating the appeal. But Mr. Govindachari contends for the defendant that the suit does not lie in Madras. He refers to ss. 68 and 69 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and the suit notes mentioned "In Madras or any place where you have your shop as the place of payment." The only specified place is Madras. But the other clause might cover a number of other places. Mr. Thirunarayanachari argued that ss. 68 and 69 do not apply as more than one place is mentioned. But the word 'place' must be construed as including 'places' as it would be anomalous to require presentment if one place is mentioned but none if two places are mentioned. If more than one place is mentioned there must be presentment at one or other of these places. The demand by Ex. D does not amount to a presentment. The result is strictly the plaintiff has no right of action to sue without presentment but the defendant did not take the point in this shape, namely, that the plaintiff has no right to sue but raised only the question of jurisdiction. I do not see how these sections can help the defendant on the particular plea he has taken. The object of presentment seems to be to give the defendant an opportunity to pay, and until presentment no right to sue arises. But the Negotiable Instruments Act does not provide that after presentation at one of several places that one place to the exclusion of others is the place which determines jurisdiction for a suit. Nor do I find any such provision in the corresponding English Law, s. 87 of the Bills of Exchange Act. The section of the C. P. C. which mentions the place of performance of the contract also as giving jurisdiction stands and is unaffected by ss. 68 and 69 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, an act which has nothing to do with the questions of jurisdiction. I must, therefore, disallow the plea of the defendant, a plea which is important only on the question of costs. If the defendant's plea had been upheld, we would disallow all costs to plaintiff while giving a decree for interest, but as it is by the defendant's waiver of plea of right of suit that the plaintiff is able to get a decree for the balance of principal and interest, I must disallow plaintiff's costs in the Court below. But the defendant's omission to admit interest or deposit has necessitated the appeal. I, therefore, award plaintiff proportionate costs on the amount of interest in appeal only. The result is, the plaintiff will have a decree for the amount of interest due upto the date of deposit of Rs. 800 in Court with further interest on it from the date of the lower Court's decree at 6 per cent. upto date of payment. Plaintiff will have proportionate costs in appeal only on such amount. He will pay defendant's costs on the rest of his claim throughout.

Prima facie when the collection of profits by a lambardar is grossly inadequate, there is a presumption of negligence on his part.

A patwari's register cannot be safely relied on as a conclusive piece of evidence with regard to amounts collected.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 4th May 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.
Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for profits brought against the lambardar. The case has not been fully appreciated by the Courts below. The plaintiff alleged that the lambardar was most negligent and was guilty of misconduct. In the written statement this assertion was denied, but in para. 6 it was expressly admitted that the defendant sent a notice to the plaintiff asking him to adjust the accounts, but the plaintiff failed to do so. Afterwards a money-order was sent which also was returned. The profits were sent to the plaintiff with reference to the amounts realised. The money-order receipt was actually filed by the defendant which shows that a sum of Rs. 73 was sent by money-order to the plaintiff. There can be no doubt that in the written statement it was clearly admitted by the plaintiff that on account of the amount realised by the defendant a sum of money was due to the plaintiff which was actually sent by money order and which was refused. Both the Courts below have held that inspite of the fact that out of Rs. 1,732-8-1, which was the annual rental, the defendant according to the patwari's register collected only Rs. 531-8-2 in the year 1325 Fasli, the plaintiff had not proved any negligence. The learned Judge has even gone so far as to remark that, the fact that the written statement does not claim that there was a loss, does not entitle the plaintiffs to a decree. Prima facie when the collection is grossly inadequate, there is a presumption of negligence. In this case, however, it does appear that in the year 1326 Fasli there was a famine which circumstance might have justified the Courts below in coming to the conclusion that negligence is not proved. After some hesitation, therefore, I feel that I must accept the finding that negligence has not been proved, but what the Courts below have done is to accept the entries in the patwari's register as to the total amount collected, although the defendant did not produce his accounts as he was bound to do. The liability of the defendant to maintain accounts has been pointed out by Tudball, J. in the case of Raghubar Charan v. Krishen Baldeo (1). A patwari's register very often does not show the amounts of decrees realised and also sometimes does not contain all the collections made, as entries are made on dictation by the zemindar or his agents. In the absence of any accounts filed by the defendant it was, therefore, unsatisfactory to accept the patwari's register as the conclusive evidence of the total collections. However, no useful purpose is likely to be served by remanding the case and I allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Courts below to this extent that I decree the plaintiff's claim for a sum of Rs. 73 which was admitted to have been offered to the plaintiff.

The Judge has wrongly stated the amount to be Rs. 72 which was the amount sent by the plaintiff. The parties should bear their own costs of this appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (2) —Withdrawal of appeal.

An appeal is withdrawn within the meaning of Art. 182 (2) of Sch. I to the Limitation Act on the date when the order permitting it to be withdrawn is made by the Court and not on the date when the application for permission to withdraw the appeal is filed.

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Mukerji, dated the 13th November 1924

Messrs. P. L. Banerjee and K. N. Laghate, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Having heard Counsel for the appellants in this case we are satisfied that the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court is correct.

The question raised is one of limitation. A decree was passed on the 23rd of April 1918 against a number of persons including the appellants here. That was a decree for costs. This decree was afterwards transferred by the decree-holder to one Saiyid Nazar Ali who figures as the respondent here.

An appeal was brought to this Court against the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 23rd of April 1918, and on the 10th of February 1920, the Counsel for the appellants filed an application in this Court, saying that he desired to withdraw the appeal. He asked the leave of the Court to withdraw it. Notice was ordered to issue and by reason of failure to secure service of notice the matter did not come up before this Court till the 8th November 1920. On that date an order was passed in the following terms:—

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 515.

"On the application of Mr. Muhammad Yusif, this appeal is withdrawn. The appellant is to pay the costs of the respondents, such costs to be calculated up to the date upon which the respondents had notice of the proposed withdrawal of the appeal.

After this an application was made on the 24th September 1923 to execute the decree for costs up to the amount mentioned in the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 23rd of April 1918. The plea was taken that the application for execution was time-barred having been made more than three years after the date of the decree sought to be executed.

On the other side the contention was that limitation was saved by the proceedings which had taken place in appeal in this Court and it was argued that the true date from which limitation ran was the 8th November 1920 the date on which this Court allowed the appeal to be withdrawn.

The question is to be determined with reference to the language of Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, and the particular clause to which attention has to be directed is cl. 2 in col. 3 of the Schedule corresponding to this Article. It is there laid down that where there has been an appeal, time for execution of decree begins to run from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal.

The learned Judge of this Court held that the appeal was withdrawn on the 8th of November 1920 when this Court passed an order permitting it to be withdrawn. In our opinion the law has been correctly interpreted and we hold with the Judge that in this case limitation did not begin to run till the 8th of November 1920.

We dismiss the appeal accordingly with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 10—Forma pauperis—Suit for maintenance decreed —Government's costs, charge for—Sale of property liable for maintenance for costs—Effect.

Where a plaintiff's suit for maintenance in forma pauperis is decreed and maintenance is made a charge on certain properties of the defendant, the first charge of the Government for costs must be on the subject-matter of the suit so far as the plaintiff succeeds under O. XXXIII, r. 10, C. P. C. But where, however, the Government proceed to sell the properties the effect would be as that of a sale of equity of redemption subject to the charge of maintenance decreed in plaintiff's favour.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, 24-Pergannas, dated the 14th of June 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Alipur, dated the 17th of December 1921.

Mr. Narendra Chandra Bose and Babu Satyendra Nath Mitra, for the Appellants.

Babus Baranashibasi Mukherjee, Pyari Mohan Chatterjee and Krishna Lal Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal by the defendant No. 3 is against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge of Alipur affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of that place. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the properties described in the plaint were subject to the charge of her maintenance which was decreed in Suit No. 23 of 1911. The plaintiff brought that suit in forma pauperis for recovery of certain properties and in the alternative for a charge for her maintenance on those properties. She failed in her claim for recovery of the properties, but her right of maintenance was declared as a charge on those properties and costs were decreed in favour of the Government to be recovered from the arrears of maintenance due from the defendant in that case who is the defendant No. 2 in the present suit. The Government, however, proceeded to sell the property in the hands of defendant No. 2 for the realization of the Court-fees and it was purchased by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 subsequently sold the property to defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 3 claims that he got the property by virtue of the sale in execution by the Government free from the charge for maintenance of the plaintiff. Both the Courts below have negatived that plea and declared the property to be subject to the charge claimed by the plaintiff.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that under O. XXXIII, r. 10, C. P. C., the Government was entitled to a first charge on the subject-matter of the suit and he has contended that the property in question was the subject-matter of the suit and as the Government sold the property in enforcement of the first charge the defendant No. 3 obtained it free from the subsequent incumbrance by way of the maintenance charge of the plaintiff. The short answer to this contention is that under that rule of the Code the first charge of the Government for the costs must be on the subject-matter of the suit, so far as the plaintiff succeeded in the suit, or in other words on the charge declared in favour of the plaintiff for maintenance on the property in question. As a matter of fact, however, the decree directed that the Government should recover the costs out of the arrears of maintenance in the hands of defendant No. 2. Instead of recovering the costs from the arrears of maintenance the Government proceeded to sell the properties in the hands of defendant No. 2. The result of this sale must be held to be the sale of what may be called the equity of redemption in the hands of defendant No. 2 that is the property subject to the charge of maintenance declared in favour of the plaintiff.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Muhammadan Law—Gift for services—Possession, delivery of.

A deed of gift unsupported by any money consideration but purporting to have been effected for services rendered which cannot be given any monetary valuation is a deed of simple gift and not of hiba-bil-ewaz and a delivery of possession is necessary to validate such a gift.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 10th May 1924, upholding the decision of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 9th October 1923.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for recovery of possession over a plot of land No. 98, situate in village Firozepur, District Gonda. The suit was brought on the allegation that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 sold the plot in suit to defendant No. 1 for Rs. 150. On the 2nd of December 1920 and that about a year later, that is on the 25th November 1921, defendant No. 2 executed a deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. The appellant based his title to recover possession of the plot on the said deed of gift, and stated in his plaint that he had been delivered possession after its execution in his favour, but had subsequently been wrongfully dispossessed in June 1922. The defendants denied the gift and alleged that no possession has been delivered to the plaintiff under it.

The learned Munsif of Gonda who tried the suit found the deed of gift to be genuine but held it inoperative on the ground that possession had not been delivered to the plaintiff under it, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff carried the matter further in appeal to the learned First Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda, who heard the appeal and came to the conclusion that possession had, after the execution of the sale-deed of the 2nd December 1920, remained with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and that defendant No. 1 had never been in possession of the land sold to him. In consequence he held that no possession could have been delivered by defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff of the property gifted to the latter. He found that neither actual possession nor constructive possession over the land in suit had been delivered to the appellant. On these findings the learned Judge of the Court below dismissed the appeal, and upheld the decree of the learned Munsif, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal. Two points have been argued before me. The first is to the effect that the deed of gift executed in favour of the plaintiff being a hiba-bil-ewaz deed was valid even without delivery of possession, as it partook of the nature of a transaction by way of sale. The second is to the effect that the donor had given such possession of the property as she was capable of and the gift made by her in favour of the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, valid.

Regarding the first contention it was argued that the transaction evidenced by the deed of the 25th November 1921 partook of the nature of a sale transaction. I am not prepared to accept that view. I am aware that there are cases where it has been held that where a gift is made by a Muhammadan in lieu of something which has a monetary value the transaction may be considered by way of sale. There are also certain cases which lay down the proposition that services of a professional character rendered by the donee to the donor may be considered as a consideration of monetary value. In the deed in suit, however, there is no money consideration nor can the services rendered by the plaintiff to defendant No. 1 be reckoned as having a monetary value. The deed in suit connot, therefore, be considered to bear the character of sale. The deed must be interpreted as a deed of gift and I am of opinion that delivery of possession was necessary to validate the said gift. The Courts below have found that possession did not pass to the appellant under the said gift and consequently the plaintiff-appellant did not derive any title under it.

Regarding the second contention I am of opinion that the matter is concluded by the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. That Court has come to a finding, after going through the evidence on the record, that neither actual nor constructive possession passed to the appellant.

Under the circumstances the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed by the Courts below. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 23, 27—Inherent power of Court, when to be exercised—Remand—Local inquiry—Order, how to be made.

It is not open to the Court to invoke the inherent powers overriding distinct provisions in the C. P. C.

Where a local enquiry is necessary for proper decision of a case the Appellate Court should either itself order a fresh local enquiry or remand the case to the Primary Court for the purpose to have the result reported to it.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Sylhet, dated the 29th of March 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Fourth Court, Habiganj, dated the 17th of April 1923.

Babu Sasadhar Roy (Sr.), for the Appellant.

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The appellant in this appeal brought a suit against the respondent to recover possession of a certain plot of land after establishment of his right to it. The suit was decreed in part. The defendant then appealed to the District Court. The District Court held that the report of the amin was unreliable and the learned Judge, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree of the first Court and remanded the case to the Primary Court for trial after making a fresh local investigation, against this order the plaintiff has appealed to this Court; and he contends that the learned Subordinate Judge's order is bad in law. He contends that the order does not come under O. XLI, r. 23 or r. 25 which are the only rules which provide for the remand of a case to the Primary Court.

The respondent contends that although the order does not come under r. 25 or r. 23 the order was made under the inherent powers of the Court.

It seems to me quite clear that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong. So long as there are distinct provisions in the Code it is not open to the Court to invoke the inherent powers of the Court. In this case the Court should obviously have proceeded under O. XLI, r. 27 and himself ordered a fresh local enquiry or to remand the case to the Primary Court to have a fresh enquiry made and the result reported to his Court.

The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, set aside and the appeal is sent back to him for hearing. It would be open to him to order a fresh local enquiry himself or to send the case to the first Court to have a fresh local enquiry made and decide the appeal after considering the result of this fresh local enquiry.

Costs of this appeal will abide the final result. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.
